SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 18, 1934

(Legislative day of Tuesday, Apr. 17, 1934)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On motion of Mr. HARRISON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of April 17 was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

EAST BAY MUNICIPAL UTILITY DISTRICT, CALIFORNIA

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2084) granting and confirming to the East Bay Municipal Utility District, a municipal utility district of the State of California and a body corporate and politic of said State, and a political subdivision thereof, certain lands, and for other purposes, which were to strike out all of section 2; on page 4, line 20, to strike out "3" and insert "2"; and on page 4, line 24, to strike out "4" and insert "3."

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

FEES IN NATURALIZATION PROCEEDINGS—REENROLLMENT OF BILL

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives (H.Con. Res. 36), which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the action of the Vice President and of the Speaker of the House of Representatives in signing the enrolled bill (H.R. 3521) entitled "An act to reduce certain fees in naturalization proceedings, and for other purposes", be rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of such bill section 2 be stricken out and the clerk shall insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. Subdivisions (b) and (c) of section 32 of the act of June 29, 1906, and subdivision (a) of section 33 of the act of June 29, 1906, which were added thereto by section 9 of the act of March 2, 1929 (45 Stat. 1512) and by section 4 of the act of May 25, 1932 (47 Stat. 165), as amended (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 8, sec. 399 b (b) and (c), and sec. 399 c (a)), are amended as follows: Wherever in said subdivisions the words 'a fee of $10' occur that shall be amended to read 'a fee of $5.'"

Mr. COOLIDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution and move its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to.

INCLUSION OF SUGAR BEETS AND CANE AS BASIC COMMODITIES

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside, and that the so-called "sugar bill" be taken up for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8861) to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to state the first amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before the Senate proceeds to consider the amendments to the bill, I am wondering if the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] or the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] intends to make a general statement respecting the measure.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator from Colorado intends to make a general statement, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is detained from the Senate by reason of a death in his family.

I desire further to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is absent on account of illness, and that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. HEBERT. I announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. COSTIGAN gained the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am astonished to find that before the roll was called and before the presence of a quorum was established, the so-called "sugar bill" was taken up and made the order for today. I intimated yesterday in what I stated that there were certain amendments I wished to prepare for presentation to the Senate. I will be ready, so far as I am concerned, to go on with this bill tomorrow, but I am not ready today. I do not think it was fair, Mr. President, that the measure was made the order for today, in the absence of the establishment of the presence of a quorum this morning.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. MCNARY. Yesterday I opposed the consideration and discussion of the bill because it collided with the rule requiring that a bill shall lie over for 1 day after having been reported. However, at that time I specifically stated I would have no objection to its consideration today. I do not know whether the Senator from New York was on the floor or not at that time.

I will add further, if I may, that the substitution of the so-called "sugar bill" for the pending unfinished business was made before I reached the Chamber this morning, and it was done before the roll was called; but, anyway, so far as I am concerned, I think those on this side are willing to proceed today in view of the statement made yesterday by me on the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. There is going to be considerable general discussion of the bill before we take up amendments. Could not that discussion proceed today?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. I cannot do other than yield to what has happened, but I am frank to say I think it was utterly unfair to present the matter in this way. I do not know how many Senators were on the floor; I suppose not more than half a dozen. A quorum had not yet been called. It was not a fair procedure at all. The bill ought to go over until tomorrow out of courtesy to those of us who have been working practically all night trying to perfect amendments which we desire to present to the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. If there is any blame to be attached for bringing the measure before the Senate the first thing this morning, I will assume the blame. The bill has been on the program of business for some time. When the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] left the city he understood the bill was to be brought before the Senate as soon as it was reported from the committee.

I have no interest in the world in the sugar bill. My State is not particularly interested in it. I have given some 2 or 3 months of very strenuous effort to adjusting differences with reference to the matter, and the result was not accomplished without some difficulty. We finally got together on a bill which, in my opinion, is an excellent measure. It has been known that the bill was to come before the Senate at the earliest possible moment. Yesterday there was an effort made to obtain unanimous consent to have it considered. The reasons advanced were that contracts are now being made in the sugar-beet region with the sugar planters and others interested, and unless the bill shall be passed and those contracts made at a very early date, the growers will lose whatever benefits might accrue to them by virtue of the enactment of the legislation. I thought everyone interested understood that we were going to take up the bill and have it considered today.

No one wants to do the Senator from New York any injustice. There is nothing unfair in what we are trying to do with reference to sugar legislation. If some reason is advanced for delay and it is agreeable to the Senate to postpone consideration of the measure until tomorrow, with the idea of then passing it, that would be perfectly agreeable to me; but it does seem to me that a bill of this importance ought to be considered by the Senate and disposed of in view of the circumstances. That is the reason for bringing up the matter this morning. I thought everyone had notice yesterday that the bill would be brought up this morning for consideration.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not want the Senator from Mississippi to rest under any charge of bad faith in connection with the matter. If there were any bad faith involved—and certainly there was none—it would be just as much my fault as his; but I cannot concede that any such thing exists. When the Vice President called the Senate to order this morning, the Senator from Mississippi and I discussed the sugar-bill status. In view of the announcement made last night just before adjournment, when the Senator from Mississippi directly stated to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] that it was his purpose to ask for this substitution the first thing this morning, it seemed to me the Senator from Mississippi was entirely within his rights and entirely within the notice that had been given the Senate to ask the substitution which he did in the order of business. So far as I am concerned, representing, perhaps, as hostile a feeling respecting the bill as there is in the Senate, I was very glad to agree. I think I owe that statement in fairness to the Senator from Mississippi. He has been so continuously fair to all of us throughout these long and perplexed considerations of the sugar problem that he deserves this testimony.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to say that while I was not here when the agreement was made temporarily to lay aside the unfinished business this morning, still it was understood yesterday afternoon between the Senator from Mississippi and myself that that was to be done. I felt that I should say this much to the Senate. The Senator from Mississippi has not been guilty of any bad faith, in my judgment.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I want to say to my friend the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] that last evening I had the floor intending to enter into a discussion of the air mail bill, when the Senator from Mississippi spoke to me about the plan that had been suggested. I stated at the time that I was somewhat embarrassed in that Senators with whom I usually consult were not at the moment present, but I was informed at once that the matter had been discussed with them, so it was understood that the sugar bill would be taken up this morning and, although I had the floor and intended to continue with the discussion of the air-mail measure today, I gave way with that understanding.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. There used to be in the Senate what we call "senatorial courtesy." I trust that state of mind still occupies the hearts and brains of Senators. I invite attention to the RECORD. Yesterday when the matter was brought up I interposed an objection and said:

> Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, my reason for interposing at all was because of my desire to have the measure go over for a day, at least, until material which has been sent to me shall have arrived. I think perhaps there is considerable interest in the bill in my State.
> Mr. COSTIGAN. Will 24 hours suffice?
> Mr. COPELAND. I cannot answer at the moment. I want first to see what the material is.

That is the RECORD. Now, I contend, Mr. President, that it is utterly unfair, in the presence of 8 or 10 or possibly a dozen Members of the Senate, contrary to the usual practice of the Senate and before the roll has been called to bring in a quorum, that the sugar bill should be made the order of the day in the absence of the establishment of a quorum. The Senate may do as it pleases, but I contend that it is unfair.

I offered no objection to the early consideration of the bill. I made clear why I wished the delay, in order that certain material might be had. It came to me. I have been working on it for hours. I am almost ready to present my amendments, but I come here today and find that in the absence of what I thought was an understanding yesterday, the bill has been made the order of business for the day. I repeat, Mr. President, that I do not think it is in accord with the courtesy which is usually extended to Senators and which has been the rule of courtesy in this body from time without end.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield further to me?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely wish to call attention to what occurred on the floor of the Senate yesterday afternoon, as follows:

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want to interfere with the Senator's speech.

He was speaking of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

I merely wish to state that it is desired, when we conclude our session this afternoon, to recess until 12 o'clock tomorrow, and at that time to have the pending bill temporarily laid aside and the sugar bill brought before the Senate. It is hoped that we can get through with the sugar bill very speedily. In view of that fact I thought, perhaps, the Senator might not want to have his speech interrupted by beginning this afternoon and then delaying its completion until we pass the sugar bill and get back to the air mail bill. Would the Senator prefer to wait until we dispose of the sugar bill or to proceed this afternoon?

Mr. FESS. It is understood that we are to recess quite early and to meet tomorrow at 12 o'clock. The Senator knows how anxious a Senator, who plans to speak, is to follow an argument that has just been made; but if it is understood that the sugar bill will be taken up tomorrow, I shall be very glad to accommodate the Senator and to defer my address until the Senate shall resume the consideration of the air mail bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I should not make even the suggestion to the Senator if it were not for the fact that Senators who represent sugar-beet regions are very anxious to secure action on this proposed legislation so that the farmers may make their contract with reference to this year's yield.

Those are the facts that came out on the floor of the Senate yesterday afternoon, and I feel that they ought to be recited here this morning.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. As one of the Senators particularly interested in the sugar bill and as one who understood yesterday, even at the time we were voting to displace the unfinished business, that if the air mail bill were taken up it would be laid aside today and the sugar bill taken up, I want to say that I supposed that understanding was universal and that everyone in the Senate understood it. I assumed that the Senator from Mississippi believed that to be the fact when he submitted his request this morning.

I was present when he submitted his request to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business and take up the sugar bill, and I assumed that the Senator from Mississippi was acting in good faith. I have no doubt that he was. With the understanding which I believe prevailed among Senators, I think he was justified in making the request. I realize, however, that probably the Senator from New York did not hear it. I realize, too, that when the Senator from Mississippi made the request he made it before a point of no quorum was made and before the roll was called, and undoubtedly at a time when there was not a quorum of the Senate present.

It seemed to me the step was a proper one for the Senator from Mississippi to take under all the circumstances and in view of the understanding, but we ought not to have a misunderstanding on the subject. I can see how the Senator from New York may not have been present when the various discussions took place, and even though I am particularly anxious that the bill be taken up and disposed of as soon as possible I do not want to do it with any cloud of misunderstanding or discourtesy existing.

While I think the Senator from Mississippi was justified in the position he took, I believe, as one who desires to see the bill acted on, that we will get action quicker if we concede that the Senator from New York had a different understanding from the other Senators, and that the Senator from Mississippi should make his request now. If it should not be agreed to, I believe he would be justified in making a motion to take up the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I was about to make a statement, in view of what the Senator from New York has just stated.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield for just a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do.

Mr. McNARY. I do not feel any responsibility in this situation, because of the statement I made yesterday; but let me remind the Senator from New York that he is not without a remedy. If he should ask for the regular order the unfinished business, which is the air mail bill, would come back before the Senate. If the Senator desires to exercise that right, it is fully within his power to do so.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to make a statement.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield first to the Senator from Mississippi. I will yield later to the Senator from New York.

Mr. HARRISON. There is no reason for anyone to think there is any misunderstanding about this matter. I think Senators generally agree, in view of what has happened upon the floor today, that everyone thought the sugar bill was coming up this morning.

I would not do the Senator from New York an injustice for anything in the world, and I would not be discourteous to him. In view of the fact that we did ask unanimous consent to take up the bill this morning, and it is here before us, if the Senator from New York thinks some injustice has been done to him and he would prefer to have the bill laid over for a while, I shall be very glad to ask unanimous consent to undo what we have done, and to take up the measure later. I do not want to proceed with the Senator thinking that any sharp practice has been indulged in in this connection, for the fact is that we were proceeding in a very orderly way this morning, in view of what happened yesterday.

So if the Senator from New York has not yet had an opportunity to prepare his amendments, and prefers to have us wait for a few hours before taking up the bill, we can do so. If he would rather have us take it up in the morning, I shall try to get unanimous consent to have that done. I cannot do any more than that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Would not the Senator from New York be able to protect his situation entirely if we should go ahead with the general discussion of the bill which is inevitably going to take place?

The Senator from New York understands that the situation in the West is such that a delay of 1 or 2 days may mean a vast amount of injury to those people. I should like to see some changes in this bill; but I recognize that some bill on the subject must be passed, if we are going to pass it at all; at once, if it is to have any beneficial effect whatever on the interests of the growers. Several speeches are to be made before we take up amendments. Would it not be possible to proceed in that way rather than to lay the bill aside for a day?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Before I yield to the Senator from New York, in view of the possibility that this discussion may suddenly terminate, I desire to say that the record before us is so clear, and the reputation, services, and attitude of the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] throughout the difficult days of discussion of this measure have been such that I have been intending to preface any remarks I might make today with a tribute to the exceptional ability, disinterestedness, and integrity shown by the Senator from Mississippi.

Of course, I join other Senators in every disposition to show proper courtesy, at this time or on any other occasion, to the Senator from New York and every other Member of this body.

I now yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have been in the Senate a long while, and on many occasions have been interfered with because I tried to be polite. Many times aggressive Senators have taken the floor from more modest ones, regardless of recognition from the Chair. I have always tried to conform to the rules. I have tried to observe the old-time courtesy of the Senate.

Mr. President, I was not in the Senate Chamber yesterday afternoon, but I was not at a ball game or engaged in some sort of personal activity. I was in my office in a conference over the War Department bill with officials of the Department. I was not here when the later conversation took place in the Senate. When I said in the afternoon that I was not yet ready to go forward, I had a right to think that that intimation would be sufficient.

The Senate may do as it please in this respect. I am not going to make any further suggestion or make any request. The Senator from Mississippi knows whether or not I have had a square deal in the matter. It is for him to decide whether or not he shall ask for unanimous consent. It is not for me to request it. The Senator from Mississippi must do as his sense of propriety dictates, now and always.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to say to the Senator from New York that I do not know anything else I can do. I have told the Senator from New York that if it would meet his convenience I would ask for unanimous consent to lay the bill aside for 2 or 3 hours and take it up later, or I would ask to have it taken up tomorrow morning if that would meet with the approval of the Senate. I am just waiting for a suggestion. Otherwise, of course, we should have to proceed with the consideration of the bill.

I desire to show every courtesy to the Senator. I want him to have an opportunity to offer his amendments and let the Senate vote on them. I do not know anything more that I can do.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to submit a proposal for the consideration of the Senator from New York.

First, as has already been stated by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], in this particular case time is the essence of the whole matter. Sugar beets are being planted right now. Many of them have been planted. Contracts have not been entered into. Thousands of people are dependent upon the action of Congress on this legislation; and unless Congress acts at once they are liable to have their entire year's efforts come to naught.

I desire to ask the Senator from New York whether it would not be satisfactory to him if we should go on with the debate, and let those who have speeches to make—and there are quite a number of them, I understand, on both sides of the subject—make their speeches, and get that much nearer to the goal, with the understanding that we shall not take up amendments until tomorrow, if the Senator wants to go that far, and that we shall not vote on the passage of the bill until tomorrow, and thus expedite the matter.

These speeches will have to be made anyway. They are going to take considerable time. I am not one among the Senators who are going to make speeches. I am not pleading for myself, but I am pleading that the consideration of the measure be hastened, and that if we finish with the speeches today and are ready to take up the bill for amendment we lay it aside until tomorrow, in order that the Senator from New York may have ample time to devote the day to the preparation of his amendments if he so desires.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I have previously sent to the desk a resolution, which I ask to have read at this time, if there be no objection. It covers only a couple of pages. It is lying on the desk, in my handwriting.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, let us dispose of this matter.

Mr. LONG. I thought perhaps a little levity might help us get together on it.

Mr. BORAH. There may be levity in the Chamber, but there is not levity out in the beet fields.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. I never have interfered with a Senator making a speech. If there are Senators here who are bubbling over with enthusiasm and desire to orate, I hope they will do it today.

I have no objection to the speeches. Indeed, I could do some work in committee while they are being made; but I do not want this bill read for amendment until I shall have had an opportunity to perfect the amendments which I wish to offer. I made that clear yesterday. I repeat it today.

Mr. President, far be it from me to interrupt the eloquence and the flow of oratory which may break forth when this bill becomes established as the order of the day; but I still contend that I have been the victim for years of continued efforts to be polite and to be courteous to my fellows. From this time on, however, I desire to say to my friend from Mississippi I am going to be just as mean as anybody. So far as the speeches are concerned, let them go on, and God bless the orators. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President I ask unanimous consent that we proceed with the discussion of this bill or any other matter that may come before the Senate today, and that tomorrow we take up the bill for amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York really would like to discontinue the discussion of the sugar bill until tomorrow I can relieve him, if I can secure the floor as soon as the Senator from Colorado yields it, because I will take the floor and occupy the remainder of the day on the subject of air mail.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair state to the Senator from Ohio that a Senator on the Republican side, the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], has requested that he be recognized at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Colorado, and the Chair understands the Senator from Michigan is very much interested in the bill under consideration.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. The request made by the Senator from Mississippi is that the Senate proceed with the discussion of the bill and that we wait until tomorrow to vote on the bill or any amendments proposed. Has that request been acted on?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not been acted on. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, before the bill now before the Senate is given detailed consideration perhaps I should make a moderately short general statement about it.

No measure introduced at this session of Congress, when called up for consideration, has been so well understood as the present bill, alike with respect to its program, its objectives, and its specific provisions. Unfortunately prefaced and dramatized at hearings before the House Agricultural Committee by testimony which conveyed a wholly false impression of its scope and purposes, the bill for some weeks has been subjected to close scrutiny and, except for customary and natural differences of opinion on some of its details, has emerged with general and strong support and with a widespread demand for the promptest possible enactment into law. The urgency of the situation mentioned by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] must again be stressed at the outset of this discussion, and it is only reasonable to ask that whatever action the Senate is to adopt be taken without delay. The planting season in the West is immediately at hand, and contracts between growers and processors are at this moment awaiting final action by Congress. The offices of Senators and Representatives from the various sugar-growing States are at this hour flooded with telegrams directing attention to the importance of instant and favorable action. A few of many of these messages were yesterday placed in the RECORD by me. One also was incorporated by the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE].

It therefore is gratifying to realize that the bill, which passed the House of Representatives a few days ago, at last has apparently received, after extended discussion and debate, the approval of continental beet and cane growers. From the beginning I have had no doubt and have frequently stated that if the suggested legislation were understood, the administration's program would certainly receive general approval. It is not strange that the wisest of those who came to scoff have remained to praise.

Criticized by representatives of various special interests when first proposed as injurious to the sugar industry, the measure we are discussing is now recognized as that industry's immediate and surest safeguard. It presents for a long disorganized industry the most carefully considered and balanced example of sensible national planning to bring production and consumption within hailing distance of each other so far evolved, which the administration has attempted to apply to any basic agricultural commodity. Although the measure deals with nonsurplus domestic production, everyone familiar with the industry realizes that the problems under which the domestic sugar industry is laboring are those imposed by world surplus conditions which have so effectively operated under our single-track policy of relatively high and ever higher tariffs, that it at last has become necessary to raise statutory barriers of quota limitations against competitive forces which have been slowly strangling our continental-sugar development and the welfare of our beet and cane growers.

Fundamentally the measure before us is extremely simple. Its most essential provision will be found in its opening section, which adds sugar beets and sugarcane to basic agricultural commodities, thus preparing the way to the measure's first objective—the payment of benefits to sugar farmers out of processing taxes, so that they may secure living prices for their beets and cane. A second objective of the measure is the stabilization of markets and prices by quota limitations on production and imports, which, although differing in amounts allocated, does not depart in principle and merely modifies the stabilization and quota arrangement earnestly advocated last fall by all branches of the domestic sugar industry, including representatives of beet and cane growers.

The third and most unusual feature of the bill is to be found in the fact that it is so timed that it can take effect in conjunction with an expected reduction in the tariff, recommended under existing law by the United States Tariff Commission. As a consequence, and by the application of a processing tax identical in amount with the reduction of the tariff, it becomes possible to raise the required money for meeting benefit payments without adding to the burden of consumers, as has been done in the cases of processing taxes on other basic commodities. In other words, there should be no increase in the price of sugar to the public in this country as a result of the collection of funds out of which to make benefit payments for the extension of much-needed relief to beet and cane farmers. This does not mean, it should be clearly stated, that the price of sugar will not hereafter be different or increase under changed market and competitive conditions of supply and demand after this bill becomes law. It merely means that the approval of this bill and the imposition of processing taxes for which it provides, in view of the lowering of the tariff on sugar in exactly the same amount as the processing tax, which is to be added, should not increase the price to be paid by the sugar-consuming public.

Doubtless it is proper to preface the discussion of this bill with one further statement: A year ago the Senate did, and the Agriculture Department did not, favor, as provided in the pending bill, the inclusion of sugar beets and cane among basic agricultural commodities. Many of the Members of the Senate are to be congratulated today on their foresight in undertaking to do 12 months ago what the Department of Agriculture now recommends.

In January of this year the Secretary of Agriculture made the following statement on this subject:

> When the Agricultural Adjustment Act was enacted farm prices of sugar beets and sugar cane were very close to their fair exchange value, and, as a consequence, sugar was not included as a basic agricultural commodity under the act. Anticipating market pressure as a result of the large prospective crop of 1933–34, however, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration negotiated with representatives of the industry to the end that a marketing agreement in the interest of cane- and beet-sugar producers might be consummated.
> The draft of a marketing agreement which was finally presented for the approval of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration was, however, unsatisfactory, because it emphasized the interests of processors rather than the income of producers; because it did not provide for effective production control; and because the protection of consumers' interests was virtually confined to the Secretary's power to terminate the agreement.

The Secretary added:

> After the disapproval of the marketing agreement, the administration explored various alternative procedures. Our ultimate conclusion was that, irrespective of action which might subsequently be taken with respect to market quotas, or the regulation of competition, we should be in a position to make supplementary payments to producers of beets and cane, and to limit acreage sown to these crops if and to the extent that such action appeared necessary for the effectuation for the purposes of the act.
> Direct negotiations with producers will require that sugarcane and sugar beets be made basic agricultural commodities.

In connection with this statement of the Secretary of Agriculture it would appear desirable to include in these remarks, and have incorporated in the RECORD, one or two tables.

Mr. President, I first tender for the RECORD a table showing prices paid to sugar-beet farmers, contrasted in parallel columns with the fair-exchange value, of sugar beets. From this tabulation it appears that the growers of sugar beets in the United States between the years 1915 and 1924, both inclusive, received in only 4 years—1918, 1919, 1920, and 1923—the fair-exchange value or pre-war parity contemplated by the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and that during the years from 1925 to 1933, inclusive, in no year did sugar-beet farmers receive pre-war parity for their products.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. If the statement just made by the Senator is correct, it is apparent that the Secretary of Agriculture was in error in his statement when he said 1 year ago there was comparatively nothing wrong with the price.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The statement of the Secretary of Agriculture was that farm prices of sugar beets and sugarcane were very close to their fair exchange value. The table which has been prepared in the Department of Agriculture indicates that the average price paid to the farmer on the 1933 sugar-beet crop—that is, the 1932 crop, which was marketed in 1933—amounted to $5.32 per ton, and pre-war parity at the time for sugar-beet growers would have been $6.0713 per ton. Of course, at the time when the Secretary of Agriculture was considering this problem beet farmers had not finally been paid, so that in part the Secretary of Agriculture necessarily based his statement on estimates of amounts the companies would be required under their contracts to pay beet growers.

As most Members of the Senate are doubtless aware, trans-Mississippi farmers generally receive in payment for beets 50 percent of the net returns from beet sugar after deduction has been made by the sugar companies of expenses, including taxes, connected with the purchase of the beets and the manufacture and sale of the sugar.

As a matter of fact, predictions of the Secretary of Agriculture a year ago, as suggested by the able Senator from Nebraska, were not fulfilled; and without doubt that development contributed, with others, to the later recommendation by the Secretary of Agriculture that sugar beets and sugarcane be made basic agricultural commodities.

Mr. President, the United States Tariff Commission has recently made an examination of the cost of producing sugar beets in the various States of this country. I think, in connection with what has been said, that a table received from that Commission under date March 13, 1934, should also be incorporated in the RECORD.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I ask the Senator if that report of the Tariff Commission is publicly available as yet?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is my understanding that it has not been printed, but that it will be made available to the Senator from Michigan if he desires to see it.

For the information of the Senate, at this moment, perhaps, I should say that the costs of production shown in the table which I am offering for the RECORD run from a low figure of $4.69 in the State of Nebraska for the year 1931—a simple average being given—to a high figure of $7.34 in the State of Utah.

For the year 1930 the low figure apparently is $4.78 for the State of Kansas, and the high figure, $7.51, in the State of Michigan.

I ask that this table from the United States Tariff Commission be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

I ask that the table be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

U. S. Tariff Commission, Mar. 13, 1934.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves the last table, which like the other table has not yet been seen by the Senators—at least, I have not had access to it—I should like the Senator, in addition to having it printed in the RECORD, to give us now a short synopsis of what is shown by the table.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the table I have offered deals with costs of production in the years 1929–30. It shows lowest cost factory production in cents per pound for sugar in the States of Colorado and Nebraska; Colorado's cost, as estimated by the Tariff Commission, being 3.832 cents per pound; Nebraska's cost being 3.820 cents per pound.

The highest cost of sugar production for that year appears to have been in the State of Wisconsin, 6.879 cents per pound.

In the order of increasing costs between low and high we find: South Dakota, 4.239 cents per pound; Iowa, 4.901 cents per pound; Michigan, 5.323 cents per pound; Minnesota, 5.422 cents per pound; and Kansas, 5.884 cents per pound.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood from what the Senator said when he offered the table that it would show the relative costs between irrigated and nonirrigated tracts of land.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is true. The irrigated areas mentioned are in Colorado, Nebraska, Kansas, Wyoming, Utah, Idaho, Montana, and California.

The weighted average cost of sugar for all these States was 4 cents per pound. The nonirrigated areas are listed as Michigan, Iowa, Minnesota, South Dakota, and Wisconsin, with a weighted average factory cost of sugar for the nonirrigated States of 5.087 cents per pound. This table also gives the number of factories operated in each State and the pounds of sugar per ton of beets shown in the calculation of the United States Tariff Commission.

Mr. President, having pressed for the inclusion of sugar beets and sugar cane as basic commodities in April 1932 and again at the opening of the present session, no one here, I assume, has a more definite record than I have of legislative efforts to try to combine the principle of unrestricted production with bounty or benefit payments. It is fair to point out that the original proposal, which was limited to declaring sugar beets and cane basic commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, had and still has the merit of putting no restrictions on domestic production and of leaving to the voluntary action of individual farmers the question whether they prefer to grow beets without reference to prices received for them or to reduce production in consideration of receiving bounty payments, assuring them the fair exchange or pre-war parity value of their beets.

Such a measure, although extremely simple in form, would have been helpful to the sugar farmers and to the business communities adjacent to their farms and homes during the past year. However, insistence on quota restrictions last fall by all branches of the sugar industry, including farmers, in a stabilization agreement had such evident merits, or, at least, possibilities, from the viewpoint of stabilizing production, and thereby prices, that it is only natural that this bill should include trial of the quota experiment, the merits of which can be tested during the coming months and can be further dealt with, if need arises, at a subsequent session of the Congress.

Mr. President, before proceeding, perhaps it is proper to ask an opportunity to place in the RECORD, following the tables which have been submitted, a statement prepared in the Department of Agriculture showing the basis on which the pre-war parity of sugar beets has been calculated by the Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement referred to is as follows:

It is estimated that the average price paid for beets for the 1933 crop will be approximately $1.37 per ton below the fair exchange value as of December 20, 1933, the latest date for which farmers' cost-index numbers have been calculated.

The reasoning upon which this figure is based is outlined below:

The average price paid to farmers for sugar beets during the pre-war period August 1909–14 was $5.57 per ton. The index number of the cost of commodities farmers buy, issued December 20, 1933, was 1.18. The fair exchange value for beets as of that date, therefore, becomes $5.57 by 1.18, or $6.57.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does the statement presented by the Senator refer to the same relative parity as that mentioned by him a short time ago?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It does. It gives the formula under which the Department of Agriculture from time to time, under the terms of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, works out its calculation of the purchasing power of the farmer's product in terms of articles the farmer buys.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. May I impose upon the Senator's time for a moment to ask him what the figures were that he gave a short time ago to show how far the producer of sugar beets was from receiving parity upon his last year's crop?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator realizes that the beet-sugar crop of 1933 is still being sold, so that we have not the final returns to beet farmers for the 1933–34 crop. We have the figures, however, for the 1932 crop of beets, the completion of the sale of sugar from which occurred in 1933.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Was that the crop to which the Senator's figures a short time ago referred, which showed that the farmer lacked about a dollar from receiving parity?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It was. The price received was $5.32 per ton of beets, and pre-war parity would have been $6.0713 per ton.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That parity is figured on the formula furnished by the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and is based entirely upon the fair price level of what the farmers purchase.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Precisely.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to call something else to his attention. This winter when the Secretary of Agriculture was before the Agricultural Committee he admitted that that was an unfair formula; that there was a serious error in the Agricultural Adjustment Act, in that to give to the farmer parity on the basis of the commodities which he had to buy was not sufficient to afford him actual parity. It was admitted that in addition to that formula there should be added his increased payments of interest since the pre-war period, because he does not buy interest but pays interest; also his increased taxes should be figured, and his increased cost of labor.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In other words, if I understand the able Senator from Minnesota, the farmer's lot is worse than is disclosed by the figures I have cited.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It is very much worse. The Department of Agriculture has since conducted a survey to find out how much farm prices would have to be raised in addition to that allowed by the present formula in order to give the farmer actual parity. Figuring in the other items that ought to be included in his cost of production, such as increased payment of interest on his increased indebtedness, his increase in taxes, and his increased labor cost, the Department has found that the farmer's parity price would be raised 13 percent over that allowed under the Agricultural Adjustment Act. So, on the basis of the figures the Senator has already given, the spread or lack of parity for sugar beets should be increased by about 98 cents; in other words, the farmer is lacking 98 cents more of being on a parity than according to the figures calculated under the formula of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The valuable contribution of the Senator from Minnesota will doubtless in part help further to explain to farmers of the beet and cane regions of this country the plight in which they have found themselves during recent years.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I wanted to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the figures based on the Agricultural Adjustment Act handicap the farmer, even though he should get parity figured under this formula, which he still does not get.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I thank the Senator for his helpful statement.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to his colleague?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield with pleasure to my colleague.

Mr. ADAMS. It occurs to me that there is another element in the computation of the parity which also works unfavorably and unjustly to the sugar-beet price. Parity, as I understand, under the formula which was applied, is based upon the years from 1909 to 1914. Those were years of very intense competition in the sugar business. The tariff at that time as against our chief competitor, which was Cuba, was practically only 1 cent a pound, or a very trifling fraction above that. It was half of what the present tariff is. So we are having a comparison of present-day prices under a 2-cent tariff with a price then under a 1-cent tariff and the intense competitive condition when Cuba was producing very largely.

Mr. COSTIGAN. What my able colleague, the junior Senator from Colorado, has said is, of course, informative. It may be added that the tariff of about 1 cent a pound to which the Senator refers was the lowest in half a century.

Mr. President, perhaps an anticipatory word should be devoted to certain objections urged at different times against the proposed legislation. The freedom of farmers to continue to produce farm products at a loss is not the most fortunate liberty. Freedom to starve is not valuable. The claim that continental sugar producers should be permitted to produce all sugar consumed in the United States has a familiar and even instinctive appeal, and conceivably the day will arrive in a changed world when farmers in this country will provide such self-sufficiency. However, it should be noted that generations of favorable sugar tariffs have fallen far short of achieving such results. Under the complex competitive forces affecting sugar, with increasing visible supplies of sugar in the world, the price of sugar has been driven toward unprecedentedly low levels.

For example, in 1922–23 the average price per pound c. and f., New York, was 4.674 cents, with 3,025,000 short tons of visible supply. In subsequent years as visible supplies continued to rise prices continued to fall. In 1932–33 the average price per pound c. and f., New York, had dropped to 1.119 cents, with 7,800,000 short tons, according to a preliminary estimate, as the visible supply.

Mr. President, I now offer a table to be found at page 267 of World Trade Barriers in Relation to Agriculture, Senate Document No. 70, of the Seventy-third Congress, first session, which specifies visible supplies of world sugar stocks and prices in parallel columns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the table will be printed in the RECORD.

The table is as follows:

[3] Preliminary.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, under bounties, low tariffs, and relatively high tariffs, the increase in domestic production of beet sugar has only slowly advanced during the last half century, and the production of cane sugar is considerably less than its former highest level. Leaving out our insular possessions and other sources of supply, after half a century of free and unlimited opportunity to produce, the continental United States now produces from one fourth to one third of the continental consumption.

In other words, considering production and prices together, the right to unlimited production has brought not prosperity, but the reverse, not higher but lower returns to sugar farmers in the United States.

One of the noteworthy features of the pending bill is found in its new approach to the solution of many and multiplying difficulties of the domestic sugar industry. It has been hoped that clearer foresight than that so far legislatively displayed will be applied to this involved subject. All who believe in human values and sensible national planning ought to welcome such an effort as is embodied in the pending measure. Too many cooks have been interfering with the broth to make it a perfect legislative product, but Congress will do well if in its constructive efforts it can claim an advance over the past. So much may confidently be asserted on behalf of the present measure. Fortunately, it is acceptable in its present form to the most representative growers of the industry, who are at this time petitioning Members of the Senate promptly to enact it. The legislation promises to afford a common meeting ground for the adjustment of major production and marketing problems. Self-destroying methods have too long invited misfortune to the domestic industry until growers, East and West, find themselves in a sorry plight indeed.

No clearer statement of the importance of the legislation has been voiced than that issued by the Secretary of Agriculture on March 16 of this year. Secretary Wallace stated, in substance, that one of the chief objectives of the administration's sugar plan is to stabilize the sugar industry and to prevent a threatened collapse of prices, which would bring distress to some 80,000 farmers engaged in domestic-sugar production; and he might have added many other thousands of human beings affected by its prosperity or adversity. He said further that a disastrous price decline faces the industry unless definite restrictions of shipments can halt the effects of insular production on the American market; that unless this legislation is enacted, administration estimates point to a price for sugar beets as low as $4 per ton for this year's crop as against a basic assured return of about $6.50 per ton.

This means, according to Secretary Wallace, a return to beet growers under the law of about $63,000,000, as against a return to the producers of $34,000,000, or less, if the measure does not become law. The Secretary further suggested that through the combination of benefit payments and a reduced tariff these substantially improved conditions can be put into effect in this industry by the Department of Agriculture without adding, by reason of the program, to the burdens of consumers. In addition, improved sugar prices throughout the world, beneficial to all the regions supplying the continental American market, should result from the legislation.

Mr. President, for general information, and particularly in view of the likelihood that the present discussion will continue tomorrow, I ask to have incorporated in the RECORD, following my remarks, two tables, the first showing sources of sugar consumed in the United States during the years 1924 to 1933, both inclusive; the second giving the figures with respect to beet-sugar production, by States, harvested acreage in 1933, and short tons, raw value, produced in the 3 last crop years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Colorado is granted.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Whether it is germane to the observations of the able Senator I am not sure, but may I ask a question? If we were not threatened with the execution of a recommendation made by the Tariff Commission of a reduction in the tariff, does the Senator think there would be any justification for the legislation?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the question of the able Senator from Utah is difficult to answer concisely. The need for a new method of dealing with the sugar problem must be obvious to any one who has carefully studied its history. In my judgment force is added to the appeal for the prompt enactment of the legislation by the circumstance that the Tariff Commission, for the second time in approximately 10 years, has recommended a reduction in the tariff on sugar on the basis of a cost-of-production rate-changing formula established for the Tariff Commission by a Republican Congress acting in conjunction with a Republican President.

Nevertheless it has long been my personal judgment that if the people of the United States desire as heretofore to continue to pay for the maintenance of a sugar industry in this country, a far more economical method is through the combination of a lower tariff than that which the country has been sanctioning, with the addition of bounty payments direct to beet and cane growers.

Mr. President, before I conclude, may I ask to have added to the other tables at the conclusion of my remarks one further tabulation. It shows the course of sugar beets harvested in the United States since the beginning of the period of substantial sugar-beet cultivation in this country and concluding with the year 1933, and on the margin discloses the tariff rates or bounty provisions, as the case may be, applicable to the sugar industry during those years. It further shows the sugar produced in long tons during those years and the number of factories in operation in the continental United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Colorado is granted.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. The bill provides that in the case of sugar beets and sugar cane the calendar year shall be the marketing year. It is my information that since the beginning of this calendar year a great deal of sugar has been brought into continental United States from the Philippines and possibly from some other sources of production. I have been informed that as much as 800,000 tons has been brought into the United States from the Philippine Islands.

What I wish to know is whether or not the Senator from Colorado interprets the provisions of his bill to mean that the quotas shall go into effect as of January 1, 1934?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is my understanding that the quotas will be effective as of January 1, 1934. The Senator from Louisiana should give careful consideration to the language of the bill and, if in any doubt, should discuss it with representatives of the Department of Agriculture. Those representatives, however, have assured me, and I believe that the measure, if now adopted, will fix the quotas as of January 1, 1934.

Mr. OVERTON. Therefore, whatever sugar has been imported from those outside sources would be charged up against the different areas?

Mr. COSTIGAN. If brought in since January 1, 1934, it would be, I assume, included in the respective quotas for this year.

Mr. VANDENBERG obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GIBSON in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the following bills of the Senate:

S. 828. An act to authorize boxing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

S. 2999. An act to guarantee the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H.R. 8018. An act to authorize payment for the purchase of, or to reimburse States or local levee districts for the cost of levee rights-of-way for flood-control work in the Mississippi Valley, and for other purposes;

H.R. 8402. An act to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes; and

INCLUSION OF SUGAR BEETS AND CANE AS BASIC COMMODITIES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8861) to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, as a basis for my observations and analysis in respect to this critically important piece of proposed legislation, I desire to lay down first the presumed purposes to which the measure is addressed and the official statement of the ambitious pretensions that are made in its behalf.

I assume that the fairest way to submit these affirmative credentials on behalf of the proposed legislation is to read a paragraph or two from the favorable report of the Senate Finance Committee.

The committee report says:

> This bill has as its primary object the stabilization of the sugar industry to prevent a threatened collapse of prices which would bring distress to some 80,000 farmers engaged in sugar production in continental United States. Unless corrective measures are adopted, as proposed in this bill, the returns to beet and cane growers will probably continue to be insufficient to furnish them an adequate return for their efforts.
> This bill follows substantially the President's message of February 8, 1934.

I interrupt the reading at that point to dissent cordially from that statement in the committee's report. If this proposed legislation still responded to the literal spirit of the President's message of February 8, 1934, or if it continued to reflect the original purposes disclosed by the Department of Agriculture, I doubt whether a majority of this or the other body of Congress would remotely subscribe to it, as it evidently intends to do.

I continue reading, however:

> The program contained therein—
> Referring to the President's message—> recognizes a duty to stabilize the price and production of sugar for the benefit of the continental producers and the industry of the insular possessions and at the same time to maintain a fair price for sugar to the consumer.
> The benefits to be derived from this bill are not limited to a small group. If enacted into law, it will indeed contribute to the general welfare of the United States as a whole. The increased purchasing power which this bill will bring to domestic producers of sugar cane and sugar beets, the returns to whom will probably amount to some $80,000,000 as against possible returns of $50,000,000, in the absence of legislation, will enable these producers to purchase manufactured goods and thus help keep our factories running and our factory labor employed.

Then dropping down in the report, I desire to read just two additional paragraphs in the summary of the principal objectives which are stated by the committee to be addressed by the pending legislation:

> The program for sugar as proposed in this bill has the following four principal objectives:
> (1) To insure stability to the domestic producers of sugar beets and sugar cane by giving them a virtual guarantee of fair exchange or parity returns on a level of production representing more continental sugar than has ever been successfully sold in a single year.
> (2) To assure greater stability to the sugar industry through the provision of adequate quotas for the territories, the insular possessions, and other sugar-producing areas, but preventing the impact of overproduction from so depressing the market as to decrease returns to domestic producers.

Mr. President, I agree that this is a thoroughly happy prospectus if warranted in any reliable degree. I know that the distinguished senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the author of the bill, thoroughly agrees with that prospectus and believes in it. The Senator from Colorado is an earnest, honest man, and every claim he has submitted upon the floor on behalf of this proposed legislation has behind it the complete integrity of his purpose. I desire to make this statement without equivocation before I proceed to indicate that from my viewpoint he may be leaning on a broken reed. I regret to say that I cannot disassociate my attitude in respect to this measure from some of the initial experiences which we had in respect to its consideration.

I sincerely hope and pray that the able Senator from Colorado is wholly correct in the prophecies which he has uttered this morning, and in the prospectus from which I have read to the Senate.

If he is correct, it can be a benediction upon the industry. If he is not correct, the pending legislation will be an utter curse upon the industry. The answer, as I shall presently demonstrate, lies entirely within the control of the President and the Secretary of Agriculture and their associated commissars in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. We are proposing for the time being, as I shall presently indicate, to give them the benefit of the doubt.

I want to proceed now to discuss the bill, as I believe in complete candor, and as I believe with complete justification.

Mr. President, this sugar-control bill in its original form, and in the plainly expressed purpose of its original sponsors in the Departments of Agriculture and of State, was intended primarily to save Cuba at the expense of American farmers and American industrialists. Furthermore, the experts in the Department of Agriculture were particularly hospitable to this alien ideal because they frankly admitted that in their Olympian judgments there is small place for domestic beet and cane sugar in their feudal programs for the regimentation of the American farm and the American fireside.

These inimical purposes were frankly reflected in the original bill and in the President's sugar message of February 8. It is my belief that the stage was arranged for the progressive demise of the domestic-sugar industry. The funeral hour was set; and the Department of Agriculture's bureaucracy was efficiently prepared to serve as mortician. But the corpse unexpectedly and most inconsiderately came to life. It declined to be embalmed without a struggle—and it has been struggling with some degree of success ever since. As a result, the sugar-control bill in its final pending and much-amended form is decidedly less deadly than was the original certificate of interment. Indeed, domestic sugar may discover that it has escaped the intended sepulcher. For this we are duly thankful. Yet the whole scheme continues to be haunted with the ghosts of intended slaughter. Its lethal atmosphere continues to violate the life-giving promises of the new deal—as I shall presently undertake to demonstrate.

I fervently hope and pray that the compensatory benefits which the able and always conscientious Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the author of the bill, proclaims will truly bring a net advantage to this great industry. If a net advantage arrives, however, it will be largely due to the protective amendments which we have forced into the legislation and to a somewhat chastened attitude on the part of the Agricultural Department's "sugar commissars", who surely have discovered during the last 8 weeks of argument and negotiation that sugar beets and sugar cane in continental United States are not the dead commodities which were so contemptuously dismissed to relative disintegration in the first instance.

REAL HOPE—ADMINISTRATORS CAN SAVE ALL

Mr. President, those who have a right to speak for domestic sugar farmers and processors in this emergency reluctantly announce that they have no choice except to ask for the passage of the bill—indeed, any bill—because of the impending purpose of the President to reduce the sugar tariff. Against the latter hazard, their only relative hope is the substitution of quota protection.

In such circumstances, any quotas, however hostile, are better than none at all. They must take what they can get. But let this be plain, namely, that they are not free agents when they make their choice. It has been said that they choose with a gun at their head. That is the truth. It is a double-barreled gun. One barrel is loaded with impending sugar-tariff reductions, menacingly promised by the President; the other barrel is loaded with unrestricted Philippine imports until such time as the new and inadequate Philippine bill becomes effective. Parenthetically, I may say that was one of the reasons why I voted against the Philippine bill, which was enacted, and under which we are now operating. Since these hazards appear unavoidable, domestic sugar is driven not only to accept but actually to seek the offsets provided in the pending measure. They are offsets by the explicit terms of the bill itself, because the processing taxes are tied to the tariff reduction, and the former cannot exceed the latter. But let it stand utterly clear that they are embraced as offsets only. They would never be embraced if domestic sugar were a free agent to choose its own destiny and write its own ticket.

Cotton farmers asked for the cotton bill, with its limitations and its regimentation and its strait-jackets, because they expect, rightly or wrongly, a net advantage for themselves. Beet farmers ask for this sugar bill not in the expectation of a net advantage but to partially hold their own against these other unavoidable dangers which this administration flings at their heads. This is my language—not theirs. They are prepared to cooperate in faith, however timid, that they will get fair play. But this has been a plain and truthful statement of their status. This bill, in my view, is not their emancipation. It is simply their reprieve from something needlessly worse.

Mr. President, the chief beet-producing State in the eastern area is the Commonwealth of Michigan, which I have the honor to represent in part. Sugar beets are one of our few remaining dependable cash crops. Sugar processing is a major industrial activity in several of our finest communities. We have not been able to contemplate this problem with the abstract detachment of a theorist in his experimental laboratory or a crystal gazer in his trance. We are at grips with the grim realities. We have been and still will be fighting for our lives.

These Michigan beet farmers have been represented in Washington during the last 8 momentous weeks by their chosen and authentic representatives, not as lobbyists but as ambassadors pleading with their overlords for their rights. These Michigan processors, just recovering from the bludgeonings of the depression, have been similarly represented by spokesmen with authority to speak for their industry.

I digress long enough to pay my compliments to these men and to the patience and the earnestness and the vigor with which they have sought to defend their position and salvage their chance to survive. They have done all that anyone could do. We have been in almost constant conference. The greatest thing which they have gained, I dare to hope, is a favorable contact with those administrative authorities which will still have much tell-tale power under the terms of this bill. In behalf of these authorities I must add, in fairness, that there has been every willingness to listen and to learn. I must add also that, much as I disagree with Mr. Secretary Wallace, I have the greatest respect for his candor and his inherent integrity of purpose and his intention to be fair.

But this is the point. These Michigan authorities, accredited to speak for sugar farm and sugar factory, have set down their conclusions in a letter addressed to me, which I send to the desk and ask to have read by the clerk:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

FARMERS & MANUFACTURERS BEET SUGAR ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D.C., April 6, 1934.

Senator ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR VANDENBERG: There are attached hereto several amendments to S. 3212 which we would appreciate having you present to the Committee on Finance for consideration in connection with H.R. 8861, which passed the House of Representatives on April 4, 1934, and which has also been referred to the Committee on Finance.

We have been reluctant to support these bills including, as they do, a restriction on continental production. It has seemed to us, as applied to sugar of which there has at no time been an exportable surplus—continental production being less than one third of domestic-consumption requirements—that any such policy does violence to the principle of preserving the American market for our own people.

However, since the President of the United States in a message to Congress dated February 8 suggested that "we ought first to try a system of quotas" before the President would "recommend placing sugar on the free list", we have decided that it is better to have a bill which does apply a system of quotas to all insular areas furnishing sugar to the United States, rather than to face drastic reductions in the duty and an increase in the existing preferential on Cuban sugar, to which the President declared "favorable consideration will be given", all of which without a system of quotas would mean disaster to the continental industry.

We do not consider that all the regulations and penal provisions of the bills are necessary or appropriate to a sugar-control program.

The attached amendments make the bills less objectionable. We urge their adoption.

Accordingly, from the standpoint of expediency, and particularly in view of the assurances given by the Secretary of Agriculture of the benefits to result to our farmers under the contemplated plan, it is our desire that you give your support to an early passage of the bill in the least possible objectional form. But, in any event, we reluctantly assert our need for a bill under existing circumstances.

Very truly yours,

SHERWIN A. HILL,
A. W. BEEBE,
F. L. CRAWFORD,
Legislative Committee.
C. R. OVIATT,
Growers' Representative.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the cultivation and manufacture of sugar are highly technical operations. A decision reflecting marketing influences and production influences involves highly trained judgment. I would not consider that I am entitled to place my own judgments ahead of those of the gentlemen who have signed this communication, who are officially accredited to speak in Washington upon behalf of this great industry and this great agricultural commodity back home in Michigan. Therefore I am reluctantly consenting to the viewpoint which is submitted in the letter, but I am not doing it, Mr. President, until I have squarely laid before the Senate and the Congress and the country the full implications that are involved in this program, so that there may be no mistake tomorrow respecting the warning that is sounded and the responsibility for which we shall hold the Department of Agriculture to account.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I recall to the Senator that he made an observation in which he said: "This bill is here in behalf of and supported by", as I understood it, "the beet-sugar interests, but while they do not regard it as sufficient they do regard it as a reprieve"?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. LEWIS. Therefore, I ask the able Senator, is this bill presented by the beet-sugar interests, and is it presented by the beet-sugar interests as being a beet-sugar bill?

Mr. VANDENBERG. It was not presented by them. It is accepted by them under protest, and I will make it plain before I have concluded why their protest is justified and why they have no alternative but to accept the bill.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the statement that the bill is being accepted under protest comes as a surprise so far as I am concerned. It may be, of course, that certain beet-sugar interests in Michigan are protesting. There were formerly protests from various sugar-beet-growing interests, but, unless I am misinformed, the sugar-beet growers of the United States—at least the great majority of them—are now cordially desirous of having the proposed legislation enacted.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am not sure that there is very much difference between the Senator and myself. I think the beet-sugar farmers of the country do most prayerfully ask for this legislation at the moment, but my proposition is that they are driven into that attitude, not as a free-will attitude but by the sheer necessity of escape from other hazards to which I have adverted and which threaten them. Insofar as I am speaking about sugar interests which accept this bill under protest, I would not presume to speak for others than the farmers in the eastern area, from whom I have presented an official communication stating that they accept the bill reluctantly. "Reluctantly" is their word.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. One of the strongest communications endorsing the proposed legislation has been received by me from a leading beet grower who resides at Mount Clemens, in the State of the Senator from Michigan. Later, as an expression of the attitude of some growers in that region, I shall take occasion to quote for the RECORD from the letter to which I refer.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I shall be glad to have the Senator offer the letter. There seems to be no question about the official spokesmanship of those who are in Washington with the authenticated commission to speak for the beet farmers of Michigan. If there are, here and there, beet farmers who disagree with the policy to which in unison they have subscribed their reluctant faith, I should not be at all surprised.

Furthermore, if any of my farm friends have listened to the senior Senator from Colorado, I should not be at all surprised if they were filled with a glowing enthusiasm in behalf of this formula.

As I said in the beginning, I have the utmost respect for the integrity of the opinion which the Senator from Colorado submits. I hope with all my heart he is right and that my fears are wrong. But if he and his school of thought have presented their blandishments to any of my constituents, without rebuttal, I would not be at all surprised if the Senator had a response which is entirely enthusiastic. I repeat that I hope the Senator is right. I repeat that we have now amended this bill so that it has considerable insurance against disadvantage. I repeat that the Secretary of Agriculture can, if he will, administer it to our distinct advantage. I am pleading that these favorable trends be given fullest possible play.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The able Senator from Michigan is invariably courteous and instructive. I merely desire to add to what I stated a moment ago that it is in no sense true that the support which is coming to this measure from the great majority of representative leaders of the sugar-beet growers of the region I have the honor, in part, to represent is compulsory. As a matter of fact, the measure which is now pending before us has been subjected to the closest and most careful scrutiny and analysis. In the beginning it met extensive opposition in our intermountain region. That opposition has turned to affirmative and warm support. In confirmation of what I say I venture to ask the attention of the Senator from Michigan to the few out of many telegrams from that region which were placed by me in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD yesterday afternoon.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes, Mr. President; I heard the telegrams read upon yesterday, and with great respect for the Senator's interpretation of those telegrams, the interpretation I put upon those telegrams is that since the planting season presses the farmers in the West, and since some decision of some sort must be made, yes or no, in respect to this legislation before any progress whatsoever can be made in respect to the crop planting, they telegraphed the Senator, and he presented the messages to the Senate asking for a decision, and I think the chief urgency in the messages was less for this particular measure than for a decision in respect to the pending question. In other words, the whole industry is deadlocked in an impasse—at the very moment when the seed must go into the ground—until Congress settles the sugar-control question.

Mr. President, regardless of what the Senator's farm friends think, and what my farm friends think, I know what I think, and I continue to submit my views to the Senate.

The letter which was read from Michigan spokesmen requested the addition of certain life-saving amendments to the bill. I am very happy to say that I presented those amendments to the Senate Committee on Finance; that I was given a most courteous and sympathetic hearing; and all the amendments, with one exception, have been adopted and are in the committee report of the bill. Therefore the measure appears to merit the "reluctant"—that is not my word—that is quoted from the letter—merits the reluctant consent which has been indicated.

The original proposition, however, in its original form, Mr. President, was utterly impossible. It seems to me that it still is bad in many of its implications and its latitudes. Nevertheless, with a tariff reduction imminent—and that sword of Damocles hangs squarely over the head of the domestic-sugar industry this afternoon—with a tariff reduction imminent—the sugar industry must be sheltered some other way if it is to survive.

The only recourse under such circumstances, the only possible thing that they could do by way of self-defense, is to seek shelter under the Agricultural Adjustment Act through some such formula as in the pending bill. But as the letter states, "We consent to the whole proposition with the utmost reluctance, and we do it chiefly with a feeling"—as I have previously said, and as so eloquently argued by Congressman WOODRUFF, of Michigan, in the lower House—"we do it in the sense that there is a gun at our heads as we proceed."

The record must show that we are reluctant; the record must show the nature and implication of the whole transaction in justice to this tremendously important farm and industrial commodity in the life and livelihood of the United States.

Furthermore, Mr. President, there is another reason why this discussion may well go on; and it is a thoroughly pertinent and tangible reason. The truth of the matter is that as this bill is drawn, and as it now impends in the Senate, it provides certain minimum quotas but it does not confine the Secretary of Agriculture to those minimums. As this bill is drawn today, there is entire latitude within the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture to make his subsequent quotas on a basis which will not close a single sugar mill in the United States and which will not strip a single beet farmer's sugar crop by a single pound. It will be entirely within the power, authority, and discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, after this proposed legislation shall be passed, still to fix these quotas on a basis which will leave American agriculture with a 100-percent opportunity to produce sugar beets and will still leave beet-sugar processors with a 100-percent opportunity to operate the factories that are waiting for a chance to thrive. There is nothing that compels the President to reduce the sugar tariff. There is nothing that compels the allocation of a short quota. These administrations can still save the whole situation if they please.

We have simply put a bottom limit in the bill so that the Secretary of Agriculture cannot undermine us and gut us from below. The opportunity exists, I repeat, for him to decide whether or not this literal minimum shall become, in fact, the maximum and shall thus close some of our sugar factories, and thus put some of our sugar farmers out of beet production. The decision is for the Secretary to make. He can keep the factories running if he wants so to do. If they shall close it will be the result of his decision; it will not be the result automatically of this proposed legislation. If farmers shall be driven out of beet production it will not be automatically the result of the pending legislation; it will be the result primarily of the decisions made by the Secretary of Agriculture and his associates in the triple A, because that is where the edict will be written which spells life or death for a great factor in this great agricultural and industrial commodity.

Mr. President, of course, it is well known that I am a loyal partisan of the sugar-beet industry; that statement scarcely needs to be made. I believe in the sugar-beet industry. Sugar beets constitute one of the finest and most profitable of farm crops and the basis for one of the most useful of our processing industries. The maintenance of a domestic industry is absolutely vital to the consumer himself in order that he may be protected in his ultimate competitive retail price. I have fought upon the floor of the Senate for the sugar-beet farmers; I always shall. We shall still have them to protect even after the enactment of this proposed legislation partially transfers their fate and destiny to the hands of the administrators of the triple A; but the pending theory of sugar control violates the consistency of the existing situation in the United States upon a number of different accounts. It is at war with the recovery program, which is being prosecuted so courageously in many other directions.

I suppose it is a waste of time to discuss inconsistencies in a period like this. We are entirely surrounded by inconsistencies. This bill is riddled with inconsistencies. For example, in passing, speaking of inconsistencies in our agricultural program in general, at the present time we are spending several hundred million dollars to curtail a corn surplus, and we are embarked upon some very dubious adventures in an effort to reduce this corn surplus which is supposed to be destroying the welfare of the corn farmer in the United States; and yet, at the same time, the Department of Agriculture up until November 1933 was still circulating Bulletin No. 414, which has for its purpose, in the language of its own subheading, the teaching of the American farmer "the possibility of doubling the present yields in corn." The Department took that particular bulletin out of circulation in November 1933, but here are more bulletins that are still circulating—I got them today. Have they stopped telling the American farmer how to increase his corn crop? Oh, no. Here is Bulletin No. 1714. I read from the second page just a sentence to indicate what is going on:

> These practices—

Referring to the advice that has been given—

> These practices, with the supplemental use of commercial fertilizers to supply special needs, can be relied upon to increase acre yield.

This is a good, substantial bulletin which we are now paying our money to have published and circulated in order to teach the farmer how to increase corn acre yield at the very moment when we are appropriating hundreds of millions of dollars to correct the situation as a result of the acre yield already existing.

I do not desire to enlarge upon this particular phase of the discussion, but here is another bulletin—no. 773—from which I read:

> By reducing the waste of moisture and heat corn yields can be doubled.

Still showing the farmers how to double their corn yields.

> Improving the quality of seed corn is one of the surest ways of increasing the yield.

I repeat, Mr. President, that that is just an indication of the inconsistencies with which we are confronted in respect to the hasty development of this experimental agricultural program.

But let me bring this contemplation of inconsistencies much closer to the immediate pending problem. On February 27, 1934, the Department of the Interior issued a press release, from which I read the following first sentence:

> A new step forward in sugar-beet production may be taken as the result of experiments being conducted by the Reclamation Service of the Department of the Interior.

This is no ancient history; this was 60 days ago. The public is notified that the Reclamation Service of the Department of the Interior is at work upon experiments to increase sugar-beet production and particularly in respect to reclamation projects. A new step forward is being taken, we are told, in sugar-beet production.

But what does Mr. Secretary Wallace say simultaneously upon precisely that same subject? On February 23, which was the same week, Mr. Wallace stated in his testimony before the Senate committee—I have it in my hand—discussing the question of reclamation development in behalf of projects which depend upon sugar beets. Reading from the testimony:

> Senator VANDENBERG. Is there a large new reclamation project or irrigation project coming in, in Wyoming, under the President's order, in respect to the P.W.A., which is contemplated as a beet-producing area, some 66,000 acres?
> Secretary WALLACE. I do not know of any area that is contemplated as a beet-producing area. I suppose you are referring to the Casper-Alcova project.

I might digress to say that under the expectations of the Reclamation Service the Casper-Alcova project is solely dependent upon sugar beets and alfalfa. There is absolutely no justification in proceeding with that project except that there can be sugar beets and alfalfa grown upon it.

Now let us see what the Secretary has to say as to whether or not there can be sugar beets grown upon it, in the light of this new sugar-control policy.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If we are going into sharp restrictions we certainly ought to restrict these irrigation and reclamation projects which contemplate increased production.

Secretary WALLACE. I agree with you completely, unless there is also a corresponding reduction in submarginal lands.

Then I read him the bulletin from the Reclamation Service, and I said to him:

That just seems to be a step directly opposite from the direction in which you are going.

Secretary WALLACE. I think so, too.

Mr. President, here is another inconsistency. The able Secretary of Agriculture frequently says to us that after we shall have made a great contribution to Cuban welfare and economy through the reduction of the Cuban preferential duty upon sugar, we in turn may hope to get a reflected dividend from that Cuban advantage through the sale of corn and hogs down yonder in the Pearl of the Antilles.

Here is a telegram, dated March 15, from Reginald Dykers, vice president of the American Sugar Cane League, in which he says:

Would consider it most unfortunate if rights and welfare of domestic-sugar industry were sacrificed through a faulty premise. Secretary Wallace bases his position on the theory that Cuba should be allowed to ship her sugar here so she can get the money to buy our corn and pork. Local corn dealer makes statement he would be importing corn from Cuba now if it were not for the 25-cent per bushel tariff. United States Department of Commerce states that Cuba produces exportable surplus of corn and is raising all her requirements in pork.

So, Mr. President, there is another of the incidental inconsistencies which we confront in connection with this agricultural program in general and with the sugar program in particular; but these are all incidentals.

Let me come down to the fundamental challenges which are involved, because they are indeed fundamental challenges.

Mr. President, first, the proposal which now pends before the Senate attacks a profitable cash farm crop at the very moment when we are presumably dedicating ourselves to an enlargement of farm revenue. It attacks a crop which is not upon a surplus basis. It is a crop which contributes only one fourth of the consumption in the United States. By no stretch of the imagination can it ever become a surplus crop, even though it were given intelligent governmental encouragement. But, in spite of the fact that it is not a surplus crop, in spite of the fact that it is far removed from any possibility of ever becoming a surplus crop, we find it used by the Department of Agriculture and by the Presidential program for that type of treatment which heretofore has been reserved exclusively for commodities which are on a surplus basis. I submit there is no consistency in applying the A.A.A. theory of surplus reduction and control to a commodity which has no surplus and which is not even remotely threatened with a surplus. We need control. But we do not need and we resent reduction.

Furthermore, I insist that at a time when the farmer is struggling for cash crops on every hand it is utterly inconsistent deliberately to cut him off from a portion of one of the best cash crops he has in large areas of the United States. This is not just a Michigan problem. It is a major problem in 16 States: California, Utah, Idaho, Washington, Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, Nebraska, Kansas, South Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa, Ohio, Wisconsin, and Indiana, as well as Michigan.

Mr. President, in my own State of Michigan sugar during the last year represented $14,534,000, and that is a lot of money in a farm commodity in a time of farm depression such as we are now suffering. It involves the livelihood of 21,502 farmers. It involves the welfare of 21,762 beet workers. This is just in one State—the State of Michigan. It involves 5,466 factory workers, as well as others of incidental and collateral activity in connection with the process. Why should the Government by mandate undertake to curtail these activities at the very moment when it is straining every effort to increase our employment and our farm prosperity? Farm prosperity, I may say in passing, is at the base of our entire regime and hope of stabilized recovery.

My first complaint, then, against the fundamental philosophy of the bill in respect of the inconsistencies which I have been discussing is that it is utterly without rational philosophy to attack one of the few cash crops in the United States which are not on a surplus basis for the purpose of forcing it into retrenchment at a time when, on the contrary, under the whole theory of agricultural encouragement which we are pursuing in other directions, we ought to be seeking to see how we can expand the crop instead of how we can reduce it.

Let us see as to the second fundamental objection. I insist that it is wholly inconsistent even with the ideas and purposes of the authors of the triple A processing tax program. The processing tax was supposed to apply solely for the purpose of discouraging surpluses and providing benefit payments in lieu of contributions to the reduction of surpluses. There can be no logical application in the present situation, as I have already indicated, because there is no surplus. I want to be understood in this connection as not objecting in any degree to a fair trial of the abstract theory of the processing tax. The processing tax is a rather poor paraphrase of the original equalization fee which was brought to the floor of the Senate time and time again in years past by the able senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] in the form of the McNary-Haugen bill. It was the first major legislation for which I voted when I came to the Senate in 1928. I shall always have the conviction that if this legislation could have been enacted 6 years ago, and the equalization fee put into effect, we would have avoided many of the agricultural difficulties which have pursued us in the interim.

The processing tax is something of a paraphrase—rather a poor analogy, nevertheless it is reminiscent of it—of the equalization fee. I am happy to see it reasonably tried in respect to surplus commodities. I should like to see it tried, for example, in respect to beans in Michigan this afternoon. But there is no rime or reason in applying it to a crop which is on a nonsurplus basis, and in no degree does it fit into the theory of the legislation itself under which the Agricultural Adjustment Act was originally developed. Furthermore, no processing tax has ever heretofore been proposed as an offset to a tariff reduction. Here and here alone do we find processing taxes and tariff duties tied together. They hurt us with tariff reduction; then they compensate us with benefits out of processing taxes. Our hope is that we come out at least even on the deal. But we must take the deal, whether we like it or not, or perish.

Mr. President, my third objection, and a very serious one, to the philosophy behind the existing legislation is the fact that it is born in the theory, apparently, that sooner or later the domestic sugar industry should die. It is not put so baldly, but there it baldly stands. There have been many belated attempts to salve our feelings and assuage our fears in respect of this contemplation of the matter. But I cannot forget, Mr. President, that in the Executive message of February 8, 1934, the President, in referring to the domestic-sugar industry, said it was necessary "to provide against expansion of this necessarily expensive industry."

The phrase drafted by the President of the United States himself originally to describe this industry which is to be put under the control of this legislation—the phrase which he used was that it is "a necessarily expensive industry." So much for his sounding of the reveille against this industry.

What next? I cannot forget that Secretary Wallace has described it as "an inefficient industry", nor can I overlook the fact that it seems to be implied in the pending tariff programs of the administration that so-called "inefficient industries" must be retired after they are thus malignantly identified by our high Federal planners.

So here we have "a necessarily expensive industry", as it is defined by the President of the United States, "an inefficient industry", as described by the Secretary of Agriculture, and we were put upon direct notice in the initial consideration of the bill that those adjectives were not applied without some ominous portent, because we were given to understand by direct testimony that the initial purpose, until it had been curbed, was progressively to put this commodity and this industry into serial disintegration. That is no stretch of the imagination.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Is it not a fact that the bill is out of harmony with that clause of the President's message in that it provides that the domestic sugar industry shall be permitted to expand somewhat in larger proportion to the actual increase in domestic consumption of sugar?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is discussing the bill as it now pends in the Senate after it has been amended?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I entirely agree with him, and I refer him to the fact that I said at the outset that the bill now pending represents a degree of solace which presents us with a totally different contemplation than the bill as it was originally drawn and as it originally impended. As it was originally drawn it was aimed squarely at the so-called "inefficient" and "expensive" sugar-beet industry.

What is the best test of the efficiency or inefficiency of an industry? It strikes me that the best test is the retail price the consumer has to pay for the commodity over a period of years. That is about the best test of expensiveness or efficiency that I know of in measuring or testing any commodity. I assert that in the average of the years sugar retails in the United States much cheaper than in any other country on the globe with but few exceptions. Is that an expensive sort of net result? Is that an inefficient net result?

I call attention to the fact, dealing with specific figures——

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OVERTON. Is it not a fact that sugar retails in the United States at about one half the price for which it retails in European countries?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is precisely what I am coming to. The Senator is entirely correct.

Here is a given day around the world, and these figures show the retail price of sugar converted into terms of American currency:

It is 11.79 cents in Germany.
It is 11.95 cents in Czechoslovakia.
It is 9.31 cents in Austria.
It is 14.28 cents in Hungary.
It is 10.09 cents in France.
It is 11.17 cents in Holland.
It is 10.24 cents in Poland.
It is 21.88 cents in Italy.
It is 403.63 cents in Russia.
It is 7.59 cents in the Argentine.
It is 6.35 cents just across the line in Canada.

In the United States, on the day these figures were compiled, the price of sugar was 4.34 cents; and that figure is bettered in consumer-price advantage only in Denmark, England, Java, and Japan. With those exceptions—and those exceptions are only by a small margin—sugar sells cheaper in America than in any other spot around all this globe. Is that inefficiency? Is that an expensive industry? By what token shall this industry, which is capable of bringing this consumer boon to the United States, be put under a sentence of death in any degree in the face of such a record? I submit that the President and his Secretary of Agriculture should recant their views and recall their imprecations.

Furthermore, Mr. President, mark this fact: The only time when the retail consumer in the United States has had to pay a highly tilted price for sugar was in 1920–21, when the beet crop had been withdrawn early in the season as a result of a world shortage and the diversion of the domestic supply elsewhere. That year, when we were totally at the mercy of the world price, without the intervening protection of an adequate existing domestic supply of sugar—that year, and that year alone, the price of sugar rose upon the store shelves of the United States to 25 and 30 cents a pound.

Where is your inefficient industry, Mr. President, by any right of such definition, when it can demonstrate by its own credentials that it is responsible for keeping the retail price of sugar in the United States within a minimum reach of the ultimate consumer? Yet we were told in an Executive message that the domestic sugar industry is an unnecessarily expensive industry, and we were told by the Secretary of Agriculture that it was inefficient!

I should like to know where there is an industry in this whole land that can prove any greater efficiency or any more right to be absolved from the charge that it is an excessively expensive operation.

Furthermore, Mr. President, those hostile phrases were not the only things that put us on warning, and which resulted in the successful battle which has been made to bring this bill into at least some reasonable degree of palatable form.

The sugar expert in the Department of Agriculture under the A.A.A. is an excellent gentleman by the name of Weaver, who, I understand, chiefly is familiar with the sugar industry because up to 90 days ago he was exclusively confined to the rice industry in his activities. [Laughter.] Mr. Weaver appeared before a House committee. Mr. Weaver was asked some rather embarrassing, or let us say, rather some pointed questions respecting the attitude of his Department, and the threat that is implicit in the inimical phrases I have quoted to you; and one Member of the other House said to Mr. Weaver in a burst of candor:

> Now, is it not a fact that your purpose is to give the sugar industry a shot in the arm and then slide it out of business before it wakes up?

Mr. Weaver said "yes."

Mr. President, of course that caused consternation on all sides among the ranks of the advocates of this legislation; and there was a hasty pilgrimage down Pennsylvania Avenue. There was a little conference down at the White House. There was a somewhat reassuring announcement that what Mr. Weaver said did not represent the objectives and purposes of the administration or the A.A.A. A few days later the whole subject was under survey in our own Senate Finance Committee. I wanted to be fair about this anaesthetic that was planned for the sugar industry. I wanted to be fair to Mr. Weaver; so I asked Secretary Wallace what he thought about the frank admission that had been made by his sugar expert. He said:

> Well, I will tell you, Senator. The trouble was that Mr. Weaver had taken an airplane ride the night before, and his ears were still ringing with the hum of the plane, and he did not hear very well.

[Laughter.]

Mr. President, that is probably a good excuse. I will forgive him for having been up in the air; but he must not complain if we find ourselves up in the air also in the face of such utterly hostile exhibits. [Laughter.]

I want to be fair to the Department. I think they have learned a good deal about the sugar business in the past few weeks. I think they have been perfectly amazed to find that it has had such inherent powers of resistance to the dictatorship that was charted for it; but I think they have been sympathetic in listening to our problems. I give them full credit for that; and I do not believe their attitude today is the same as it was 8 weeks ago, when this original plan was undertaken. Nevertheless, we cannot erase from the record the fact that this proposed legislation was born in the belief that the domestic sugar industry is inefficient, unnecessarily expensive, and ought to be marked for serial distintegration over a period of years.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FESS. I think nobody can question the fact that a major item in the present program is the increase of our foreign trade. That seems to be major in the minds of those who are looking for a larger recovery. How can there be an increase in our foreign trade by a change of tariffs unless we sacrifice some American industry that has a tariff on its product?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator's question answers itself; and I agree with the answer that the question brings to itself.

Mr. FESS. And is it not obvious that some industry that might be claimed to be inefficient and expensive would be at least one that would be seized upon to be sacrificed if we are to carry out this policy?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Precisely.

Mr. FESS. I do not think any sort of explanation of why this or that statement was made lessens at all the force of the Senator's argument.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am happy to have the Senator's testimony. Let me divert just for a moment to prolong a comment upon that phase of the subject.

I have spoken about inconsistencies in the pending legislation. The Senator reminds me of the pending tariff-bargaining prospectus. We have before us a program in respect to an agricultural crop, a program based upon the specific threat that the tariff is to be reduced in respect to it; and yet, Mr. President, inherent in the N.R.A.—and I refer now to the act of Congress which created it—and inherent in the A.A.A.—and again I refer to the act of Congress which created it—is the contemplation that production costs are to be increased in the United States as a result of these acts, and that it may become necessary to protect those production costs with increased tariffs, even to the extent of embargoes, because inherent in both those laws are sections which specifically delegate a power to the President to create even an actual embargo in some instances for the purpose of protecting these increased production costs as a result of the N.R.A. and the A.A.A. Yet here we confront the first of the tariff bills—because that is what this bill is, even though it wears a different name. This is a bill to reduce the tariff on sugar. It is to be followed by a bill which will permit the President of the United States, in his own uncounseled wisdom, without any hearing permitted to anybody, without any appeal to anybody, to decide for himself what in his judgment are the inefficient and unnecessarily expensive industries of the United States, and, overnight, to pass a death sentence upon them.

Mr. HEBERT and Mr. COSTIGAN addressed the Chair.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield first to the Senator from Rhode Island. Then I will yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I wish I could have the assurance of the Senator from Michigan in regard to industries in my State which have been referred to in the discussion by the Secretary of Agriculture as it was related in the proceedings before the Ways and Means Committee to which I alluded some days ago. The Senator from Michigan feels that he has some assurance that consideration will be given to the sugar industry.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Well, pretty thin; pretty thin. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEBERT. However thin it may be, I venture to say that it is thicker than that which I am led to believe we shall have in relation to the lace industry in my State, which, incidentally, has capital invested something like 100 percent greater than that of the beet-sugar industry.

Yet it was the only industry to which the Secretary of Agriculture referred in his testimony before the Ways and Means Committee as destined to pass out of existence in this country.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I will respond to the Senator from Rhode Island, and then I will yield to the Senator from Colorado.

I do not want to detour into a general tariff discussion. Nevertheless, I think I owe it to the RECORD to state very frankly that the United States Tariff Commission appears to have made a recommendation in favor of a reduction of the tariff on sugar under the flexible provisions of the existing law, and based on the assumption, at least, that the costs of production at home and abroad warrant this reduction. I have never been able to get a copy of that opinion of the Tariff Commission. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] assured me this morning that for the first time it is available. I shall be very happy to read it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The assurance which I attempted to give the Senator from Michigan did not relate to the report of the Tariff Commission in its investigation of sugar. I incorporated in the RECORD a table prepared recently by the Tariff Commission. It was sent to me on request, and I have no doubt is also available for the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator. I want to call attention to this indisputable fact, and it is an all-controlling fact, insofar as any present recommendation of the Tariff Commission in regard to sugar-production costs is concerned.

The study referred to was made in pre-code days, speaking in terms of the N.R.A. That study was made in respect to costs of production prior to the existence of the N.R.A. I am advised that the N.R.A. has increased the processing costs in the production of sugar in one way and another by an average of 40 percent. Therefore, in the face of that fact, I shall have to submit and emphasize that any Tariff Commission report presuming or pretending to measure the difference in costs of production at home and abroad which was made prior to the N.R.A. is as ancient and irrelevant and incompetent in respect to the consideration of the difference in costs of production at home and abroad as if it had been made a century ago.

Does the Senator from Colorado desire to interrupt me further?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the eloquent Senator from Michigan has already indicated the qualification of his original statement about the President's new tariff policy which I rose to suggest, namely, that the reduction in the tariff on sugar will come in response to a recommendation already made by the United States Tariff Commission following a legally required investigation and public hearing. May I add that the Presidential action, if taken, will be under a law adopted by a Republican Congress and signed by President Hoover, and will be in accordance with rate-changing standards for tariff adjustments provided in the so-called "flexible" provisions of the law. It will, indeed, be taken in response to the recommendations of a commission, a majority of the members of which, I believe, are affiliated with the same political party to which the Senator from Michigan gives such effective allegiance.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his observations, and he gives me unexpected license to invade one phase of this discussion which I had not intended to enter. This is the first time in the debate that the word "Republican" has entered. My friend injected it. The word "Democrat" enters now also for the first time, and it enters only by way of rebuttal. It enters, Mr. President, in connection with an exhibit which I desire to lay upon the bar of the Senate. This should not be a partisan question, and I divert to partisan discussion only to answer my Democratic friend.

In the climax of the last campaign, to which the Senator from Colorado adverts, by implication, at least, there was made a special and particular appeal to the beet farmers of the State of Michigan to make them sure that they could vote the Democratic ticket without any need to fear any reduction in agricultural-commodity tariffs. If it was not intended that the promise should refer specifically to sugar, I do not know why the Democratic committee happened to choose those particular cities in Michigan in which to publish this full-page ad, which happened to be the cities which were in the very heart and center of the sugar-beet areas.

What was this advertisement? It was a full-page advertisement—and this perhaps accounts for some of the party deficit—appearing November 4, 1932, in these Michigan cities, headed "Roosevelt and the Farm Tariff." This is all it said, just a significant and pertinent quotation in big, flaming type, from Governor Roosevelt's speech at Baltimore on October 25, 1932, reading as follows:

> Of course, it is absurd to talk of lowering tariff duties on farm products. I declared that all prosperity in the broader sense springs from the soil. I promised to endeavor to restore the purchasing power of the farm dollar by making the tariff effective for agriculture and raising the price of farm products. I know of no excessive high tariff duties on farm products.

That was before he heard from the "brain trust."

> I do not intend that any duties necessary to protect the farmer shall be lowered. To do so would be inconsistent with my entire farm program, and every farmer knows it and will not be deceived.

Mr. President, that was pretty plain, and I know, because I happened to be rather prominently engaged in that campaign, how effective that commitment was, and I happen to know that the great beet areas of my State took that at face value as a warrant that there would be no reduction in tariffs upon agricultural commodities in general, and upon sugar in particular. That, furthermore, was the intention.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield, although I do not want to go much further with the political end of this argument. I want to get back to the bill.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Of course the Senator from Michigan is aware that under the so-called "flexible provisions" of the Tariff Act of 1930 it is expected that, upon findings and recommendations of the Tariff Commission which he considers sound, the President of the United States will reduce or increase particular tariff rates, following investigations and reports by the Tariff Commission, within the limits of 50 percent of the tariff duties fixed in the law.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. COSTIGAN. And that that result is supposed to follow automatically.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I add, while on my feet, that, of course, I meant not the slightest adverse reflection in any preceding reference to party affiliations. As the Senator obviously understands, I had in view merely this: That a presumption should normally be indulged in favor of a reduced tariff finding under the Tariff Act of 1930, which was enacted under and approved by President Hoover, where the facts have been passed on by a United States Tariff Commission, the majority of the members of which may be assumed to be in accord with the general tariff philosophy of former President Hoover and sympathetic toward the high-tariff tendencies of that law.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I do not know what the appropriate assumptions were in November a year ago. I made several erroneous ones myself. But it strikes me there is no assumption and no implication to be drawn from the cold, hard, unequivocal statement, "Of course, it is absurd to talk of lowering tariff duties on farm products." There is no possible license in that statement for a subsequent reliance upon a collateral report from the Tariff Commission in respect to the net result, and certainly there is no justification for reliance upon a report of the Tariff Commission which, I repeat, is as antiquated as if it had been made a hundred years ago, so long as it is not made in the purview of post-code N.R.A. prices.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The question raised by the Senator from Colorado reminds me of the position we on this side of the Chamber took on the flexible-tariff question. When it first came up it was quite bitterly controverted, not only between the two sides of the Chamber in both Houses, but there was a division on both sides of the aisle in both bodies. That provision gave the authority to the President only upon the finding of an expert commission, after adequate hearings, while what we now are proposing is to avoid any hearings whatever, and not to give to the President power in increase or lower the tariff on behalf of the industry, but to give him a trading point by which he can destroy an industry. If that is not as wide apart from the original plan as are the poles, I do not know of anything that is. When we were giving the President this flexible power, the contention on the part of our friends on the other side of the Chamber was that the power must not be final with the President; that the proposal ought to be returned to the Congress for endorsement or approval before the President can carry it into effect.

I cannot see why the Senator from Colorado should bring into the discussion the item of the flexible tariff bill, under the present situation, in contrast with what we are facing, which is yet to come under the terms of the pending bill.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I will yield briefly. I should like to get back to the bill.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In answer to the Senator from Ohio, permit me to say that my observations were made because the Senator from Michigan indicated that the tariff on sugar is to be lowered arbitrarily. The Senator from Michigan subsequently very properly qualified this suggestion by stating that in this instance the so-called "expert" Tariff Commission has found and, according to rumors, has unanimously reported in favor of half a cent reduction per pound in the effective tariff duty on sugar. It is this reduction which the President is now considering ordering, pursuant to law, in response to that official recommendation, as part of the sugar program, offsetting the resulting tendency toward lower prices by the addition of a processing tax of like amount.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, now we are back to that report of the Tariff Commission again, and I must insist upon reasserting that it is as outmoded, as irrelevant, as incompetent and immaterial as if it had been written a century ago, because it deals with pre-code N.R.A. prices and is not entitled to be authoritative in the face of the existing situation. I am sure the great President of the United States, with whom I have been happy to cooperate upon many critical occasions, will take this fact into consideration before he finally acts.

Let me now come to the next fundamental reason why I consider the philosophy at the base of this pending sugar-control bill to have been irrational. Mr. President, it is frankly built upon consideration for Cuba. I do not undertake to say that that is the exclusive or controlling reason, but I say it is one of the major and most effective reasons which have driven the administration into this particular type of sugar control.

I readily concede that under the Platt amendment we owe a certain type of responsibility to Cuba, and since economic and political stability today are so inextricably intertwined perhaps there is also an economic responsibility laid at our doors as the result of the existence of the Platt amendment.

I should like to say in that connection that I most heartily concur in the suggestions of the former able Ambassador to Cuba, Mr. Sumner Welles, now the distinguished Assistant Secretary of State in the present administration—I heartily concur in his recent well-sustained statement that the Platt amendment should be taken out of the Cuban constitution and that Cuba should be left to deal with her own responsibilties in her own way. But that Platt amendment still exists, and, based upon its existence, there is fabricated this theory that we must do something for Cuban sugar. And, I repeat, that is one of the factors that brought this bill.

Mr. President, if there is any obligation on the part of the United States under the Platt amendment to the Republic of Cuba, it is the obligation and the responsibility of all the people of the United States and not the responsibility of just the beet-sugar farmers of the United States. And if there is any debt to be paid to Cuba on this account, it is a debt owing out of the common resources of the whole people of the United States, and it is not a debt that you have any right to charge to the beet-sugar farmers all to themselves. They did not write the Platt amendment. They did not elect to stabilize Cuba under it. They are only a relatively small portion of the population of the United States. If there is any obligation which we owe to Cuba, I repeat, under the Platt amendment, in respect to its economic status, it is an obligation that involves every man, woman, and child under the flag.

Let it be charged where it belongs. Let it not be charged solely against the sugar-beet farmers of the United States.

Furthermore, when you are talking about stabilizing Cuba in respect to sugar, just let me say in passing that at the same time you are stabilizing Cuban sugar you are stabilizing the interests of the National City Bank of New York City, the Chase National Bank of New York City, and Hayden, Stone & Co. of New York City, because they represent, directly or indirectly, at least 50 percent of the financing of Cuban sugar.

If the American beet farmer owes no obligation to Cuba under the Platt amendment, certainly the American farmer owes no obligation to the National City Bank and to the Chase National Bank and to Hayden, Stone & Co. in respect to sugar.

So, I insist that at this point the program is utterly illogical, and that there is no justification in cutting back this cash crop in the United States on any such hypothesis.

These are my principal objections to the bill as it was drawn. I repeat that it has been substantially improved since it was drawn. I think my able friend the senior Senator from Colorado fully shares the belief that the bill had to be amended in many aspects. I am perfectly sure that he would not commit his opinion to the original proposition in its original implications and in its original text. There have been substantial and wholly vital changes. In this aspect we have not fought in vain.

As the bill was drawn in the first instance and submitted to us, this is the threat that confronted us in the initial contemplation of the matter. It left solely and exclusively in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture the power to do what he pleased with domestic beet and cane sugar, if, when, and as he might see fit to write its life or death warrant. This sugar commissar, who had been obviously skeptical, to use a very mild word, respecting the utility of our sugar industry, was to have the power of life and death over it, without any restriction or limitation. Meanwhile, the President's message had suggested, as a prospective quota rule, that continental beets be reduced as much as 300,000 tons to a production of not more than 1,400,000 tons. But the decision was wholly in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture.

There was a far-reaching change made in that aspect of the thing as the result of common effort on both sides of the aisle, and common conference at both ends of the Capitol. We finally wrote a clause into the bill which specifically prohibits the reduction of the domestic beet quota below 1,550,000 tons. Thus we not only escaped the unlimited jurisdiction of the Secretary but also won a larger recognition, by 100,000 tons, than the President's message had proposed to grant.

This total of 1,550,000 tons sounds like a great deal of sugar, but it is 200,000 tons less of sugar than was produced in these continental beet areas last year, and if the Secretary shall use this minimum provided in the bill when he writes the quotas for the sugar industry of the United States, if he uses this figure of 1,550,000 tons, he probably decrees the destruction of several sugar mills in the United States, and he decrees the sterility, enforced and arbitrary sterility, of many an agricultural acre in the United States. But it is infinitely better than it was when we had no protection at all. It is better than no bill, if we are to have a reduction in the sugar tariff.

I sought in the first instance, speaking for myself, to make this limitation 2,000,000 tons, which represents our continental sugar-beet capacity. That having failed, I sought to make it 1,750,000 tons, which was last year's production. That having failed, we finally came together upon this 1,550,000 tons. That was in the bill when it passed the House.

May I say for the House also that it very wisely struck another section from the original bill which would have given this new sugar dictator in the Department of Agriculture the right, upon his own authority, to control not only sugar upon the American farm but every other product in connection and in respect thereto. Except as that provision had been stricken from the bill it would have been possible for this sugar dictator to say to a farmer of Michigan that he could not have any sugar benefits unless he was willing to agree to stop milking his cows and shearing his sheep. It would have put the farmer totally and absolutely in all aspects under the domination of the sugar dictator. Mr. President, the other House struck out that provision, and they did a good job when they did it.

The House thought that they did something else; they thought they guaranteed domestic sugar 30 percent of any increased consumption in the United States. What they thought they had agreed to was 30 percent of the increased consumption over and above 6,452,000 tons of sugar, which was the consumption in the United States last year. In other words, the amendment which had been injected into the bill as a result of our—shall we say gentlemen's agreement—as a result of the instructions which were given the drafting clerks of the Department of Agriculture, contemplated the assurance to us of 30 percent of the new consumption in excess of 6,452,000 tons. This was vital. The bill presumably passed the House in that form. After it reached the Senate, and the language had been put under a microscope, it developed that the provision which the House had adopted presumably guaranteeing us 30 percent of the increased consumption, namely, 30 percent of the consumption in excess of 6,452,000 tons, actually permitted the Secretary of Agriculture to estimate the consumption this year, and then to give us 30 percent of the consumption in excess of his estimate. In other words, all in the world he had to do was to boost the estimate a little bit and our 30 percent would not be worth the paper on which it was written. The amendment actually foreclosed us from participation in any share of this increased consumption. I do not call it a joker, but I do call it a most devastating mistake.

I want to say for the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN]—because there is no disagreement between us at any time of the day or night in respect to the good faith with which he and I deal with each other and with this bill—that the Senator from Colorado was just as unwilling to permit that clause to stand as was I or anybody else. So the Senate committee changed that clause, and we now have a warrant for a minimum of 30 percent of the increased consumption in the United States over 6,452,000 tons. That is calculated to be of immense value.

The Senate committee did some other things to improve the situation and make it a little more palatable. In the bill as drawn, as it came to us from the other House, there existed authority in the Secretary of Agriculture to fix a minimum wage in the beet fields upon the beet farms in the United States, a privilege in respect to minimum wages respecting farm commodities which does not exist under any other section of the triple A act, and which has never heretofore been sought. We have never yet sought to fix farm wages.

There has been considerable misunderstanding about this minimum-wage amendment. It does not involve, Mr. President, the contemplation which is ordinarily involved in minimum-wage proposals in industry. I heartily favor minimum-wage proposals in industry. But here is a situation where the farmer's minimum wage may again be the factor that will control the question of whether or not he can remain in the sugar-beet business.

He cannot control the price he gets for his beets; he cannot control the revenue from his operations in respect to this industry. He is dependent, first, upon the retail price of sugar; he is dependent, second, upon his contracts with his processor. If there shall not be enough left after that to reimburse him for his cost of production, it is just too bad; there is not any place for him to get any more. Therefore, if we were to leave in the Secretary of Agriculture the power to fix the minimum wage in respect to beet-sugar production, we would leave with him the power by the simple fixing of an inimical figure absolutely to drive out of production every beet farmer in the United States. It was an utterly insufferable situation which had to be changed, and it was changed by the committee. The average labor cost per acre of sugar beets in the United States is, I believe, about $13. The Labor Department would like to fix it at not less than $20. But that would take away most of the cash benefits to beet farmers contemplated by this plan, because it is part of the plan that the retail price of sugar cannot be raised. This labor-cost increase may well be a problem in reform tomorrow. It manifestly cannot be part of a farm-relief program today.

I am not going to take the Senate's time to go into the other amendments that were made. They were important, and they bear upon the question of whether or not we can reluctantly accept this bill. I think if I had been in the other House and had been there confronted upon a roll call by the bill as it was there tendered, I would have voted, as did most of my Republican colleagues from Michigan, against the bill. I am not so sure now, Mr. President, in the face of all the improvements that have been made in the proposed legislation, in the face of what I believe to be a decided change in the attitude of the Department itself respecting sugar, and in the face of the letter which has just been submitted at the desk from the authenticated representatives and spokesmen of the Michigan sugar industry from both farm and factory—I am not sure that they would not join me now in reluctantly voting for the proposed legislation.

But, Mr. President, I must repeat that this is an amazing contemplation with which to be confronted in an amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act. We do not get the benefit of a processing tax under this bill de novo; we do not get it as a development in constructive marketing attention in behalf of the industry. Why do we get it? We get it only as an offset to a tariff reduction, and we can only have so much as may be measured by whatever tariff reduction shall be made.

Mr. President, I submit again that there is utterly no logic in such a program, and that it is, indeed, a desperate situation which drives us to have any hospitality for such a formula.

I want to add, before it escapes my memory, that another amendment ought to be added to the pending bill on the Senate floor—an amendment to provide the necessary Federal funds to take the domestic sugar carry-over of 300,000 tons off the current market so that the new system may have a maximum chance to function effectively, if this be possible.

In conclusion, I want to point out that there are one or two administrative hazards left, and we may as well face them frankly. There still remains the hazard which is inherent in the necessary subdivision of the continental quota between factories in the 16 or 17 beet-sugar-producing States of the Union. That power rests in the Secretary. If that power be exercised on the basis of the 3-year averages, it may well prove to be a power which will be unfair and fatal to the beet producers and the sugar mills in the eastern area. Why? Because during the depression the mills in the eastern area were down and quiet and silent in far greater degree than were the mills in the western area. For example, in 1931–32, 35 out of 35 factories were operating in the Rocky Mountain territory, but only 7 out of 20 factories were operating in the Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, and Wisconsin territory. Therefore, manifestly, any reliance upon a 3-year average in the redivision of this continental quota would be utterly unfair to the eastern area. I wish to make it plain here and now that I shall protest as long and as loudly as I can, not only in this forum but in the subsequent administrative forum, against any such division in the continental quota on a basis which is unfair to the eastern area.

I tried to get an amendment into the bill which would have been directory in character and which would have instructed the Secretary of Agriculture to maintain, so far as practicable, the existing acreage status by way of the relationship in respect to the sugar acreage East and West as it exists today and as it existed in last year's acreage; but we were utterly unable to agree upon the formula, and therefore that particular hazard is left open.

There is one other hazard, Mr. President, to which no one need close his eyes. If the Secretary of Agriculture shall put continental beets upon the basis of a quota of 1,550,000 tons, he will have stricken down 200,000 tons of production as measured by last year's figures. In the sugar-beet business that reduction of about 12 percent cannot be spread horizontally over the entire area and over the entire production. What it may be necessary to do is to put it all in one place. The reduction cannot be spread horizontally so as to have a number of factories working at less than an efficiency peak; it may be essential to put all the contraction into one factory and into one community around that factory. So, as I view the situation, unless the Secretary of Agriculture shall liberalize this minimum quota which has been set for him in the proposed law, he will be responsible for closing certain factories in the United States completely and for decimating certain acreages completely. I desire to repeat that the whole subject under the terms of this bill is entirely and exclusively in his control. This proposed law will not force him to close one single factory; this proposed law will not force him to deny one single contract for beets with one single farmer. The Secretary can make it possible if he has the vision, he can make it possible if he has the will, for all these factories to operate and for all the farmers again to grow beets.

The decision is squarely up to him. The country has a right to hold him responsible for the decision which may be made. He is an honest, earnest, conscientious official. I do not despair of his further and final conversion to our viewpoint.

Now, just a word in conclusion. Since so much is going to depend upon the attitude and the decision of the Secretary of Agriculture, in this respect, I think it is rather important that the record should be sufficiently complete to illuminate him in respect to the task which he confronts. I want to point out to him solemnly that this is the first time in the history of governments, since the specific days of Frederick the Great in Germany and Napoleon in France, that any government has proposed to turn backward in respect to the development and encouragement of the sugar-beet industry.

Lamartine said that history teaches everything, and I think that history teaches something in respect to the statement I have just made.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield——

Mr. VANDENBERG. Certainly.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Comte said the only thing we learn from history is that we cannot learn from history.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have heard that, too, and I am hoping against hope that the Senator from Minnesota has not described the " brain trust " when it gets ready to administer this bill.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator made the statement that this is the first time in history that any effort has been made to reduce the production of beet sugar or to discourage that industry. I wish to know if he would make the same statement with reference to cane sugar?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am not familiar with the history of cane sugar, and therefore I cannot make the statement; but the cane-sugar factor in the present situation which I am discussing is utterly secondary, with great respect to the State of Louisiana, to the beet-sugar factor, because in the latter factor is involved 1,750,000 tons of production, whereas in the former factor only 260,000 tons of production is involved.

I want to point out that ever since Napoleon discovered that Frederick William III in Germany had successfully experimented with sugar beets there has been just one sugar trend in the world, and that is a forward march in respect to its culture and encouragement. Napoleon discovered, after 10 years of experimental work, not only that France could raise beets but that beet crops were the most valuable collateral corollary crop a farmer could have because of its service and value to the soil.

Within 2 years after Napoleon had initiated the experiment in France he had 334 small beet-sugar factories operating in that land. Napoleon's action marked the beginning of a new and important epoch in the history of the sugar industry. The Governments of Germany, Austria-Hungary, Belgium, the Netherlands, Russia, and other European countries soon began to encourage the establishment and development of the industry, with the result that prior to the outbreak of the World War over 1,200 immense beet-sugar factories were scattered over Europe, producing over 9,000,000 tons of sugar annually, or about one half of the world's supply.

The first successful attempt to grow sugar beets in the United States for sugar-making purposes was in the vicinity of Philadelphia in 1836. The first beet-sugar factory was erected in Northampton, Mass., in 1838, and in the following year this factory produced 1,300 pounds of sugar. No further efforts were made to establish the beet-sugar industry in this country until 1852, when the Mormons of Utah conceived the idea of erecting a beet-sugar factory to supply their own requirements. This undertaking was a striking illustration of the difficulties encountered by the pioneers in the beet-sugar industry. The machinery for the factory was purchased in France and transported in a sailing vessel across the Atlantic and up the Mississippi River to Leavenworth, Kans., whence it was hauled by ox team all the way from Kansas to Utah, a distance of over 1,000 miles.

From 1852 to 1879, 12 beet-sugar factories were erected in this country—5 in California, 2 in Illinois, 2 in Wisconsin, and 1 each in Maine, Massachusetts, and Delaware.

In 1897, however, Congress wisely decided to follow the lead of European governments and establish a definite policy of protection to the domestic sugar industry, with a view to making the United States independent of foreign countries for its sugar supply. With this change of attitude on the part of the Government, capital began to flow into the domestic beet-sugar industry, and by 1903 the number of factories had increased from 6 to 39, while the production of sugar had increased from 45,000 tons in 1896 to 240,000 tons, or over 400 percent in 6 years.

Mr. President, today there are 102 beet-sugar factories erected in this country, located in 17 States, some of them the largest and finest in the world. During the early stages of development of the industry in this country the daily beet-sugar capacity of the plants had averaged from 10 to 60 tons. After the industry had become fairly well established, most of the factories erected had a daily slicing capacity of from 300 to 350 tons of beets. The average daily slicing capacity of the 102 factories now in existence is approximately 1,000 tons, while one of these, the largest beet-sugar factory in the world, has an average daily slicing capacity of 4,500 tons of beets.

The total production of domestic beet sugar increased from 45,000 tons in 1896 to over 1,000,000 tons in 1927, valued at over $120,000,000, the proceeds from the sale of which all revert to American labor and American industry, and that production had risen, I remind the Senate again, to 1,750,000 tons in 1934.

From start to finish it is a progressive record of development, and I repeat that no government since the days of Frederick in Germany and Napoleon in France has ever turned its back on this industry and has ever done anything else save to encourage its expansion. This hour is the first time in all its history that it has been proposed deliberately to cut back sugar-beet production. I must confess, Mr. President, that when it is done on the false theory and assumption that this is an "inefficient", "unnecessarily expensive" industry, although it produces sugar cheaper than it is sold in any other place beneath the stars with four exceptions, I cannot subscribe to that philosophy, and I can go along with the adventure only because, in the face of baneful alternatives, I choose the lesser of evils.

This is what I would do with the sugar industry if I had a right to write the program: First, I would allow the continental production to be whatever it could be by the natural law. I would not apply a restriction to it within the continental United States at all.

Second, I would put quota limitations upon external sugar raised under the flag, dealing necessarily on a special basis with Hawaii in this connection.

Third, I would provide a sliding-scale tariff which would take the sugar-tariff question out of Congress and out of our economics for keeps, a sliding-scale sugar tariff in which the rate would go up when the price went down and the rate would go down when the price went up. Under that sort of program I would hope and expect there might be developed still further the agrarian prosperity that resides in the successful and prosperous sugar-beet industry.

But, Mr. President, that is not the program that impends. The program before us is in the bill which I have dissected at far greater length than I had anticipated when I rose. My position upon it is clearly obvious. My conclusion in respect to it is the conclusion submitted in the letter which was read from the desk, submitted by the authenticated and authoritative spokesman for the beet farmers and the beet processors of the State of Michigan.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he takes his seat?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I desire to ask the Senator just one question. Assuming that this measure will pass, what relief will it afford against the pending legislation in reference to bargaining tariffs, if that should pass?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No relief whatever.

Mr. FESS. That is my understanding.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is simply a pyramided hazard which we shall have to confront when we reach it.

Mr. OVERTON obtained the floor.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, when the Senator from Michigan referred to this proposed legislation as the first effort to restrict domestic production, did he have in mind the voluntary stabilization agreement much discussed last fall by continental sugar interests?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I did not have it in mind, but it does not conflict in any degree, if I understand the situation, because I think the voluntary stabilization agreement to which the Senator refers contemplated a quota of 1,750,000 tons for the continental United States, which was a maintenance of the existing status. Am I correct in that? If I am, it seems to me that the Senator but proves my point.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It contemplated a domestic beet-sugar quota of 1,750,000 tons; and this year we have found in the beet-sugar "bag", as sugar men say, 1,756,000 tons of sugar. In other words, the much-praised stabilization agreement to which the Senator has referred would itself, in fact, have resulted in a restriction of last year's domestic production of beet sugar. It is a trivial difference, to be sure, but it illustrates the principle.

Mr. VANDENBERG. According to the Senator's statement—and I have no purpose to quarrel with him—the stabilization agreement would have curtailed this year's production by 6,000 tons, whereas the pending bill contemplates a curtailment of 200,000 tons.

Mr. President, I shall hope for the best when this legislation gets to work. I prayerfully commend a review of the whole subject to the President and his Secretary of Agriculture before any sugar-tariff protection is withdrawn and before any quota restrictions shall stunt beet-sugar culture in the continental United States.

Mr. President, during the course of his earnest discussion——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] has been recognized.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Pardon me; I did not hear that done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. OVERTON. Certainly.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I desire to comment briefly on an exchange of views between the Senator from Michigan and myself. Will the Senator from Louisiana yield for that purpose?

Mr. OVERTON. Yes; I yield, gladly.

Mr. COSTIGAN. During the course of the earnest discussion of the Senator from Michigan reference was made by him to so-called "compulsory support" of the pending measure by beet farmers of Michigan. Confirming what I then stated, and in further support of my contention that the endorsement of the pending measure in Michigan, no less than in the trans-Mississippi west, by beet farmers is voluntary and not compulsory, I wish to read two or three extracts from letters in my possession, written by Mr. E. O. Compton, president of the Mount Clemens Sugar Beet Growers' Association, with headquarters at Mount Clemens, Mich.

Mr. Compton, with whom I am not personally acquainted, on March 3, 1934, wrote me in part as follows:

Since June 15, 1933, I have been engaged in making applications to the Federal land bank for mortgages held by 17 banks and 1 trust company in 3 counties. Due to my farm activities the Macomb County Bankers' Association selected me to assist the farmers in making out their applications to the Federal land bank, the banks paying the expense, also the necessary appraisal fee, so you may readily see that I have had an extensive contact with the farmers of this community, and I would honestly say that the general opinion is that the present administration is making it possible for these farmers to keep their farms, reducing their interest rates, and in a great many cases a large percentage of their entire obligation, and they feel grateful as well as obligated, and stand by ready to accept any program that might be advanced by our President.

Attached to the letter from which I have read, received from Mr. Compton, was a copy of another letter written on February 27, 1934, by Mr. Compton as president of the Mount Clemens Sugar Beet Growers' Association, in which he said:

At the present time I am president of the Mount Clemens Sugar Beet Growers' Association. Also secretary and treasurer of the Michigan, Ohio, and Indiana Beet Growers' Association. These associations are beet growers' associations, consisting of the farmers who actually grow sugar beets in the States of Michigan, Ohio, and Indiana.

Since the sugar-quota plan has been advanced by the President I have had an occasion to talk personally with over 200 local beet growers, and I have not found one of them who is opposed to working out a plan that would benefit all people concerned in relation to the sugar business of this State. I also personally know that the telegrams and letters that you have received from this locality from various beet growers have been sent by men who were selected to send these communications by the owners of the sugar mills of this State. I am sorry to state that these telegrams and requests do not truly reflect the feeling that exists in the rank and file of the beet growers of these States but are only a group of men who are closely allied with the mill owners.

I could go into a lengthy discussion as to what has happened in this State in regard to the growing of sugar beets for the last 15 years, but I feel sure that you have at hand probably more information than I could give you, but the following statement could be easily proven and might be of interest to you:

A group of not exceeding six or seven men operated directly or indirectly 14 of the sugar mills of this State last year with a net earning of between three and four million dollars, while 80 percent of the farmers who delivered beets to these factories, after receiving their $4 advance payment, did not have sufficient funds to pay the field labor, seed, fertilizer, and trucking expense entailed by the delivery of the beets to the mill, and are compelled under the present existing contracts to wait until September 1, 1934, to receive payment on crops which were planted in April of 1933.

I have been president of the Mount Clemens Sugar Beet Growers' Association 2 years and secretary and treasurer of the Michigan, Ohio, and Indiana Beet Growers' Association for 2 years, own and operate my own farm of 260 acres at Mount Clemens, Mich., so I may be termed a "true dirt farmer".

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, after the very able, interesting, and illuminating discussion of the sugar bill by both the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], not only as to its details but as to its general aspects, I expect this afternoon to confine my remarks regarding the bill largely to an amendment which I think should be adopted.

I realize that it is extremely difficult to prepare a bill on a subject where there are so many conflicting interests as there are in the sugar industry. I think the committees of the House and of the Senate, and the Senators from States interested in the sugar industry, are to be congratulated upon the painstaking, industrious, patient, and able handling of this measure.

The bill is perhaps not entirely satisfactory to any one Representative or to any one Senator from a State interested in the sugar industry. It is an attempt to reconcile differences that exist between continental producers of sugar in the United States, if there are any conflicts of interest between domestic producing areas. It is also an attempt to reconcile, as far as possible, conflicting interests in the production of sugar in the mainland of the United States and in our insular possessions and areas. It is also an attempt to adjust the sugar industry with respect to world conditions as they exist today.

Representing in part the State of Louisiana, which is the third largest sugar-producing State in the Union, there are some provisions of the bill which I should like to see altered. There is one amendment in particular which I should like to have adopted. With the adoption of that amendment, notwithstanding that the bill is not entirely satisfactory to myself as representing one of the big sugar-producing areas in the United States, I expect to vote for the bill.

The bill as reported by the Senate Committee on Finance contains an amendment, to be found on page 11, section 4, paragraph (D). The bill as passed by the House authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to "establish a separate quota or quotas for edible molasses and/or for sirup or cane juice produced in continental United States, in addition to the quotas established pursuant to paragraphs (A) and (B)."

The purpose of that provision, as I understand it, was to enact that a separate quota may be established by the Secretary of Agriculture for the production of edible molasses and cane sirup in continental United States that would be in addition to the quotas which are assigned in other portions of the bill for continental United States production.

Sugar is defined in the bill as follows:

The term "sugar" means sugar in any form whatsoever, derived from sugar beets or sugar cane, whether raw sugar or direct-consumption sugar, including also edible molasses, sirups, and any mixture containg sugar (except blackstrap molasses and beet molasses).

Therefore, under this definition of sugar, a quota assigned would include edible molasses, sirup, and any mixture containing sugar. Hence the bill as passed by the House provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall have authority to establish a separate quota for cane sirup and edible molasses produced in continental United States.

The Senate Committee on Finance has amended paragraph (D), on page 11, to which I have referred, by inserting therein the words "and/or for edible molasses, sirups, and sugar mixtures", not simply in addition to but "as part of." Therefore, under the Senate committee amendment, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to establish a separate quota for edible molasses, sirups, and sugar mixtures either as a part of or in addition to the quotas established under the bill.

Hence, as far as Louisiana and Florida are concerned, which go largely into the manufacture of cane sirups and edible molasses, the edible molasses and cane sirup produced in those two States can, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be considered as constituting a part of their quota of 260,000 tons.

Not only that, but, according to my view, it upsets the quotas which are established by the bill for off-shore sugar, because it permits the Secretary to establish an additional quota for all off-shore sugar, or additional quotas for that kind of sugar which will consist of edible molasses, sirups, and sugar mixtures. Therefore, the Philippine Islands, or Cuba, or Hawaii, may enjoy the quota that is contemplated in the President's message, and, in addition to that, there may be assigned to them quotas for edible molasses and for cane sirup and for sugar mixtures to be brought into the United States, which edible molasses and cane sirup can, after being brought into the United States, be manufactured into sugar proper, and therefore increase their quotas.

Mr. President, at the proper time I intend to offer an amendment to correct what I consider a defect in the bill in reference not only to Louisiana and Florida cane sirup and edible molasses, because those can be included under this amendment in the quotas assigned to that cane-producing area, but also in order to prevent an increase in the quotas of off-shore sugar.

The Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Colorado, in their very able remarks in respect to this measure, have dealt almost exclusively with beet sugar. I wish to make some observations with respect to cane sugar and its production in Louisiana.

Louisiana today is not only the third largest producing sugar State in the Union but it is also the pioneer State in the sugar industry. The Senator from Michigan in his remarks referred to the fact that not since the days of Napoleon and of Frederick the Great had there been any effort, until this bill was introduced, to discourage the sugar industry. I may say, by way of parentheses, that I did not look upon this bill as an effort to discourage the sugar industry. I look upon it as an effort on the part of the Department of Agriculture, its Secretary and its experts, and on the part of the members of the different committees in the House and in the Senate who had this bill in charge to undertake to stabilize this industry, because of the unfortunate condition in which it finds itself.

I do not think it is the purpose of the Secretary of Agriculture to discourage the production of sugar on the mainland of the United States. I think the Secretary of Agriculture, when he undertakes to administer the bill, will have in mind the statement contained in the bill as to the policy of the measure in respect to the sugar industry. That policy is declared in section 4, as follows:

SEC. 4. Section 8 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 8a. (1) Having due regard to the welfare of domestic producers and to the protection of domestic consumers and to a just relation between the prices received by domestic producers and the prices paid by domestic consumers, the Secretary of Agriculture may, in order to effectuate the declared policy of this act, from time to time, by orders or regulations"—

And so forth.

Therefore, Mr. President, the declared policy of the bill, the main policy of the bill, as set forth in the paragraph which I have just quoted, is to maintain due regard to the welfare of domestic producers of sugar in the United States, as well as a due regard for the welfare of consumers, and a just relation between the prices received by domestic producers and the prices paid by domestic consumers.

As I started to say a moment ago, the sugar industry is an old industry in the State of Louisiana. We were producing sugar in Louisiana commercially right after the American Revolution. Sugarcane was introduced into Louisiana long before the American Revolution. In spite of difficulties and in spite of obstacles, it has grown and developed through the years. It is an industry around which the economic life and the industrial life of all the southern portions of the State of Louisiana revolve. It is an industry upon which very largely has been built the business of the great port of New Orleans.

I have stated that this bill was not completely satisfactory to Louisiana producers, Louisiana manufacturers, and Louisiana refiners. The quota assigned to Louisiana and Florida is 260,000 tons, but Louisiana normally produces over 300,000 tons of sugar.

I wish to read into the RECORD statistics covering the years when the yield in the State of Louisiana was in excess of 300,000 short tons of raw sugar.

In 1907–8 Louisiana produced 394,240 short tons; in 1908–9, 414,400; in 1909–10, 375,200; in 1910–11, 355,040; in 1911–12, 360,874; in 1913–14, 300,537; in 1916–17, 310,900; in 1921–22, 324,429.

It was about the time of the World War, Mr. President, that the Federal Government, undertaking certain experiments in reference to the production of sugarcane in the State of Louisiana, imported certain varieties of cane into that State which were subsequently found to be infected with what is known as the "mosaic disease." That cane was planted in different areas of the Sugar Bowl of Louisiana, and it gradually resulted in an infection of the sugarcane of Louisiana.

As the result of this mosiac disease, sugarcane production in Louisiana dropped down until in 1926–27 we produced only 47,165 tons. But the Federal Government has aided us in introducing new varieties of cane into Louisiana that are disease resisting. We are planting that cane, and as a result we are gradually getting out of the difficulty in which we found ourselves by reason of the abnormal decrease in production growing out of the infection of our sugarcane by mosiac disease, so that in recent years we have been getting back to normalcy.

In 1930–31 we produced 210,094 tons of raw sugar; in 1931–32, 180,239; in 1932–33, 222,760; in 1933–34 we have produced, according to the latest authentic figures, 214,455 and not 208,000, as usually quoted.

It is estimated that during the year 1934–35 we shall produce somewhere between 230,000 and 257,000 short tons, or, in other words, approximately 240,000 tons.

I wish in this connection, Mr. President, to send to the desk a letter from Mr. Reginald Dykers, vice president and general manager of the American Sugar Cane League, under date of April 10, 1934, addressed to Secretary Wallace, giving the actual production of sugar in Louisiana during the last season, which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD immediately following the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COUZENS in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. OVERTON. Florida has been increasing her production of sugar. The sugar industry was established in Florida in comparatively very recent years. She produced something over 40,000 short tons during the year 1933–34; possibly as high as 50,000 tons. In 1932–33 she produced 36,000 short tons.

Statistics show that the average production in the State of Louisiana during the pre-war basic period was something over 330,000 tons. When, therefore, we take the production of Louisiana in normal times of, say, 330,000 tons a year, and add thereto the production of Florida of something like 50,000 tons, we have about 380,000 tons annual production for both States. I think I can state conservatively that there is during normal production an annual yield in this sugarcane area in the United States of well over 360,000 short tons of raw sugar.

Yet, Mr. President, I stand here, representing in part the sugarcane producing area of the United States, and state that under all the circumstances, considering all the difficulties surrounding this bill, I am willing to accept, so far as I am personally concerned, the assigned quota of 260,000 short tons.

I would have much preferred that a separate quota be assigned to Louisiana and a separate quota be assigned to Florida, but I know that if that suggestion were made, and if that suggestion were acted upon, the States producing beet sugar would want separate quotas assigned to them. Colorado, California, and Michigan would all come in and ask for separate quotas, and we would be thrown into hopeless confusion.

So, Mr. President, I am not going to make any fight in reference to the quota which has been assigned to Louisiana and Florida, and I am not, under the circumstances, going to undertake to have those two States divided into separate areas.

I think the great difficulty that is confronting the sugar industry in the continental United States is due to the vast increase of production in our insular areas. According to the United States Tariff Commission, the 1919 production in the insular areas of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Islands was only 1,237,000 short tons. Of those 1,237,000 tons there was brought into the United States 84.2 percent. But in 1932, 13 years later, this production of sugar in our insular areas had increased from 1,237,000 short tons to 3,124,000 short tons, or practically three times the quantity produced in 1919. The ratio of receipts into the mainland of the United States to production in the insular areas had risen to 94.8 percent as compared with 84.2 percent in 1919.

Breaking down those figures somewhat, we have this interesting information: The Philippine Islands increased their production during the same period, from 1919 to 1932, from 219,000 short tons to 1,102,000 short tons and increased their percentage of imports into the United States of their production from 40.2 percent to 94.4 percent; in other words, their production has multiplied more than five times, and the ratio of their imports into the United States to their production has been more than doubled.

During the same period Puerto Rico has increased her production from 400,000 short tons to 992,000 short tons. Hawaii has increased her production from 602,000 tons to 1,025,000 tons. While during this same period, from 1919 to 1932, continental production has increased less than 100 percent, the insular production has increased approximately 200 percent, while during the same period continental production has increased less than 1,000,000 tons, insular production has increased approximately 2,000,000 short tons.

Mr. President, when I consider those figures, when I contemplate the advantage which these insular and offshore areas enjoy in the growing and in the manufacture and in the refining of sugar by reason of their climatic conditions as well as the fertility of their soil, and by reason of the cheapness of their labor, both in field and in factory, and when I realize that this tremendous increase in production in the insular areas has resulted in an enormous increase during recent years in the importations into the mainland of the United States duty free of sugar, both raw and refined, coming into competition with American growers of continental United States, and coming into competition with the laborers both in the field and in the factory, if I had my way about it in respect to this bill, I am frank to say that I would undertake to protect, first and foremost, and to encourage first and foremost, the production and growing of sugar in the continental United States by the continental farmer and its manufacture and its refining by American labor. If I had my way about it, I think the theory of the bill that I would propose would be for the Secretary of Agriculture to estimate annually the consumption requirements of the continental United States—and the pending bill relates to consumption requirements in continental United States—then to estimate what would be produced by the American growers in continental United States, deduct that amount from the consumption requirements, and distribute the residue as quotas for offshore importation and induction of sugar.

However, as I stated in the beginning of my remarks, I know that we are brought face to face with very perplexing problems; we are brought face to face with certain facts, various conflicting interests, various ideas and theories and thoughts upon this question, and I think perhaps, after all, considering all these grave difficulties, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] and the Finance Committee of the Senate have brought out about as workable a bill as in this year of our Lord 1934 can be framed and enacted into law, subject, of course, Mr. President, to the amendments which I have suggested in the beginning of my remarks.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The able Senator from Louisiana, of course, recognizes that in dealing with the problem of offshore sugar, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and even the Philippines for historic or constitutional reasons, regard themselves as being part of the United States, and that some qualification must be allowed in completing a legislative program of this sort on that account?

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I realize that fact, and I realize that they are American citizens; that they are under the American flag. I realize that they have certain natural advantages that we do not possess here on the mainland in reference to climatic conditions that are peculiarly conducive to the production of sugar. I also realize—and I made the same comment the other day in dealing with the excise tax on oils brought into the United States—that the American capital that goes into those insular areas to exploit them for their own benefit and for their own aggrandizement ought not to undertake to pay mere subsistence wages to their laborers who are willing or forced to live in grass huts, who are willing to clothe themselves with a loin cloth, and whose standards of living are far below what we have here in the United States and what we hope to maintain in the continental United States. When I realize that the people in those insular areas, so far as the record goes, are apparently willing to submit themselves to such conditions, to being underpaid as laborers, to being underfed, to being underclad, resulting in a cheap production of commodities that come into competition with the products of the American farmer and the American laborer and the American manufacturer; when I realize that the situation thus brought about produces a conflict between the interests of those insular areas and the interests of continental United States and that the farmers and laborers of the continental United States are not responsible at all for that condition, and where that conflict is irreconcilable and I have got to make the choice, I am going to take my stand with the farmer in these United States of America; I am going to take my stand with the laborer in the continental United States.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator first permit me to ask a question of his colleague?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The junior Senator from Louisiana, of course, recognizes that the primary purpose of this bill is to give assurance of living minimum returns to the American producers of sugar?

Mr. OVERTON. I realize that.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the junior Senator from Louisiana yield to his colleague?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield to the senior Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I merely want to suggest to my friend from Colorado, as well as to my colleague, that this is not entirely a fight between the insular interests and our own interests. As a matter of fact the same interests in America would be perfectly willing to depress the status of our local sugar grower to where he would be no more than a peasant like the Filipino. They would like to see the industry reduced to a slave basis. They would have no objection whatever to having the same peasantry exist among our own people that there is among the Filipinos.

Mr. OVERTON. I think my colleague, the senior Senator from Louisiana, makes a very correct observation.

That was the thought I was trying in my feeble way to convey to the Senate, depicting at least what my reaction is to the situation and my attitude and my view.

Mr. President, I do not wish the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] to think that in these reflections I am making any invidious comments or observations with reference to the bill which has been under his particular and very able and very conscientious care. I know that he has just as much interest as I have, in a representative capacity, in the production of sugar in the continental United States.

Mr. President, passing for a moment from that phase of the subject, the President has stated in his message that—

> The annual gross value of the sugar crop to the American beet and cane growers is approximately $60,000,000. Those who believe in the further importation of sugar say the 2-cents-per-pound tariff is levied mostly to protect the $60,000,000 crop and that it costs our consuming public every year more than $200,000,000 to afford this protection.

I am not going to take issue with the President in respect to the figures he has given; but in speaking of the annual gross value of the sugar crop he refers to the gross value to the growers and not to the industry as a whole in the United States. After the sugar leaves the field, either in the form of cane or in the form of beets, it goes to the factory and is processed, and that gives employment to thousands upon thousands of laborers.

To go hastily through this phase of the question, if we figure the manufactured price of sugar at, say, 4 cents per pound, which would be $80 a short ton, and realize that we are producing here in the United States approximately 2,000,000 short tons, we find we have a gross yield of $160,000,000 in the continental United States instead of $60,000,000 as stated by the President.

If we go further and adopt the suggestion thrown out by the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], which in a large sense is a proper one, and take into consideration the value to other American citizens of this industry in Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Islands, we have a production of 3,000,000 more short tons in those insular areas, making a total American production of 5,000,000 tons, which, at $80 a ton, brings the gross yield of $400,000,000 to the American interests in the production and manufacture of sugar.

Mr. President, there is another thing to consider when we come to estimate the cost of this industry. Sugar has been steadily yielding us a revenue through customs duties. It has been producing practically one fourth of the total customs receipts of the United States. I send to the desk and ask to have incorporated in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a statement showing the tariff revenues derived from sugar and the tariff revenues derived from all imports into the United States from the year 1929 to the year 1933, both inclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

Tariff revenues, computed on total imports

Year[1]	Sugar	All imports	Percent
1929	$129,526,461	$584,772,212	22+
1930	115,121,253	461,885,516	24+
1931	98,329,067	370,770,650	26+
1932	74,156,781	259,599,770	28+
1933	65,589,596	288,157,787	23+

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, in addition to the fact that sugar normally yields us as a revenue producer something over $100,000,000 a year, in addition to the consideration that it yields approximately one fourth of our total tariff revenue, it is to be borne in mind that if we were to repeal the customs duties on the importation of foreign sugar we would have to resort to some other form of taxation in order to supply the deficiency resulting from that repeal.

But we are not the only country that imposes a revenue tariff on sugar. In a great many other countries there is not only imposed a tariff upon the importation of sugar, but there is imposed a consumption tax because sugar is regarded as being one of the best revenue producers of all commodities. In Italy there is a tariff of 2.75 cents per pound and a consumption tax of 9.07 cents per pound. In France there is a tariff of 2.94 cents per pound and a consumption tax of 1.12 cents per pound. In Poland there is a tariff of 4.58 cents per pound and a consumption tax of 7 cents per pound. In Austria there is a tariff of 2.35 cents per pound and a consumption tax of 1.85 cents per pound. These figures are taken from the sugar reference book and directory for 1932–33 and relate to raw sugar.

As a matter of fact, Mr. President, in spite of the fact that we have a tariff on sugar, sugar is about as cheap as any food consumed in the United States. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has read into the RECORD figures showing the prices of sugar as retailed in different countries of Europe, Africa, and Asia. Those figures show that the cost of sugar to the housewife in continental United States is approximately one half what it is to the housewife in Europe. Those figures show that the retail price of sugar in continental United States is less than in any other country except England, Denmark, Japan, and Java. The prices in those countries are around 4 cents per pound, practically the same as in the United States.

It has been stated, and I presume it is correct, that if based on the ratio of calory contents and value of food calories contained in a pound of sugar at 5 cents a pound, butter would sell over the counter at 10.95 cents per pound instead of 35 cents per pound; bacon would sell at 8.45 cents per pound instead of 29 cents per pound; lamb would sell at 3.95 cents per pound instead of 47 cents per pound; and milk at 2.04 cents per quart instead of 13 cents per quart.

Therefore, Mr. President, I do not know that I can find myself subscribing to the view that the sugar industry in the United States is an expensive industry. Sugar is cheaper here than in practically every other country in the world. The tariff duties that we levy on it produce a tremendous revenue, equivalent to around one fourth of our total customs revenue. It is not only an industry that ought to be encouraged from the standpoint of encouraging the American farmer and the American factory but it is also a necessity.

Continental production of sugar is especially necessary to the United States in time of war. That thought was vividly brought home to us when we were engaged in the World War, and had to economize as much as possible in the use of sugar. That lesson was brought to Great Britain during the World War. At that time she was producing no sugar; but with her far-seeing vision she has proceeded to encourage, not to discourage, that industry. She proceeded to establish it in the British Isles and in Ireland. Starting during the World War without any production at all, she is now producing something like half a million short tons of raw sugar a year.

There is, therefore, according to my way of thinking, every reason why this industry ought to be encouraged in the United States; every reason why the production, manufacturing and refining of sugar in continental United States ought to be encouraged. I repeat the position I took a while ago: If there comes an irreconcilable conflict between the production and manufacture of sugar in the continental United States and in other areas, I purpose to take my stand with the encouragement and the promotion of that industry in the mainland of this country. As I stated at the outset, with the adoption of the amendment I propose, and with the understanding I entertain in respect to when this bill will go into effect, as stated to me by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], who has the bill in charge—that it will go into effect in respect to quotas for the year 1934 on January 1, 1934—I expect to support the bill. It is not the best possible bill. It does not entirely conform to my views of what ought to be done, but it is the best we can do now. I hope that in the years to come, basing our future views upon the experience in the administration of this measure, we shall be able to perfect it and perfect its administration in the United States, and that ultimately this legislative step which I feel sanguine we are about to take, will result in an encouragement of one of the great agricultural industries of this country, and in a permanent stabilization of it as the years roll on.

EXHIBIT A

AMERICAN SUGARCANE LEAGUE,
New Orleans, La., April 10, 1934.

Hon. HENRY A. WALLACE,
United States Department of Agriculture,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: It seems proper at this time for me to state to you that a thorough canvass just completed by this organization shows a production of 214,455 short tons of sugar (raw value) in Louisiana during the last campaign.

Mr. L. L. Janes, of the Bureau of Crop and Livestock Estimates here, has not yet issued his final report on the production of sugar in Louisiana during the last campaign but did issue a preliminary report or forecast December 27, 1933, before the campaign was over, in which he estimated the production at 202,000 short tons of sugar. This figure has been generally used since then as the most authoritative one available, but Mr. Janes does not, in his reports on Louisiana sugar production, reduce his figures to raw value, and his prediction of 202,000 short tons is thus misleading if considered without due analysis.

The actual production of sugar in Louisiana last campaign, according to reports received by us from each factory was as follows:

	Short tons
Raws	136,074
Crystals	[1] 13,547
Turbinados	[1] 6,088
Washed raws	[1] 1,500
Granulated	[1] 51,527
String sugars	[1] 5,719
Total	[2] 214,455

In reducing the different grades of sugar mentioned above to raw value we used the polarizations given on the returns made to us, or, where none were given, we assumed that crystals polarized 98.5, washed raws 98, seconds and thirds 92 and 90, respectively, and we used 107 pounds of raws as being the equivalent of 100 pounds of granulated. To this may be added the sugar in our sirup and edible molasses equivalent to 31,214 short tons, 96° raw value.

In determining the total sugar content of sirup and edible molasses we assumed an average density of 39.5 Baumé for sirup with 65.6 percent total sugars. For first molasses we assumed 42 Baumé with 66.3 percent total sugars, and for second molasses 42.5 Baumé with 60.5 percent total sugars.

The only other product is blackstrap. We have not attempted to reduce that to a total sugar basis. The number of gallons of blackstrap produced, according to our careful and complete canvass, was 10,832,639.

Yours truly,

REGINALD DYKERS,
Vice President and General Manager.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, memorializing Congress to amend the Securities Act of 1933 by eliminating all of its civil liability provisions, to the end that business, by being permitted to finance itself, may thereby be in a position to finance employment when the ability of the Government so to do is exhausted, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. COPELAND.)

Mr. WALSH presented a statement prepared by Hon. L. L. MCCANDLESS, Delegate from Hawaii, averring that "the Territory of Hawaii should in all fairness be given equal treatment in the fixing of a quota in the Costigan-Jones sugar bill as that accorded mainland producers", which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a letter signed by the recording secretary of Branch 18, National Association of Letter Carriers, of New Bedford, Mass., stating, "The officers and members of Branch 18, National Association of Letter Carriers, wish to extend to you their appreciation and thanks for your support given them in the independent offices bill pertaining to Federal employees", which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Holyoke Central Labor Union, of Holyoke, and Local Union No. 145, United Association of Journeyman Plumbers and Steam Fitters, of Medford, in the State of Massachusetts, favoring the passage of the so-called "Wagner-Lewis bill", pertaining to unemployment insurance, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COPELAND presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

STATE OF NEW YORK,
IN SENATE,
Albany, April 11, 1934.

By Mr. H. L. O'Brien

Whereas it is the judgment of eminent economists and practical business executives that business recovery is retarded by the inability of manufacturing and commercial establishments throughout the country to obtain operating capital, thereby unnecessarily continuing and aggravating the deplorable unemployment situation which has brought so much suffering and deprivation to millions of workers and their families; and

Whereas it is generally conceded that manufacturing and commercial executives have, in the main, cooperated sincerely with the National Government in the effort to relieve suffering and bring business back to a stable and economically sound normalcy; and

Whereas it is now generally conceded that the operation of the Federal Securities Act of 1933 has interfered with the orderly recovery of business: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the Congress of the United States be and the same hereby is respectfully memorialized to amend the Securities Act of 1933 by eliminating all of its civil-liability provisions to the end that business, by being permitted to finance itself, may thereby be in a position to finance employment when the ability of the Government so to do is exhausted; and be it further

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of the United States Senate, and to each Member of Congress elected from the State of New York.

By order of the senate.

MARGUERITE O'CONNELL, Clerk.

In assembly April 12, 1934.
Concurred in without amendment.
By order of the assembly.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

ECONOMY AND TAXATION—ADDRESS BY SENATOR METCALF

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] over a national radio network last Friday night on the subject of Economy and Taxation.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ECONOMY AND TAXATION

Two things are certain for all men. They are death and taxes. The problem of revenue for the business of government is as old as organized society. The United States was founded with a simple system of direct taxes. During the short period of our existence we have built up a veritable spider web of taxation. We start paying taxes as soon as we get up in the morning and we continue to pay all day, until at night we switch off the tax on electricity and go into a troubled sleep. As yet no man has devised a manner to place a tax on that. Since the beginning of the Nation taxes have each year been eating away more and more of our national income. The percentage of our income which has been expended for the business of government has increased as the Nation progressed. During the past few years the momentum of this increase has gained by leaps and bounds. In 1913 the total cost of all forms of government in the United States was approximately $3,000,000,000, but in this year it will approach $18,000,000,000. In other words, in the last 20 years the proportion of the earnings of the American people which have been used by various branches of the Government has mounted from 9 percent to something like 40 percent. Who would have thought 5 years ago there would be lobbyists in Washington trying to get legislation through that would permit our cities and towns to go bankrupt?

The average American citizen fails to realize that he is paying more than one third of all he earns to the Government in one form or the other. The true facts are hidden by the intricate system of taxation peculiar to the United States. But actually every dollar we expend bears its toll of excise, income, corporation, property, and processing taxes. The cost of an article cannot be broken down into materials, labor, profit, and taxes, but if this could be accurately accomplished we would find that by far the greater part of our dollar is used for the business of government. By the business of government, of course, I include such very necessary functions as the operation of our schools, our police and our fire departments.

Taxation is power. Not only have the costs of government ascended with startling rapidity but there has been a pronounced movement of power concentration toward a central government. Authority has moved with systematic progression from the old-fashioned town meeting to the States, eventually to the Federal Government, and now to the President of the United States. In other words, we are drifting from pure democracy to dictatorship. Events of the past year have more than emphasized this fact. The tremendous acceleration toward the investment of a central authority with the powers of taxation and regulation of society is something we would not have believed could exist 5 years ago.

The time has been particularly ripe for a movement of this nature. The country has been in the throes of a depression and the people have turned in desperation to any new school of thought or any new and drastic proposal which might be made as a panacea for our economic ills. The trend toward abdication of the democracy in favor of a dictatorship is exemplified by transfer to the Executive in two distinct ways. The first is the power to tax. The second is the power to control. The tariff bill now pending in this Congress gives the President the power to enter into trade agreements with foreign nations. He will be clothed with the authority to enforce and encourage the objections of these agreements through the taxing power and through power to remove trade restrictions and import barriers. He will be able to reduce or increase tariffs by 50 percent. He will be authorized to remove all restrictions on importations from abroad. He can remove excise taxes and processing taxes which have been imposed for the purpose of regulating importations. The purpose of this bill is to encourage the importation into the United States of some commodities in order that we might sell others abroad. The Secretary of Agriculture has already publicly stated that the manufacture of finer textiles in the United States is slated for destruction should this bill become law. He states that the manufacture of lace, for example, is a business which is inefficient in this country and, consequently, we should permit the Chinese and French to furnish us with laces. The President can reduce tariffs on these commodities by 50 percent, as well as wipe off the books all import restrictions in regard to them.

Thus, he will have the power to put 20,000 workers in the lace and embroidery plants of the United States out of work. In many cases these are people who know how to do nothing else. Where will they turn for jobs? The millions of dollars which people have invested in machinery and equipment for manufacturing enterprises will be sacrificed on the altar of foreign trade. To invest any one man with such tremendous powers is most unwise. It is most certainly un-American. Constitutional principles have been ignored in the drafting of such legislation. Who can tell what industries, built up after years of painstaking effort, will be closed by these dangerous experiments. Thus, the tariff bill alone gives to the Executive the power to tax, the power to remove taxes, and the power to regulate industry as great as any dictator on the face of the earth. The Government is now going into industrial competition with industries which it may tax out of business. The whole country must pay taxes for unwise public management.

I have already mentioned that the second indication of the establishment of the centralization of power is the concentration of the authority to impose taxes. The President today, through the Secretary of Agriculture, is clothed with the authority to impose processing taxes upon basic commodities produced in the United States. To carry it still further, he is given the power to tax any competing product.

Throughout this session of Congress we have been engaged in the business of appropriating money. Billions of dollars are being squandered in excess of the actual income of the Government. Prosperity cannot be brought about by taxation. It cannot be brought about by throwing the Nation deeper and deeper into debt. We are creating an artificial situation where the Government is mortgaging its very existence in an endeavor to pour billions of dollars into a temporary business stimulation. We heard much in the last campaign about economy. Today that much publicized economy program is camouflaged by twin budgets. We are told in Washington that we have one budget for emergency purposes and another for the normal business of government. On the one hand, the normal budget is supposed to be reduced in the name of economy, while, on the other, we have a budget for emergency purposes which is so fat it staggers, but we hide the sins of the one behind the skirts of the other. I believe there is not a person in Washington who has the slightest idea what the normal expenses of government are at this time. There is so much juggling of accounts, so much blaming of one budget for the sins of the other, so much pretense of economy on the one hand and wasteful spending on the other, that it leaves us quite bewildered.

Sometime ago the annual appropriation to take care of veterans wounded or disabled during the World War was considered by the Congress. The President vetoed the act of Congress on the ground that it was a wasteful expenditure of money and not in line with his economy program. Much was said about an increase of over $200,000,000 in the normal budget. When the Congress passed this bill over the Executive veto, and when the complete story was told, it was found that the appropriations for veterans were actually only $20,000,000 in excess of what the Administration had agreed was just. Furthermore, to make the situation a little more ironical, Senator VANDENBERG of Michigan read into the RECORD a quotation from remarks of the Speaker of the House of Representatives as he left the White House on Friday, March 30. Speaker RAINEY is quoted as saying: "The President intended to do by Executive order exactly what the bill proposes by the end of the year. Under the President's plan almost all veterans cut off the rolls by the economy bill would have been restored." If that is true the only damage done by the passage of the bill over the President's veto was that it deprived the Administration of some political prestige.

A shining example of this 2-budget system of camouflage is the Bureau of Ordnance, in the War Department. The appropriation for this Bureau was reduced by some three million dollars by the Administration in carrying out its economy program. However, the other hand reached into the pocket of the Budget's twin sister, the emergency budget, took out $6,000,000 in Public Works funds, and gave it to the Bureau of Ordnance. This money is to be used for the purchase of ammunition. In any ordinary year ammunition is charged as a part of the ordinary expenses of government. There has been some four hundred and eighty-seven million dollars of emergency funds which are charged to the so-called "emergency budget" being expended on Federal projects. The Department of Agriculture no longer carries the tremendous appropriations for public roads on its ordinary budget. In all past years this has been a part of the expenditures of that Department. Thus the economy program has affected the Department of Agriculture by giving it $400,000,000 from the Public Works funds. In past years appropriations for the Bureau of Yards and Docks have been carried as a part of the ordinary expenses of government. This year these funds are being supplied from the emergency budget. The same situation is true throughout the myriad of Government bureaus, commissions, and departments. Money is being taken from the emergency budget, placed in the normal Budget, expended from the latter, and then paraded before the country as economy. Actually, there is no such thing as an economy program in the country today.

Of course, as good Americans we must care for the hungry, and the sick, and the cold. We cannot and must not allow our fellow citizens to suffer for the ordinary necessities of life. If there is no work for them, we must give them relief, but at least let us do it without subterfuge and with the utmost wisdom in the use of our national resources. Economy seems to be a lost word. It is a word that has come to mean a complicated system of accountancy rather than judicious spending. We should know where we are heading before it is too late.

The national debt is being increased to $32,000,000,000. Some day this must be paid.

Powers are being bestowed on the Executive that point toward dictatorship. This is unwise and dangerous. The courage and the ability of the President of the United States is unquestioned, but no man and no system is infallible. We should let him know our wishes and assist him toward their realization, but constructive criticism and orderly and sound thought are essential in times like these. We are heading into new and strange fields. We should move with utmost caution and guard against top-heavy taxation or entering into social experiments from which we will not easily recover.

FARM REFINANCING BILL—STATEMENT BY KNUD WEFALD

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement by former Representative Wefald, railroad and warehouse commissioner of Minnesota, on the farm refinancing measure which is pending before the Agricultural Committees of the Senate and the House.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESS SHOULD PASS THE FRAZIER-LEMKE BILL FOR FARM REFINANCING. THE FARMERS NEED IT AND DEMAND IT

The Frazier-Lemke Farm Refinancing bill is yet undisposed of in Congress, even though the State Legislatures of Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, and Wisconsin have petitioned Congress to enact this measure into law.

The newspapers tell us that in the House, a petition for the withdrawal of this bill from the committee, which has it in charge, now upon the Clerk's desk, had already received 130 signatures and enough signatures were in sight to withdraw the bill from the committee, when Democratic leaders began to exert pressure against the signing of the withdrawal petition.

It is hard for people out in the farm country to understand such procedure. The States which have petitioned Congress for the passage of this bill have a representation of 165 in the House, but as I understand it, only 86 of these 165 have signed the withdrawal petition. We, out in the Farm country cannot understand why Representatives in Congress should not heed the petitions from their own legislature back home. We know who have signed the petition. The farmers' organizations are much more clever now in keeping their own people informed about what is going on in Congress than they were in the days of the agitation for the McNary-Haugen bill.

We cannot understand why, out of 20 Representatives from California, only 7 have signed the withdrawal petition; nor how, out of 25 from Illinois, only 9 have done so; or why, out of 12 from Indiana, only 3 have responded. Indiana farmers surely need a lift if any farmers in the country need it.

But it surely pleases us to see that 12 good men from Pennsylvania have signed the petition, leading the list of signatures from any State in number. There was a time when people in the farm country could not visualize Pennsylvania Congressmen as anything but pawns in the hands of industrial barons seeking selfish tariff protection. Of late I have heard farmers say, "Let us move to Pennsylvania, for they will have a good government there soon."

We are pleased to see Ohio have six Representatives join hands with us. And Vermont, Calvin Coolidge's good old granite State, joining in the petition 100 percent. How happy "Cal" would have been to know that! The world surely does move.

Now, even if the Frazier-Lemke bill cannot become a law in this session of Congress, if the committee will not act on it, we in the farm country are entitled to have it discussed. If Congress can show us that we are crazy, we shall be glad to have it shown, for all of us—farmers, business men, workers and all, except a few plutes (of which there are not many left) are for the Frazier-Lemke bill. If we are crazy, there are a lot of crazy people in the United States just now. Congressmen and Senators should know this for their own protection. Just a whispered suspicion in some of the farm States to the effect that a Senator or Representative, no matter how fine his record otherwise, has been hostile or lukewarm toward the Frazier-Lemke bill, might endanger him for reelection this year.

We had expected this bill to be enacted into law before now. We were told in the campaign of 1932 that Mr. Roosevelt would sign such a law if passed by Congress. Also that he would aid its passage through Congress. We had the strongest guaranty as to this from men who were authorized to dicker for farm votes. Nothing but the Frazier-Lemke bill gave Minnesota to Roosevelt, and the same situation existed in other States.

I spoke for Mr. Roosevelt on the strength of the promise we received, from the time I started my campaign in 1932 until the very close. Not in a single talk did I forget him, although I was running for State office. I reached more people in that campaign than any Democratic speaker or candidate in our State. I feel partly responsible for the vote Minnesota gave Mr. Roosevelt and I hope that some of the good friends I had during my service in Congress, especially among the Democrats, will consider us farm folks entitled to some consideration in our hour of need.

What farm refinancing Congress has put over will not solve the farm crisis. The only salvation for the farmers, economically speaking, is in legislation like that suggested in the Frazier-Lemke bill. I talked the idea embodied in this bill when I fought valiantly for reelection to Congress in 1926. I was told that I was crazy then, but the farm country thinks differently now.

The main thought in this bill is to safeguard the farmer in the possession of his farm by lifting off from his back a part of his debt load, and extendng to him a rate of interest under which he can meet his payments. If this is done, the farmer will take care of himself; Congress then will not need to pass much additional legislation for the farmers. If the farmers were now given their choice between the passage of this bill, on one hand, with no other extra legislation as against on the other hand, all the farm legislation introduced in Congress, with much more that can be thought up by the "brain trust", they would not hesitate in choosing the Frazier-Lemke bill.

Let the farmer know that he can sit securely on his farm and he will live through any emergency and deflation that will strike the country.

The spirit of the pioneers can be easily resurrected on the farms, and out of such an awakening will spring the noblest life yet lived in America. The real farmers do not want to be regimented as soldiers under any "brain-trust" plan; they do not want to be socialized; the bulk of them are of northern European stock, rooted in democracy, inured to hardship, frugal, and God-fearing, who want to live in individual homes, and in the family circle work out the plans for their own welfare.

Only the farmers themselves can solve the question of overproduction. It is the farmers who are hopelessly in debt who produce the surplus farm products. Lift the debt loads off from all of them, and they will take a jubilee year to celebrate their redemption from threatened slavery.

No governmental regulation can bring about crop reduction. Farm leaders tell me that farmers are asked to reduce their corn, acreage 20 percent, but Secretary of Agriculture Wallace's seed firm urges the farmers to buy their improved corn, which will yield 23 percent more than what they have been planting before. So there will be at least as much corn, if all follow this advice, as if no acreage reduction is made, if a normal year.

If you give us the Frazier-Lemke bill, the farmers say, you can discharge the "brain trust" from thinking for the farmers and you can close up the Department of Agriculture for many years.

This bill applies the same principle to the refinancing of the farm debt that we applied to the allied war debt when that was funded. The principle applied was "the ability to pay." Only the farmers do not ask Congress to do anywhere near as much for them as it did for the European war governments. Our own farmers' welfare should be of much more concern to us than anything in Europe.

The rehabilitation of our farmers will mean the rehabilitation of industry. Nothing else will save industry.

The Frazier-Lemke bill demands that the Federal Government shall refinance the farm debt on the basis of present-day values of the farms at a rate of interest of 1½ percent and 1½-percent amortization payment by the issuance of Treasury notes against the first mortgage on the farms. That is the bill in a nutshell.

Every Member of Congress must be familiar with the terms of this bill now. No man has in recent years done such a noble work, that I know of, as has Mr. LEMKE in carrying the gospel of this salvation of the farmers into so many States of the Union as he has visited. As Peter the Hermit summoned the Crusaders to the rescue of the Holy City out of the hands of the heathens, he has summoned the farm States to the defense of themselves against Wall Street; and he will not die, I hope, until he wrests Wall Street's strangle hold from the throat of the farmers.

The bidding of Wall Street is blocking the passage of this bill. If this bill passes, the farm debt can be amortized over a period of 47 years. Over that period it will, so Mr. LEMKE says, "reduce the farmer's indebtedness by three fifths because of the lower rate of interest." The Government will make a net profit on the farm loans over this period of time of $6,345,000,000.

If farm interest is kept up as now, Wall Street will over this period rake in at least $20,000,000,000 in farm-loan interest. Under the plan of this bill, farm-loan creditors will stand the best chance of being paid back the greatest share of the money loaned; for under this plan the farmer can carry three times the load under the lower interest. But, best of all, his debt fixed in the proper relation to the value of his farm, the farmer, under the lower interest rate, would have three times the money to spend in the channels of trade out of the money he now pays out for interest.

For example: On a $10,000 loan, amortized over a period of 47 years the farmer will save $24,000 in interest, while the Government will make a profit of $1,100 on it.

We can easily visualize what the interest saving will mean to a country town surrounded by a hundred such farms, and what it again will mean to trade and industry. Of all so-called "money inflation plans", if you choose to call this bill such, it is the safest of them all, as it makes the good and fertile soil of our country a money basis. It will also be the only money issued on which the Government earns interest.

Under this plan farm values will also become better stabilized than under any other farm-loan system. Stabilization of farm values will help stabilize all other property values. When farm values fall over the whole country, even the value of New York skyscrapers is affected. Farm values, due to the greed of the money trust, fell first, but they in the end brought all other values down with them.

The two greatest economic factors in organized society are men and land. Men without land are helpless, and land without free men upon it is of no value.

Out of the land (soil) comes all wealth in the first place, and the men upon the soil must be treated rightly or society will suffer. Land values must not be a gambling asset to be run up and down, for with the fluctuations of such values, the men of the soil suffer. The passage of the Frazier-Lemke bill will stabilize land values. It is also the only remedy for the farm ills proposed, which will not have a tendency to increase the cost of food, for the difference in the farmers' interest outlay will be profit that will help to bring about cost of production on a reasonable level of price of farm products.

Let us have this bill enacted into law now. If the House disposes of this bill as a still-born child, its ghost will haunt many a good Congressman in the next campaign.

THE GREAT ILLUSION—EDITORIAL FROM SATURDAY EVENING POST

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial appearing in the Saturday Evening Post under date of April 7, 1934, entitled "The Great Illusion."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Saturday Evening Post, Philadelphia, Apr. 7, 1934]

THE GREAT ILLUSION

The Saturday Evening Post is neither a Republican nor a Democratic organ. It does not condone the abuses of power and trust of the Republican Party while it was in office, and it cannot endorse those policies and experiments of the new deal that look to the left. In our opinion, this is a time when the press and the public must examine thoroughly and feel free to criticize every proposal advanced by the administration. We can imagine no greater disservice to the country than the hush-hush policy advocated by so many adherents of the new deal. It is better to be careful now than sorry later. It is safer to put over one sound plan than a dozen doubtful experiments. Recovery is important, but the fundamental issue today is the preservation of democracy and our traditional American liberties along with recovery.

It is hard to believe that when the Republicans were in office they were 100 percent crooked. It is equally hard to believe that the Democrats are 100 percent pure, now that they have taken over the Government, for there is more than a suspicion that there are seekers after special privilege in their ranks of the same stripe as those who were inside the breastworks or were camp followers of the Republican Party. In appraising both parties, it is well to remember that under Republican rule the promises and covenants of the Government were kept. On the other hand, the recent devaluation and financial programs that involved the repudiation of our solemn covenants are a blot on the 'scutcheon of the Democratic Party which no emergency soft soap will wash out. Furthermore, we are now being told that some of these "emergency" measures, which were cheerfully accepted by the public for the duration of the emergency, are to be made permanent.

The question before the American people—a question that is inextricably interwoven with the policies and experiments of the moment—is this: Do we want a democratic or a collectivist system? Do we want freedom as individuals to live our lives under the Constitution and free courts? do we want individual opportunity and scope to work out our private and business lives within sane and law-abiding limits or do we want to be regimented—told what we can do, how much we can do and when we can do it? do we want a free press, a free radio, and free speech, or someone to tell us what we can think and what we can say? Secretary Wallace, in denying that we are tainted with either fascism or communism, says that we are living in a state of illusion. We agree, but we would make it plural. Among many others, our illusions are that nature is not the dominant partner in all farm operations, and that theories which clash with realities are workable.

If we do not want to swing far over to the left, a strong and intelligent opposition party must take the field. As it is today, both the Republican and Democratic Parties embrace conservatives, liberals, socialists, and opportunists. The so-called "Progressives" have for years been playing both ends against the middle and are today, in everything except the label that they cling to for purely political reasons, frankly Democrats. The Republican Party has lacked the courage to make them move over into the new deal bed and lie there. But unless the Republican Party cleans house, adopts a liberal platform, while holding fast to American constitutional ideals and principles, we can see small chance for it.

Today there is no clear line of cleavage in the membership of the two parties. The Democratic Party has cut loose from its traditions and stands for a strongly centralized, bureaucratic Government that is getting a grip on every kind of private business and putting into effect many extremely radical measures that look toward ultimate collectivism. Some of those who loosely call themselves Republicans belong in the Democratic Party. An even larger number of those labeled Democrats, who still hold to traditional American ideals and institutions, belong in a reformed and reconstructed Republican Party.

Meanwhile the country moves farther and farther towards the left, for the implication, if not the intention, of proposal after proposal that is put forth by the party in power takes us closer and closer to collectivism, makes it harder and harder to retreat to Americanism, and predicates, logically and inexorably, something very close to the Russian system.

Right now there is a "What the hell!" attitude in the air. A large part of the public is saying, "We can't be any worse off than we were, so we'll take a chance on this one." That is the new philosophy that goes with the new deal.

But we could be a good deal worse off than we were and are. Every failure of an ill-conceived and hastily tried measure is a step backward in the healing process that natural causes have been bringing about both here and abroad. We believe that there is enough of the old spirit left among the more fortunate in America to sacrifice for the unfortunate and to submit to the last limit of taxation to help through the depression, so long as the money is usefully employed, and expended without politics, graft, and waste, and so long as their traditional and constitutional liberties are maintained. That would be a hard pull temporarily, but it would have a sound finish.

Some of the plans that have no final left-wing connotation and that are being hastily thrown into the new deal hopper contain the elements of success. With careful planning and wise administration over a term of months and years they would unquestionably prove helpful. But with the administration springing a new panacea every morning on a bewildered public and demanding the passing without delay of a pre-prepared bill by a yes-sir Congress, there is small chance for even a good idea to work out. In the case of almost every major plan that has been advanced, it has been found that certain provisions are in opposition to other provisions and that in practical operation they tend to cancel one another and to negative the good features of the measure.

We can think of no plan or measure that has been put out by the administration that does not call for long and careful consideration by business experts familiar with the strains and stresses that even the best-conceived plan must meet in practical operation. For, despite the contrary idea that is being advanced in many quarters, there are plenty of honest and patriotic business men in the country. But most of the legislation that is being proposed bears the imprint of the "brain trust"—so-called "intellectuals" who have theories about what makes the wheels go around and what ought to make them go around, but who have never made a wheel turn over.

C.W.A. is a good example of this. Carefully planned and slowly put into effect with able administrators, with politics and politicians ruthlessly eliminated, with nothing but useful and necessary work undertaken, and with wages paid on a scale that would not disorganize local business and tempt labor already employed into its ranks, it would have proved a useful stop-gap.

N.R.A. has many admirable features, but from the first it has been in danger of falling into the hands of extremists and has undoubtedly worked hardships that were probably unforeseen when it was put out in its half-baked condition. Because it has not come up to expectations, new ideas and new plans are being considered that will further endanger its success. Instead of labor and capital working together, there is a drift toward impossible conditions for capital. We have no sympathy with hard-boiled employers, and we have none with just as hard-boiled labor leaders. We are unalterably opposed to sweated labor, and we believe in the payment by every industry of the highest wages that it can stand, with due consideration of the rights of all the interests involved. But we can see no real gain in making it impossible for industry to make profits and to pay dividends. Many concerns are paying good wages, others in the same industry not so good. If we were to treat them all alike, with a blanket 10 percent increase in wages and a 10 percent or more decrease in hours, a large number of businesses that are already in the red and that have been living on hope and steadily decreasing reserves would go to the wall, and many others would have to discontinue the payment of dividends. In short, anything of the sort would be a long step toward abolishing the profit motive, so ardently advocated in some quarters. Though N.R.A. has disclaimed any intention of enforcing blanket decreases and increases, business rightly awaits the event with apprehension. A wise doctor will not advise a patient who is slowly recovering from a long illness and beginning to sit up, to take dumbbell exercises before breakfast.

If conditions are made impossible for the employer, and Government finally has to take over, as many of our left-wingers hope, labor will find that, in the end, it has the hardest taskmaster and the lowest scale of living in its history. The proof is in many countries today. In giving a 40-hour week to labor and the increases in pay already made, always excepting the so-called "chiselers", industry has gone about as far as it can safely go under present conditions.

If the present drift continues, the farmer, too, is in for a rude awakening from his illusions. Already, it is apparent that A.A.A. is not working out on schedule, and ambitious plans to move a large population off marginal lands are in the making and cotton planters are in for real regimentation. It is, of course, only a step from this to telling producers of wheat, cattle, hogs, dairy, and other farm products what and how much they can raise, where they can live, and whether they can farm at all. Finally, such a program would lead to the dispossession of the kulaks—that is, the owners of good farms on which they can make a profit above their living expenses—and the collectivization of their land by the Government.

Many of those who are drifting with the tide will say that anything of this sort is impossible, but they do not know some of their professors. Much of it is already under way or planned, and the rest is a perfectly logical conclusion from the premises. During the past year we have taken first steps toward this goal that are longer than those that remain to be taken. The country is headed to the left and is already deep in left territory.

Hand in hand with our experiments, a series of investigations and exposures have been taking place, and though they have been aimed almost solely at Republicans in the previous administration, we are for them. Expose the offenders and turn them out if they deserve it. Later, perhaps, Congress may get around to an investigation of some of the Democrats. That there are offenders in that party, too, is possible—in fact, the President himself has turned up several leads. However, it was not necessary to disorganize the Air Mail Service in order to punish individuals who may have been guilty of improper practices. There are orderly and legal ways to punish the guilty without depriving the innocent of their livelihood and hamstringing the finest commercial air service in the world.

No other publication in the United States has more consistently opposed the indiscriminate sale of foreign bonds in the United States and preached as strongly, year in and year out, against the evils of speculation than has the Saturday Evening Post. We have refused to take financial advertising, even from houses that we knew were reputable and honest in their dealings, because it was impossible for us thoroughly to investigate securities and to guarantee our readers against loss in those stocks and bonds that bankers and brokers sought to advertise in our columns. But we do not believe that it is necessary to hamstring or kill our exchanges—for they perform many useful and necessary functions and services—in order to stop the manipulation of securities and the rooking of the investing public. There is a great difference between cleaning up and killing, between getting the crooks and crippling the bankers and brokers who perform services that are vital to the business of the Nation.

When one looks over all these measures, when one considers their kill-to-cure provisions, one can only conclude that they have been planned and drawn by men untainted with any practical experience. There is something almost sophomoric about the ideas and plans of these smart, shallow young men who are so cocksure and so determined to make us all over in 5 or 10 minutes.

It is impossible to escape the conclusion that today we are having government by amateurs—college boys, irrespective of their age—who, having drunk deep, perhaps, of the Pierian spring, have recently taken some hearty swigs of Russian vodka. We cannot solve our problems with a discredited European ideology and a Marxian philosophy.

The great illusion of the moment is that we can gain any worth-while happiness or prosperity by the sacrifice of our hardly won liberties.

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, on the 4th of April I made a statement with reference to the cost of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. That statement covered the returns of the processing tax, and, in addition thereto, the possible overdraft or deficit between now and the end of the fiscal year 1934.

The activities of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration are reflected in the Government reports. There should be no room for dispute when all of the items are taken into account.

Secretary Wallace, in his press release of April 4, 1934, said that he had checked over the receipts and disbursements with reference to the processing tax and the expenditures of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and found that there had been collected $9,000,000 more than the expenditures. He further expressed regret that the expenditures had not been greater than the collections.

Secretary Wallace quoted from the Treasury statement of March 30, and showed the expenditures as of that date at $228,927,000. This item is found in the general expenditures as recorded on page 2 of the Treasury statement. The Secretary failed to take into account the emergency expenditures found on the same page, amounting to $60,762,000. He further failed to take into account the fact that in the general expenditures a reference is made to note 1 of page 3, which says that additional expenditures on these accounts for this month and the fiscal year 1934 are included under emergency expenditures, the classification of which will be shown on page 4 of the Treasury statement issued on the 15th day of each month.

The total expenditures, as shown by the March 15 statement, including advances to the Farm Credit Administration, Commodity Credit Corporation, and so forth, amount to $78,315,096.55.

It is also found that in the law, under section 12 (a), a direct appropriation of $100,000,000 is made available to the Secretary of Agriculture for administrative expenses, including rental and benefit payments under acreage control. This $100,000,000 has been available since the passage of the act; but in addition thereto, under section 12 (b), we find that the Treasury is permitted to advance to the Secretary of Agriculture for said purposes, to wit, payment of rentals for acreage control, and other purposes, such amounts as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury shall jointly estimate from time to time are required.

Under the provisions of this section, the Treasury, prior to April 10, 1934, has already advanced to the Secretary of Agriculture $455,885,000, which, in addition to the amount already appropriated of $100,000,000, makes a total of $555,885,000.

In other words, the statement given to the press by the Secretary of Agriculture that the processing tax was paying into the Treasury more than the total expense of the administration of the Agricultural Adjustment Act was clearly misleading.

In my statement I suggested that estimating the processing tax to the 30th of June 1934, according to the returns to date, it would be approximately $348,091,274.79.

To anyone capable of understanding Government figures there can be no confusion between the 1934 Budget and the 1935 Budget. In the press release there was a suggestion made, as follows:

Secretary WALLACE. I think that was the estimate of the Budget for the whole year.

Question. And will carry into 1935?

Secretary WALLACE. I think that will carry into 1935.

In other words, it was insinuated that the figures given were for the fiscal year 1935.

The fiscal year of 1934 runs from July 1, 1933, to June 30, 1934. The fiscal year of 1935 runs from July 1, 1934, to June 30, 1935. There can be no possible confusion with reference to the limitations of these fiscal periods.

In the Department estimate for the fiscal year 1934, signed by Secretary Wallace, to the Budget Director, the estimated amount of money necessary to carry on under the Agricultural Adjustment Act is shown on page 189 of the Budget sent to Congress, and amounts to $855,379,811. Included in this estimate, under nos. 2271 and 2272, are the following items for the following purposes.

In order that there may be no misunderstanding about this matter, I ask unanimous consent that the Budget sent to the Congress by the President covering the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, pages 187, 188, 189, and 190, be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COUZENS in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

Salaries and expenses, Agricultural Adjustment Administration: [TITLE I. SEC. 12(a) There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000,000, to be available to the Secretary of Agriculture for administrative expenses under this title and for rental and benefit payments made with respect to reduction in acreage or reduction in production for market under part 2 of this title. Such sum shall remain available until expended.] (Public Act No. 10, 73d Cong., May 12, 1933, 48 Stat., p. 33.)

SPECIAL FUND

Proceeds from processing taxes, Agricultural Adjustment Administration:

SEC. 12 (b). In addition to the foregoing (see appropriation under sec. 12 (a), p. —), the proceeds derived from all taxes imposed under this title are hereby appropriated to be available to the Secretary of Agriculture for expansion of markets and removal of surplus agricultural products and the following purposes under part 2 of this title: Administrative expenses, rental and benefit payments, and refunds on taxes. The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury shall jointly estimate from time to time the amounts, in addition to any money available under subsection (a), currently required for such purposes; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, advance to the Secretary of Agriculture the amounts so estimated. (See preceding indefinite appropriation.) The amount of any such advance shall be deducted from such tax proceeds as shall subsequently become available under this subsection (Agricultural Adjustment Act, Public, No. 10, 73d Cong., May 12, 1933, 48 Stat., p. 38).

Permanent appropriation, special fund:

Special deposits (cotton):

This fund operates to take care of the financial transactions in connection with the acquisition and disposition of spot cotton and cotton futures contracts by the Secretary of Agriculture, as provided for by part 1, title I, of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, approved May 12, 1933, and the disposition of the proceeds from the sale of such cotton holdings as follows:

(a) The excess of the sales price at which options are exercised over 6 cents per pound (the price at which the Secretary of Agriculture sells cotton to producers) is paid to producers.

(b) The 1-cent excess of the price at which the Secretary sells cotton to producers (6 cents) over the purchase price of the cotton from the Farm Credit Administration (5 cents basis price) is to be used to cover the carrying charges on the cotton holdings.

No acreage payments or administrative expenses are disbursed from this fund.

The following is a statement of the receipts and disbursements from this fund for the period July 25 to October 31, 1933:

This fund does not depend upon any appropriation for replenishment, as in the final analysis the proceeds from the sale of cotton holdings will presumably take care of—

1. The repayment of all loans.
2. The carrying charges on the cotton.
3. Payments due producers by virtue of their option contracts.

The receipts and disbursements for this fund during subsequent periods will depend almost entirely upon—

1. Sales of cotton holdings.
2. Payments to producers on account of options exercised.
3. Loans made.
4. Loans repaid.

The fixed monthly carrying costs on the present stock of spot cotton is approximately as follows:

1. Storage charges	$200,000
2. Insurance charges	20,000

Estimate 1935, $897,663,662.
Appropriated 1934, [a] $210,512,207.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, in these estimates, going to the detailed break-down, I find that there are included therein, under subdivisions 2271 and 2272, the following items:

	1934	1935
Estimated obligations:
(2271) Agricultural rental and benefit payments:
Cotton	$242,236,000	$130,000,000
Wheat	102,000,000	102,000,000
Corn hogs	328,000,000	365,000,000
Tobacco	39,040,400	39,000,000
Dairy	13,000,000	13,000,000
Total	724,276,400	649,000,000
(2272) Removal of surplus agricultural products:
Wheat	8,000,000	10,000,000
Corn hogs	65,000,000	30,000,000
Dairy	12,000,000	12,000,000
Total	85,000,000	52,000,000

From the Consumers' Guide, issued under date of April 9, 1934, by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, I quote as follows:

Returns from processing taxes are meeting Budget estimates and will provide revenue sufficient to finance the adjustment programs now in operation and approved surplus removal purchases. Expenditures to be incurred will total $859,350,000. Collections are estimated at $863,595,000.

Now I turn to the Treasury's statement of April 14, which is the latest I have, and I find that the processing tax, from its inception to the present date, on all commodities on which it has been levied, has amounted to $265,758,881.85. For 14 days of April it has amounted to $27,752,973.28. If we estimate the amount for the next 2 months and a half at $50,000,000 or $60,000,000, and take the total expenditures as I have heretofore shown, as estimated by the departments themselves, and as given publicity by their own publications, I contend that there is still shown a deficit of approximately half a billion dollars. I do not see how it can be figured otherwise.

Let us see what the expenditures have been for the same period. Agricultural Adjustment Administration to date, April 14, $234,578,421.54. That is the item Secretary Wallace used. He did not use any other item. But I find in note 1, page 3, which refers to the monthly statement which is published only on the 15th day of each month—and unless one knows where it is, he probably will not ever see it—that there is shown an additional expenditure of $78,000,000.

Now I come to the emergency expenditures. I have never known how to keep books with the right hand not knowing what the left hand was doing. I have always thought one ought to have a complete set of books, and keep them all together, and that one should know from his books how much he owed, how much his receipts were, and, if there was a deficit, how much it was.

Agricultural Adjustment Administration, $60,574,167.69.

Therefore, I still contend that there is no question but that the Agricultural Adjustment Administration is running a tremendous deficit, and that by the 30th day of June it will probably reach more than half a billion dollars.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I have in my hand the Treasury daily report, and I have experienced difficulty, from this statement, in keeping track of the finances. I wonder what would happen to the Secretary of the Treasury if the Treasury were under the rigid requirements of the national securities measure which we passed sometime ago. What would be the penalty?

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not think, from the way the Treasury statement is kept at the present time, it could possibly comply with 10 percent of the regulations and requirements imposed under the new securities bill. I suggest, further, that I do not believe that the Treasury system of bookkeeping would be approved by the Federal Trade Commission on the part of my individual or corporate business in the United States.

Mr. FESS. It certainly is not in keeping with the securities measure we passed.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is certainly true.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know whether the Senator's figures are correct, or whether those of the Department are correct, but my experience with the departments, during a long term of office, has led me to believe that the departments are usually correct.

Mr. DICKINSON. These are all department figures; I am using nothing but department figures.

Mr. McKELLAR. But the Senator is taking the figures from one department and comparing them with the figures from another department. I think we can safely take the figures as given out by the Department of Agriculture. I do not believe that Secretary Wallace would give out a statement which was not backed absolutely by the facts, and my judgment is that if the Senator had telephoned to Secretary Wallace and had asked about the matter, he would not have gotten into the trouble he seems to be in over these figures.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that Secretary Wallace did not telephone me about the figures. If he had, he would not have gotten into the trouble into which he has fallen in getting out the figures.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that when the true facts and true figures are given, the Secretary of Agriculture will not be shown to be in any trouble about the matter. It is going to be the Senator, and not the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. DICKINSON. I shall not be in any trouble about it.

Mr. McKELLAR. On several occasions I have taken issue with the departments, and I have usually found the departments very accurate about giving out figures. I do not believe the Secretary of Agriculture would give out inaccurate or improper figures.

Mr. DICKINSON. For the benefit of the Senator from Tennessee I will read the statement of Secretary Wallace, and then I will show him in the Treasury statement what the Secretary failed to take into consideration; and he was quoting the Treasury statement.

Secretary WALLACE. I have checked up on that because I read it in the paper. You can check on this yourselves from the daily statement of the United States Treasury.

That is what I am using, and that is what he was using.

On page 2 you will find under "Receipts" the collections from processing taxes on farm products. For March 30—the last one that I have—the collections were $237,701,000 and expenditures were $228,927,000. So the collections so far have been about $9,000,000 more than the expenditures. I think it would be a much healthier situation if we had been able to get into action and have greater expenditures than collections.

In other words, he apparently welcomes an overdraft.

I think there would have been greater recovery if we had found it possible to do that. I think it is rather remarkable that the thing is so nearly in balance as at this time, because the essence of the plan was really in the early part of it to spend faster than to collect and make it up by the taxes later on. Of course, when the corn-hog program gets into action there will be more money paid out to the farmers than had been recovered in the United States Treasury.

What I am suggesting, and all I am suggesting, is that he quotes one figure but leaves out the emergency expenditures of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, which amount to over $60,000,000. He fails to take into account the note on page 3, which tells us to go to the semimonthly statement made with reference to expenditures, which shows, for the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, $78,000,000 of expenditures.

I do not like to have the Secretary of Agriculture give out part of the figures without giving out all. If some of these expenditures are not the usual expenditures of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, very well, let him say so; but they appear here under the heading, "Agricultural Adjustment Administration."

On top of that I want to suggest that, from the record I have inserted, which is the Budget record, there can be no question about what they estimate expending. I am not criticizing that. What I am saying is that they are trying to give out the impression that they are collecting more money than they are expending, when, as a matter of fact, they have been advanced from the Treasury $450,000,000. They have collected only $265,000,000 to date. They have one month and a half to go. Therefore there is no possibility of the collections reaching the $855,000,000, which is the amount estimated by the Budget and which is over Secretary Wallace's signature.

I do not desire to criticize Secretary Wallace; I only want him, whenever he criticizes me, to give all the facts. I am giving them from the very Treasury statement from which he quoted.

In addition to what I have said I desire to suggest that this Budget estimate shows the following:

Appropriations for 1934, none. Revised estimates for 1934, $855,379,811.

Which, added to the $100,000,000 already appropriated, makes $955,379,811 for the fiscal year 1934.

What I want to say is simply this: The administrators of the law are responsible for carrying out its provisions, and it will not do for them to make any effort to evade responsibility under this law. They have down there now 531 employees; 160 of them temporary. They have under the permanent indefinite appropriations 232 employees. I find that salaries of those employees run from $10,000 a year down, all of them being paid to tell the farmer how to do something they themselves do not know how to do. I do not know what the result will be. It is a great experiment. But what I want to say is that when they give out figures, we want them to give out all the figures, and not part of the figures, and any effort to try to evade by leaving items out of a statement or confusing fiscal years will not answer.

Oh, what a tangled web we weave,
When first we practice to deceive.

If the "brain trusters" are no better in formulating safe economic theories for social reform and national planning, than they are in taking into account all of the necessary items in figuring out a financial statement, how long will it take the "brain trusters" to become the Nation's busters!

Mr. LEWIS obtained the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let me make a suggestion to the Senator from Iowa. I am quite sure the accurate figures from the Department will not sustain the Senator's position. The Senator talks about "brain trusters." Has the Senator had enough of criticism of "brain trusters" in the last few days since every statement Dr. Wirt made has been disproved? It seems to me the Senator should wait a little while before bringing other charges against the administration. The last experience has not been so good. The Senator remembers that a week or two ago Senators on the Republican side of the aisle were all talking about Dr. Wirt, and about the "brain trusters", and about what a wonderful work Dr. Wirt had done, but in the last few days they have not had anything to say, because every statement Dr. Wirt has made has been discounted, if not actually disproved.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not have the floor. I am asking the Senator a question.

Mr. DICKINSON. I want to suggest that I had nothing to do with Dr. Wirt.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad the Senator disowns him.

Mr. DICKINSON. I never knew the man. I do say that if the Senator will read the testimony where the six people who appeared before the House committee were cross-examined, I think he will find that all of them admitted they belonged to the communistic organization. I think it will make splendid reading for people who are thinking about whether or not we are drifting off into a rather dangerous field.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not so read the testimony before the committee of the House. My reading of the testimony shows me that every statment that Dr. Wirt made has been disproved and I do not believe any Senator on either side of the aisle would defend him in view of the fact that 6 people, I think 3 men and 3 women, who have been in the departments here for years, who were not appointed by this administration but were appointed under the Hoover administration, denied Dr. Wirt's statements.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I do not wish to delay the remarks with which my friend from Illinois is about to enlighten the Senate. I should like to invite the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the fact that apparently the leading lady member of the party, while she may have become communistic, has been hitherto registered as a Kansas Republican, and appointed by President Coolidge.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and why anyone would make such charges as Dr. Wirt made is incomprehensible to me, and I am very happy that the Senator from Iowa disclaims any defense of Dr. Wirt. I do not think that anyone will, under the circumstances, defend him. He simply made statements which he could not possibly prove, but every one of which, on the other hand, has been disproved.

I was sorry to see the Senator from Iowa, after having to back track all along the line because of Dr. Wirt's statement, immediately conjure up another attack upon a member of the administration, to wit, the Secretary of Agriculture, a citizen of his own State, an honorable, upright man who hitherto was a Republican and whom I believe to be an honest man. I do not believe he has undertaken in the slightest way to misrepresent the facts and figures from his Department; and when the Senator from Iowa examines the subject further, as I hope he will, I believe he will exonerate the Secretary of Agriculture from having made any misleading statements or given out any misleading figures.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I want to suggest that the Senator from Tennessee has not read the cross-examination by Mr. McGUGIN, of Kansas, of the various witnesses who appeared before the House committee yesterday. I believe it will appear in the RECORD in the speech of Mr. McGUGIN, of Kansas. I know nothing about these people or where they come from. I never heard of most of them until they were supposed to be at the Wirt party, but I do understand that most of them admitted they were members of the Communist Party. Other than that, I do not care to comment on them. I am not here to defend Dr. Wirt or to criticize him.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois further yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad the Senator from Iowa will not defend Dr. Wirt. I am glad he says he does not defend Dr. Wirt. Everyone knows that the bubble had burst when Dr. Wirt left the first page of the newspapers and yesterday got over to the fifth or sixth page. Of course, he is out, and there is no one who will defend him. In my judgment, there is not a Senator on the other side of the Chamber or on this side of the Chamber who will defend the statements of this propagandist and ill-advised talker.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will ask the Senator from Tennessee if it is not a fact that the Senator from Iowa loudly protests that he does not know anything about Dr. Wirt and is not interested in Dr. Wirt, but he proceeds to denounce all six of the witnesses who demonstrated the fact that Dr. Wirt——

Mr. DICKINSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. No. Permit me to finish asking the question.

Mr. DICKINSON. I did not denounce them. I simply stated what was shown by the testimony of the witnesses on cross-examination before the House committee, and that is all I now say. I am not denouncing them, or defending them, or anything of that kind. The Senator from Texas can go outside the record and make more erroneous statements than anyone else of whom I know in the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Iowa can go outside of all reasonable bounds more quickly and more often than any Senator of whom I know. I will ask the Senator if it is not true that while loudly protesting that he has no sympathy at all for Dr. Wirt he denounces the six witnesses who demonstrated that Dr. Wirt was a fourflusher and a falsifier, and says they are Communists. I wonder why this darling of the Republican side, under the leadership of the Senator from Iowa, Dr. Wirt, is associating with all these terrible Communists, why he is breaking bread with them, why he is dining with them, and why it is when they demonstrate that Dr. Wirt is a fourflusher and a falsifier the Senator should denounce those witnesses.

It is suggested that the individuals in question were appointed under a Republican administration. That may be true, but the Senator from Iowa did not have anything to do with it.

Mr. DICKINSON. They are your babies.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Iowa is not responsible for their appointment, even if they were appointed under a Republican administration.

FOREIGN SERVICE RETIREMENT AND DISABILITY FUND

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State showing all receipts and disbursements on account of refunds, allowances, and annuities for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1933, in connection with the Foreign Service retirement and disability system, as required by section 26 (a) of an act for the grading and classification of clerks in the Foreign Service of the United States of America and providing compensation therefor, approved February 23, 1931.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 18, 1934.

[Enclosure: Report concerning retirement and disability fund, Foreign Service.]

ASPECT OF EMBARRASSMENT IN FOREIGN DEBTS AND RECIPROCAL TARIFF AGREEMENTS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am loath to enter into foreign subjects in this home-products discussion, or disturb this contribution of pastoral and bucolic statesmanship suggested by the debates between these eminent leaders lately holding forth. Still, if I am not intruding too far upon the patience of the Senate, I want to indulge in observations which it was my intention to enter upon earlier in the day.

Mr. President, we have had before us today and yesterday bills carrying very important subjects, one being taxation, the other being sugar. Both present very serious situations, and can be carried to such an extent so as to sometimes lead to complicated and oftentimes disastrous results.

We are reminded that when O'Connell met a gentleman who had been in Ireland, and having asked him how he liked Ireland, and received reply saying, "Its weather and sunshine were beautiful", upon which O'Connell answered, "Don't tell it in London, or they'll tax it." Sir, while we seek light on further taxation, we do not tax further light.

Mr. President, indulging in thoughts on the subject of sugar, my mind reflects that it is a persuasive and luxurious topic. History informs us that William Pitt, Premier of England, arising in his place in Parliament to discuss sugar, would by the mere pronunciation of the word "sugar" awaken the admiration and worship of the women who sat in the special gallery. I have been inclined to feel that the manner in which the subject has been discussed today, coming down finally to Dr. Wirt, has had a considerable influence in awakening the attention of those who fairly crowd our gallery, in very fair attire, and fair among themselves, though I do not regard the Wirt discussion as Wirty of the Senate. [Laughter.]

I am compelled to depart from subjects of so gentle and attractive a nature to invite the attention of the Senate and of the fourth house to what I feel is an admission, as gathered from the cables today, of a very serious import to the United States and to the program as is now suggested of legislation we enter upon tomorrow. I refer to the tariff bill, with its reciprocity treaty clauses.

The public papers bring us weighty news which confirms private intelligence which can be had from the State Department as to the debtors to the United States. I refer to the large debtors known as "our European debtors", not only as to the debts incurred during the war for loans for carrying on their martial conflict but for loans which were incurred for money borrowed after the war and lent in the graciousness and generosity of our nature to aid the industries and revive the languishing commerce of our debtor lands. It is announced that one of the great countries—and I refer to Great Britain—presents a financial report disclosing a very large surplus in her treasury, which far exceeds her debts and surpassing in amount any quantity that may be exacted by the demands of her budget. But it is to be seen for the first time in 7 years that Britain declines to enter into the budget any note or memorandum of payments due on installments or express any reference whatever as to the obligation of debts she owes the United States of America. For magnanimous and meticulous England this omission is so startling as to be ominous.

At the same time comes forth the expression from royal-natured France, in connection with what she calls the balancing of her budget as to this touching debt, our usually fair and just good friend asserts that there are no debts between France and the United States. With a trophy in expression she wipes them out. Italy finds it agreeable to express herself along similar lines but not so didactic, an expression of complete assurance, defying any dispute. Italy merely regrets that the United States should assume to press for any payment, the lingering item of a few hundred millions.

Mr. President, on this floor but a few days past I made bold to say that this desertion and defiance would follow. This was when the statesmen of England in public place but last week announced that they would not pay another dollar or, as the other statesmen said, they would make a proposition to the United States as a final one, as an adjustment of every debt, and, if not accepted, they would probably announce in the exact words of France that they "default." We find now at the expiration of the following week that when the proposition of their budget is presented to their country, these foreign debtor lands keep exact faith with the threat they posed against America, all done in a spirit of acknowledged brotherhood but in the expression of a new conception of their relation to us, the United States, as creditor.

It becomes interesting to us to seek the reason or what we can righteously deduce as the reason why these countries contemporaneously and in unity, as though it were following some preceding meeting, all concur in the same thought and unite in the same undertaking. We answer that the real reason is that their eminent statesmen have noted that from both sides of this Senate Chamber comes the announcement that what is called the "tariff bill" will be entered upon at once. That in such bill is a provision which authorizes the President of the United States to negotiate treaties with countries respecting the range of tariff, the quality and quantity of percentage tax, or for the exchange of products between the two nations through treaty negotiated solely by the President, as envoy for the Nation of America.

Mr. President, I assume to charge that what is in the minds of these eminent statesmen is to me new opportunity, which pressed means new victory. They see that the United States is on the eve of presenting a proposition of negotiating with them, through a treaty that shall offer something in exchange for them yielding to us, first, the melting away of the barriers against our products, or the surrendering, or the reducing of the figure of charge which in the name of tariffs they have heretofore been addressing against us and promising to continue in more drastic insistence than ever before.

Let it be remembered that the statesmen of those countries are the reflex and heirs of the statesmen who came down through history for a thousand years, and all with a common purpose to obtain victory by delusion or enforced distress. These modern masters of diplomacy know that it is in the balancing and tilting one with another that results are incubated. It will be remembered that such example is the record of all, whether we have in mind Talleyrand of France, Machiavelli of Italy, or the adroit Austrian, Metternich. Sir, in the doings of today we have the exact repetition of the manner and method of their fathers of statecraft. These nations who owe us money are now prepared to present to the United States the bold proposition, "Gentlemen, in your proposal for treaty you cannot deal with us by stationing us as an inferior." They secretly proclaim in symbol of conduct, "You cannot have a treaty of negotiation with us except on the basis of equality. In order that we shall have equality with you, you will wipe out the obligation that makes us a debtor to you. We will not tolerate the position of you remaining a creditor, we the debtor, while we languish in a subordinate situation, subverted from dignity of independence to one of groveling inferiority, and as such you negotiate with us while you hold over us the power to compel us to surrender under the threat either of enforcing the debt or as an exchange for some reduction or extension of it." Their course is to assert by situation the counsel of Warwick to Hastings, "Courtesy to all but servility to none."

Mr. President, these eminent debtors—and we might as well confront the fact in this presence today—are now preparing, even before we enter upon negotiation, to demand of us that we pledge them in equality as negotiators; they first declare they are under no obligation to us, admit that we are under none to them. By this status they declare, for the first time since the World War, an equality of financial situation between us.

Mr. President, it may appear to you that prophecies and translations of mine are figments of fear. I invite your attention to a bit of parallel history of our own. When President Taft sought to negotiate with Canada what we have often termed a "reciprocity treaty", the first thing Canada did was the natural and statesmanlike thing. She, acting under the advice of the British Empire, reminded the United States that we had charged her with having seized our sealing ships, in violation of the international sealing law, and called to mind that we had stimulated the owners of these ships to sue Canada for damages for the value of these ships which she had condemned in her courts and ordered confiscated by her process of judicature. Before we reached any degree of consideration of the reciprocity treaty, however, we came to terms at London respecting the obligations we had assumed to put upon Canada.

I speak of the subject rather sentimentally, Mr. President. I was a participant as counsel in some of that litigation. There came out of it a result, sir, whereby one of the clients was, in glee of success, generous enough to name one of the ships the James Hamilton Lewis; and the prize, true to her namesake, in her very first act was to get into crime and get caught, and likewise to be penalized and confiscated by the Government. [Laughter.] The record is here in the State Department.

You will readily understand how naturally to my memory there arises the details of the transaction, but we turn for a moment upon a more serious phase of a similar situation. We approached Germany. We desired that Germany accept the pork of the United States in exchange for the barley of Germany which we sought, and which she sought to sell us. Breweries of the United States were legal those days.

In the meantime, however, eminent Senators around here recall that there had been some grievance between ourselves and Germany, touching that which had transpired under a certain administration as to Brazil. Germany had invaded Brazil in some form of transaction; and, as we insisted, impressed some American interests, to the loss of our country. Germany, through her statesmen, after the order of the day of the past, and in fulfillment of the inherited generation, demanded first, before we negotiated on the subject, that we remove these obstructions, that we might stand equal. Senators will recall that we subsequently came to some terms, the details of which I am unable to reveal, yet complied with before we reached the point of an understanding between ourselves and Germany upon the mere exchange of these two products, the pork from America and the barley from Germany, all at a time when the process of "pork barrels" in legislation were familiar to us.

But, sir, it is to be recalled that a more serious experience abounded. My eminent friends, the Senators here, from the Pacific Coast States, cannot fail to recall that when we moved upon Japan to have Japan receive the goods of the United States under some bilateral arrangement, Japan very artfully and with commendable skill, following the precedents to which I am alluding, called our attention to the fact that we had been keeping her people out of our country under a treaty of exclusion, and demanded, before we proceeded upon that doctrine of the commercial exchange, that we right what she considered a wrong to her. We could not repeal the law. That would have violated the very theory of our Government. We could not make an exchange of citizen for citizen, for that would have worked as we believed a disadvantage our people could not accept. So, finally, what did we do? We surrendered by allowing an amendment known, if you recall, dear Senators, as a "gentlemen's agreement", by which we included more of the Japanese under the designation of "scholars", and thus the arrangement was effected, and for the first time Japan felt, or assumed to feel, that she could, on equal terms, deal with us respecting the possible imports from our country and our exports to her, to which I refer.

Mr. President, I cannot overlook the fact that what we are seeing now is but a duplication of these recited situations. Sir, this present condition calls for great consideration. If we are to vote the President the right to negotiate these treaties we must vote him, at the same time, complete power respecting these treaties, enabling him to meet whatever propositions are made as a consideration for accepting our offer. We must give him the power to receive the propositions of these nations respecting either the cancelation of the debts or their establishing new limitation and reduction. The debtor nations will surely present the terms as a necessary condition precedent to dealing with us. This will be put on the necessity to place them upon what may be termed an absolute equality of negotiation. More than that, sir, it will not do that this honorable body should assume that each counterproposition submitted in the negotiation is as fast as tendered to be sent to us—the Senate—for such proceedure would consume 1 year in debate from item to item, and again item to item. The respective differences that eminent Senators here entertain upon the tariff question would provoke the limitless discussion—and repercussion. We would be debating the question until, sir, such time would pass as would defeat any benefit from the conclusion. Nor, sir, could we surround the opportunity given to the President with a forbidding declaration as to receiving propositions on other subjects besides those contained in the treaty yet defined in their proffer. Therefore, there must accompany the power we give him nothing, sir, that will limit him from dealing with all subjects insofar as they may be received in propositions from those who undoubtedly are now prepared to tender to us, as a condition precedent, as a favor to themselves—either the abolishing the debts or releasing immediate demand for their collection; sirs, the proposition will be as a demand upon us before the nation debtor will enter upon the consideration of reciprocity of trade by treaty.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I did not understand the Senator's statement when he referred to the power we are to give the President. Does it extend to authority to cancel the debts?

Mr. LEWIS. No. I answer the Senator from Ohio that he, the Senator, is now thrumming, I may say, the discordant string in this harp of arrangement. We cannot give the President the power to cancel the debts. We cannot give the President the power to limit them or reduce them in violation of the specific act of Congress which has been passed giving direction in that regard. It is the law for him as it is for us. It is only by changing that law, and giving him specific direction by a change of an act of the Congress, that he could have the power to undertake anything that would reduce the debts or cancel them. This is my answer. In my statement just pronounced I am referring, I may say, only to the right to receive the propositions that other nations would have to offer in exchange for treaties with us, but not finally to close them.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if I should ask him a question?

Mr. LEWIS. Not at all.

Mr. FESS. Some days ago, when the Senator addressed the country on this subject, he referred to the possibility of receiving bonds from our debtors and later making proper disposition of those bonds. That colloquy in the Senate has created considerable public interest.

Mr. LEWIS. I may say to my able friend, so I have learned from clippings of papers from abroad, as well as from home.

Mr. FESS. I received a communication from one of the country's great thinkers who commented upon the suggestion and said that he did not believe we could accept goods in payment of the debts, and he doubted whether we could secure money in payment of the debts, but surely we could receive services in payment of the debts; and then he proceeded to explain what he meant. When American tourists go to Europe a certain amount of money is carried from America to Europe. Instead of that money going from America to Europe to be used as Europe's money, this gentleman suggested that it ought to be deposited to the credit of this Government on its debt by the use of a particular kind of currency. The same thing could be done in the payment of freight rates in commerce on the sea, and the same thing could be done on triangular business transactions. I cannot see the practicability of the suggestion; but his idea was that an arrangement could be made whereby the money that goes from America in the trade with Europe in the items I have suggested could be credited upon the debt, without Europe's calling upon a single dollar of her own except as she gets it from this country.

It is the Senator's discussion that gave rise to that suggestion. I should like to have the Senator look into it. The practicability of it is a question with me, and so I stated to the friend who wrote me.

Mr. LEWIS. Of course, the Senator realizes that the sum total of the proposition is as though it were to say, by the debtor, "Whatever money you Americans bring over here and expend in trading here we return to you to be applied on the debt." I say to my able friend from Ohio, many propositions no doubt will be made; and that is why I feel that liberty should be given the President to receive these propositions instead of their being made at a long distance either to the Treasury or to Congress. In receiving them, however, he is to receive them as their propositions, but he is not to close them in violation of the act of Congress. They are to be sent through him to us, or to his Congress.

This much is what I had intended, sir, to conclude upon: I may be pardoned for assuming a great seriousness to my own utterance, but matters have come to the point where the President of the United States may take from his very humble followers—in this body and elsewhere who dare offer counsel—this admonition: He must be prepared to meet the suggestion to him that "You either dispose of these debts, sir, or we will not enter upon the possibility of reciprocity treaties", adding, "We are not called on to do it. We can furnish our own people. We may live among ourselves. Our nations are rising. We do not need your American goods. If any need, it is for very few of them. More of ours you need. It is you, the United States, who need to sell to us." Therefore the President must early learn that if the proposal is to be made that as a consideration for their entering upon treaties with us or their accepting any treaty from us there must first be cancelation of the indebtedness, the President must understand that the voice of his Congress is against yielding to it. He must understand that his people would not consent to have the debts canceled as a consideration for entering upon mere treaties. These treaties in themselves as to foreign debtors would be mere promises of trade. These foreign nations must be given to know that our country would not yield to such propositions as I have divined. Let it be understood early that our President has no intention of presenting such a proposition for the United States, and that even if his generosity were extended to a point opposing his patriotism it would be repudiated. But we need not dwell on this fear of his countrymen. The President would not arouse the suspicions of his countrymen, intimating that he or his allied legislators are on the eve of finding some specious device in which the people can be delivered, the debts due them canceled, and losses imposed upon them beyond measure.

Mr. President, I cannot but conclude that it is very timely for us, on either side of this Chamber, to early inform the distinguished President that we quite see the purpose of these eminent nations in refusing to include in their budgets the debts due us, or even to acknowledge the need of a payment, and, conscious as they are that $180,000,000 from one is due within a few days, not even to allude to it, and that another nation would simply didactically announce that they owe us nothing; that there is no debt. This means very clearly that they are preparing to suggest terms, as against an effort on our part for a commercial treaty, which terms our country cannot accept, and which if imposed upon the President would humiliate him, and for him to accept would be a surrender unworthy, and which we who know him know that under no condition would he tolerate.

If this method I premise is to be that to be tendered, as plainly, to my mind, is the intention, it were better we discussed it early, and instead of advancing to these nations with a proposition that is to be flouted by the manner in which they receive it, better stand apart upon the dignity of ourselves and the honor of our country and take the fate of our own people, guided by their own wisdom and sustained in their own patriotism.

Mr. President, the hour is upon us when we cry to America, "Stand firm! This is America!" While we herald to the President of the United States, "Whatever course you take, we have confidence that under no condition could you be induced to surrender your country or yield her rights. This, your Congress, as your people, uphold your hands, sustain your body, and around you rally, to again announce to all the world that the United States and its President stand for America."

Mr. President, I thank the Chair and the Senate for their indulgence and devoted attention at this adjourning hour.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 18, 1934

The House met at 11 o'clock a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God and our Heavenly Father, we thank Thee for the great souls of the past who have bowed at the altar of prayer. Here they found courage and guidance that opened the way for nobler living and larger achievements; we pray for renewal of strength. In the realm of clearer vision may we find our delight and health in the channels of service. Heavenly Father, let us not be consumed by the fever of living or exhaust our vital energies in endless stress and strain. Just put Thy hand upon our hearts; speak to us, and may we be smitten with the finer issues of life. O breathe Thy sweetness and rest into our souls. Allow hindrances and obstacles to become the luminous points for our victorious spirits. Blessed Lord, we pray for our people; bring their lives through the deeps up to the highest levels of plenty and happiness. For their sakes may we take pleasure in necessities and distresses. As we serve them, may we make a highway of joy straight through the deserts of want and privation for every man, woman, and child of every section of the Union. In the name of our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 7483. An act to provide minimum pay for postal substitutes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and a concurrent resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1800. An act to provide for an investigation and report of losses resulting from the campaign for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruit fly by the Department of Agriculture;

S. 3235. An act to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the participation of the United States in A Century of Progress (the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration) to be held at Chicago, Ill., in 1933, authorizing an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes", approved February 8, 1932, to provide for participation in A Century of Progress in 1934, to authorize an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes; and

S.Con.Res. 13. To authorize the printing of additional copies of the hearings held before the special committee appointed to investigate air- and ocean-mail contracts.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday you conferred on me the honor of appointing me one of the conferees on the so-called "tax bill." I find in the RECORD of another body this morning a condemnation of the bill as it passed the House, and also an unnecessary and uncomplimentary reference to the Associated Press, saying that news was not being furnished, but opinions. The item in the Associated Press stated that there was "swelling opposition" to certain features of the bill. I confirm the viewpoint of the press, because when that article was printed, opposition to some Senate amendments was not known to the reading public. Probably it will be found that the objectionable amendments made in the other body did not have the approval of the Finance Committee, so that the quoted item, "that the so-called 'Senate progressives' ran away with the Finance Committee", is undoubtedly correct. The remarks made in the other body relative to the bill as passed by this House is the very best of evidence that we passed a good bill, and that the rule under which the bill was passed was a proper and meritorious one; unfortunately, such a rule could not meet with favor in another body. I may say now, not necessarily as the result of criticism that the House is given in this item to which I have referred, but from my own convictions, that we have a better bill than the Senate passed, and that I, for one, as a conferee through your appointment, announce now that these items of tremendous increases above the House bill in most instances will not meet with my approval in conference. [Applause.]

BONDS OF HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I call up conference report on the bill (S. 2999) to guarantee the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2999) to guarantee the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"That (a) section 4 (c) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended to read as follows:

"'(c) The Corporation is authorized to issue bonds in an aggregate amount not to exceed $2,000,000,000, which may be sold by the Corporation to obtain funds for carrying out the purposes of this section, or exchanged as hereinafter provided. Such bonds shall be in such forms and denominations, shall mature within such periods of not more than 18 years from the date of their issue, shall bear such rates of interest not exceeding 4 percent per annum, shall be subject to such terms and conditions, and shall be issued in such manner and sold at such prices, as may be prescribed by the Corporation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Such bonds shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to interest and principal by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face thereof, and such bonds shall be lawful investments, and may be accepted as security, for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds, the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or any officer or officers thereof. In the event that the Corporation shall be unable to pay upon demand, when due, the principal of, or interest on, such bonds, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the holder the amount thereof which is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and thereupon to the extent of the amount so paid the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holders of such bonds. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, is authorized to purchase any bonds of the Corporation issued under this subsection which are guaranteed as to interest and principal, and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the Corporation's bonds hereunder. The Secretary of the Treasury may, at any time, sell any of the bonds of the Corporation acquired by him under this subsection. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of the bonds of the Corporation shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States. The bonds issued by the Corporation under this subsection shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States or any District, Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority. The Corporation, including its franchise, its capital, reserves and surplus, and its loans and income, shall likewise be exempt from such taxation; except that any real property of the Corporation shall be subject to taxation to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed. No such bonds shall be issued in excess of the assets of the Corporation, including the assets to be obtained from the proceeds of such bonds, but a failure to comply with this provision shall not invalidate the bonds or the guaranty of the same. The Corporation shall have power to purchase in the open market at any time and at any price not to exceed par any of the bonds issued by it. Any such bonds so purchased may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, be sold or resold at any time and at any price. For a period of 6 months after the date of this subsection, as amended, takes effect, the Corporation is authorized to refund any of its bonds issued prior to such date or any bonds issued after such date in compliance with commitments of the Corporation outstanding on such date, upon application of the holders thereof, by exchanging therefor bonds of an equal face amount issued by the Corporation under this subsection as amended, and bearing interest at such rate as may be prescribed by the Corporation with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; but such rate shall not be less than that first fixed after this subsection, as amended, takes effect on bonds exchanged by the Corporation for home mortgages. For the purpose of such refunding the Corporation is further authorized to increase its total bond issue in an amount equal to the amount of the bonds so refunded. Nothing in this subsection, as amended, shall be construed to prevent the Corporation from issuing bonds in compliance with commitments of the Corporation on the date of this subsection, as amended, takes effect.'

"'(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) of this section (except with respect to refunding) shall not apply to any bonds heretofore issued by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation under such section 4 (c), or to any bonds hereafter issued in compliance with commitments of the Corporation outstanding on the date of enactment of this act.'"

"SEC. 2. Section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"'(l) No home mortgage or other obligation or lien shall be acquired by the Corporation under subsection (d), and no cash advance shall be made under subsection (f), unless the applicant was in involuntary default on June 13, 1933, with respect to the indebtedness on his real estate and is unable to carry or refund his present mortgage indebtedness: Provided, That the foregoing limitation shall not apply in any case in which it is specifically shown to the satisfaction of the Corporation that a default after such date was due to unemployment or to economic conditions or misfortune beyond the control of the applicant, or in any case in which the home mortgage or other obligation or lien is held by an institution which is in liquidation.

"'(m) In all cases where the Corporation is authorized to advance cash to provide for necessary maintenance and to make necessary repairs it is also authorized to advance cash or exchange bonds for the rehabilitation, modernization, rebuilding, and enlargement of the homes financed; and in all cases where the Corporation has acquired a home mortgage or other obligation or lien it is authorized to advance cash or exchange bonds to provide for the maintenance, repair, rehabilitation, modernization, rebuilding, and enlargement of the homes financed and to take an additional lien, mortgage, or conveyance to secure such additional advance or to take a new home mortgage for the whole indebtedness; but the total amount advanced shall in no case exceed the respective amounts or percentages of value of the real estate as elsewhere provided in this section. Not to exceed $200,000,000 of the proceeds derived from the sale of bonds of the Corporation shall be used in making cash advances to provide for necessary maintenance and necessary repairs and for the rehabilitation, modernization, rebuilding, and enlargement of real estate securing the home mortgages and other obligations and liens acquired by the Corporation under this section.'"

"SEC. 3. The sixth sentence of section 4 (d) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended to read as follows: 'The Corporation may at any time grant an extension of time to any home owner for the payment of any installment of principal or interest owed by him to the Corporation if, in the judgment of the Corporation, the circumstances of the home owner and the condition of the security justify such extension.'"

"SEC. 4. Subsection (g) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(g) The Corporation is further authorized to exchange bonds and to advance cash to redeem or recover homes lost by the owners by foreclosure or forced sale by a trustee under a deed of trust or under power of attorney, or by voluntary surrender to the mortgagee subsequent to January 1, 1930, subject to the limitations provided in subsection (d) of this section.'

"SEC. 5. Section 5 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"'(j) In addition to the authority to subscribe for preferred shares in Federal savings and loan associations, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized on behalf of the United States to subscribe for any amount of full paid income shares in such associations, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to subscribe for such full paid income shares upon the request of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. Payment on such shares may be called from time to time by the association, subject to the approval of said Board and the Secretary of the Treasury, and such payments shall be made from the funds appropriated pursuant to subsection (g) of this section; but the amount paid in by the Secretary of the Treasury for shares under this subsection and such subsection (g), together shall at no time exceed 75 percent of the total investment in the shares of such association by the Secretary of the Treasury and other shareholders. Each such association shall issue receipts for such payments by the Secretary of the Treasury in such form as may be approved by said Board and such receipts shall be evidence of the interest of the United States in such full paid income shares to the extent of the amount so paid. No request for the repurchase of the full paid income shares purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be made for a period of 5 years from the date of such purchase, and thereafter requests by the Secretary of the Treasury for the repurchase of such shares by such associations shall be made at the discretion of the Board; but no such association shall be requested to repurchase any such shares in any one year in an amount in excess of 10 percent of the total amount invested in such shares by the Secretary of the Treasury. Such repurchases shall be made in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Board for such associations.

"'(k) When designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, any Federal savings and loan association or member of any Federal home loan bank may be employed as fiscal agent of the Government under such regulations as may be prescribed by said Secretary and shall perform all such reasonable duties as fiscal agent of the Government as may be required of it. Any Federal savings and loan association or member of any Federal home loan bank may act as agent for any other instrumentality of the United States when designated for that purpose by such instrumentality of the United States.'

"SEC. 6. Section 5 (i) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended to read as follows:

"'(i) Any member of a Federal home-loan bank may convert itself into a Federal savings and loan association under this act upon a vote of 51 percent or more of the votes cast at a legal meeting called to consider such action; but such conversion shall be subject to such rules and regulations as the Board may prescribe, and thereafter the converted association shall be entitled to all the benefits of this section and shall be subject to examination and regulation to the same extent as other associations incorporated pursuant to this act.'

"SEC. 7. (a) The first sentence of the eighth paragraph of section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is further amended by inserting before the semicolon, after the words 'Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act', a comma and the following: 'or by the deposit or pledge of bonds issued under the provisions of subsection (c) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended.'

"(b) Paragraph (b) of section 14 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is further amended by inserting after the words 'bonds of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation having maturities from date of purchase of not exceeding 6 months', a comma and the following: 'bonds issued under the provisions of subsection (c) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, and having maturities from date of purchase of not exceeding 6 months.'

"SEC. 8. The Federal Reserve banks are authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to act as depositaries, custodians, and fiscal agents for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

"SEC. 9. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation is authorized to buy bonds or debentures of Federal home loan banks upon such terms as may be agreed upon or to loan money to Federal home loan banks upon such terms as may be agreed upon but not to exceed $50,000,000 shall be invested or advanced under this section.

"SEC. 10. The first sentence of section 10 (b) of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: 'unless the amount of the debt secured by such home mortgage is less than 50 percent of the value of the real estate with respect to which the home mortgage was given, as such real estate was appraised when the home mortgage was made.'

"SEC. 11. Section 6 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentences: 'For the purposes of this section the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to allocate and make immediately available to the Board, out of the funds appropriated pursuant to section 5 (g), the sum of $500,000. Such sum shall be in addition to the funds appropriated pursuant to this section, and shall be subject to the call of the Board and shall remain available until expended.'

"SEC. 12. Subsection (e) of section 8 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(e) No person, partnership, association, or corporation shall, directly or indirectly, solicit, contract for, charge or receive, or attempt to solicit, contract for, charge or receive any fee, charge, or other consideration from any person applying to the Corporation for a loan, whether bond or cash, except ordinary fees authorized and required by the Corporation for services actually rendered for examination and perfection of title, appraisal, and like necessary services. Any person, partnership, association, or corporation violating the provisions of this subsection shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.'

"SEC. 13. Subsection (k) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is hereby amended by inserting a new sentence after the second sentence of such subsection as follows: 'All payments upon principal of loans made by the Corporation shall under regulations made by the Corporation be applied to the retirement of the bonds of the Corporation.'

"SEC. 14. The eighth sentence of section 4 (a) of the act entitled 'An act to provide for the establishment of a Corporation to aid in the refinancing of farm debts, and for other purposes', approved January 31, 1934, is amended to read as follows: 'No such bonds shall be issued in excess of the assets of the Corporation, including the assets to be obtained from the proceeds of such bonds, but a failure to comply with this provision shall not invalidate the bonds or the guaranty of the same.'

"SEC. 15. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby."

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2999) to guarantee the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Under section 1 of the bill (providing for guaranteeing the principal and interest of the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation) a provision was included authorizing for a period of 6 months the exchange of bonds of the Corporation so guaranteed for bonds issued under existing law which are guaranteed as to interest only. The House amendment authorizes such exchange of bonds for a period of 12 months. The bill as agreed to in conference retains the provision of the Senate authorizing such exchange for a 6 months' period.

In the same section it was provided in the Senate bill that bonds purchased by the Corporation might be sold or resold at any time and at any price not to exceed par. The House amendment removed the limitation upon the sale or resale of such bonds at not to exceed par. The bill as agreed to in conference retains the provision of the House amendment.

Section 2 of the Senate bill contained a provision to the effect that in the appointment of agents and the selection of employees of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation no partisan political test or qualification should be permitted or given consideration, but that all such agents or employees should be appointed, employed, or promoted solely upon the basis of merit and efficiency. It was also provided that any member of the Board who was found guilty of a violation of such provision should be removed from office by the President, and that any agent or employee of the Corporation who violated the provision should be removed from office by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. There was no corresponding provision in the House amendment. The bill as agreed to in conference eliminates the provision of the Senate bill.

Section 4 of the Senate bill extended the provision of existing law relating to the redemption of recovery of homes lost by foreclosure or forced sale, or by voluntary surrender to the mortgagee, so as to provide that the Corporation might act with respect to homes so lost within 3 years prior to the filing of an application with the Corporation to accomplish the redemption or recovery. The House amendment extended the authority of the Corporation in that respect so as to include cases where homes were lost subsequent to January 1, 1930. The bill as agreed to in conference retains the provision of the House amendment.

Section 7 of the Senate bill provided that bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation which are guaranteed as to principal and interest might be deposited or pledged by member banks of the Federal Reserve System as security for 15-day loans from the Federal Reserve banks and that such bonds having maturities from date of purchase of not exceeding 6 months might be bought and sold by the Federal Reserve banks. The House amendment added a similar provision with respect to bonds or notes issued under the provisions of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act. The bill as agreed to in conference eliminates the House provision.

Section 9 of the Senate bill authorized the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to buy bonds or debentures of Federal home-loan banks and to make loans to such banks. The House amendment added a limitation that not to exceed $50,000,000 should be invested or advanced for such purposes. The bill as agreed to in conference retains the limitation contained in the House amendment.

Section 10 of the bill provided for making the Secretary of the Treasury an ex officio member of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. The House amendment and the bill as agreed to in conference eliminate this provision.

A new section was added to the bill by the House amendment eliminating the requirement of section 10 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act that mortgages to be eligible as collateral for loans by the Federal Home Loan Banks should not be past due more than 6 months when presented. There was no corresponding provision in the Senate bill. The bill as agreed to in conference retains the provision proposed to be eliminated from existing law by the House amendment with a limitation that provides in effect that home mortgages may be so accepted as collateral even though they are past due more than 6 months if the amount of the debt secured by the mortgage is less than 50 percent of the value of the real estate with respect to which the mortgage was given as determined by the appraisal of the real estate at the time the mortgage was made.

Section 12 of the House amendment modifies the provision of section 8 (e) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 with respect to fees which may be charged in connection with loans made by the Corporation. There was no similar provision in the Senate bill. The bill as agreed to in conference retains the House provision.

Section 13 of the House amendment added a provision to the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 requiring that payments of principal on loans made by the Corporation should be applied to the retirement of the bonds of the Corporation. There was no corresponding provision in the Senate bill. The bill as agreed to in conference retains the provision of the House amendment.

HENRY B. STEAGALL,
T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH,
ANNING S. PRALL,
ROBERT LUCE,
CARROLL L. BEEDY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, there are only two substantial changes made in the bill by the conferees. On other amendments submitted by the House, conferees yielded.

The two changes are, first, one which eliminates a provision carried in the House bill making the bonds of the home-loan banks and the bonds of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation eligible for rediscount at the Federal Reserve banks. This action was taken because of the fact that these bonds were based upon long-term real-estate loans, and the conferees concluded that they should not be made rediscountable at the Federal Reserve bank. Bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation are guaranteed by the Government and therefore stand in a different category.

Mr. BLANTON. Is there anything in disagreement between the conferees?

Mr. STEAGALL. There is no disagreement among the conferees.

Mr. BLANTON. Then there is a complete agreed conference report here to be voted up or down.

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes. The other point on which the House yielded was in an amendment to the original Home Loan Bank Act, which placed a limitation upon loans, one clause being that where mortgages in arrears for more than 6 months should not be eligible as a basis for rediscount by the home-loan bank. This has been amended in conference to provide that the exception will not prevail where the value of the property does not exceed 50 percent of its original appraised value.

Mr. Speaker, those are the substantial changes made in conference from the provisions of the House bill.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I voted for this bill because I thought it was sound and a good way to help the country in obtaining a certain amount of credit extension, but I have been disappointed in the administration of the bill. My experience has been that it is practically impossible to get money on a loan, and there is too much redtape in its administration.

I have in mind at the present time a specific loan that I helped the man make out the papers for on the 11th of last September. This man's property has been appraised three separate times. Each set of appraisers has approved the loan. The last appraisal was on February 15, and at that time they said, "This is final, you are going to get your money." Up to day before yesterday he had not received a reply from the final appraisal.

It seems to me that there must be something wrong in the administration of this law if it takes so long to get a reasonably good loan out of this organization. I do not know what the gentleman from Alabama has in mind or whether he knows about the amount of redtape that is connected with getting one of these loans through, but certainly there ought to be some way that a man with reasonably good security, and where it is essential to the man making the application that he should get it before he loses his property. Does the gentleman know anything about the conditions throughout the country or how long it does take to get an average loan through?

Mr. STEAGALL. I may say to the gentleman that, of course, I have no knowledge of the individual application to which the gentleman has referred. It is impossible for Members of Congress to keep track of individual cases pending before the Home Owners' Loan organization.

Mr. SNELL. I do not mean individual cases.

Mr. STEAGALL. May I say to the gentleman that there was much work to be done in setting up this organization. It is a big institution, doing a big work, and I am glad to say that the corporation is doing the job in a big way.

There is no way by which a Government institution of this kind can avoid some degree of redtape. There is no way by which under an organization of this kind a citizen can ride up to the front door of an office and park his car or hitch his horse and go in and sign a mortgage for a loan and take the money with him. This is an impossibility. There never has been a Government-managed institution in connection with which there were not frequent complaints along the line of the one submitted by the gentleman from New York.

In this connection I may say, Mr. Speaker, that under the original Home Loan Bank Act, passed during the Hoover administration, after that law was in operation for nearly a year, up to June 1933, only $50,000,000 in loans had been made. The new organization set up by the act of Congress of last year, under the present administration, in less than a year has lent approximately $500,000,000 to more than 150,000 home owners who have been relieved and enabled to save their homes from foreclosure.

The corporation is now lending between $35,000,000 and $40,000,000 a week for the relief of home owners. They are lending in a week, under the present administration, under the recent act, almost as much as was lent by the original Home Loan Bank Board in a year, and I think the rate at which we are going may be said to be reasonably rapid and efficient. It only takes a moment's reflection to see that at the rate at which we are lending we shall soon exhaust the funds available, so the Board, of course, must use reasonable discretion.

Mr. SNELL. Perhaps some of the other organizations are more efficient than the one in the State of New York, but I may say to the gentleman that the head of the New York organization is Vincent Dailey, the special assistant to the Postmaster General. He has been the head of the organization, so far as I know, since last fall. I have heard considerable complaint, and I do not mean complaint for political reasons, but complaints from the people, to the effect that it has been impossible for them to get a loan through the Home Loan Corporation.

Mr. STEAGALL. It has been impossible, as a general rule, to take care of the applications as fast as they have come in. This is necessarily so, and, in my judgment, will continue to be so.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If the gentleman will yield, in the case the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] refers to, has the mortgagee agreed to accept the bonds?

Mr. SNELL. He has done everything they have asked him to do and the property has been appraised three times.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I submit if that has been the case there should be no delay, and there is no such delay in my own State. As soon as the mortgagee agrees to accept the bonds and the appraisal has been passed upon, if it is within the law, there is absolutely no delay in my State.

Mr. SNELL. We have had delays all the time and there has been a great deal of trouble in getting any money from the organization.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The only delay I know of has been caused by the mortgagee's not agreeing to accept the bonds, because they are not guaranteed by the Government. They are now so guaranteed and are selling above par and this should expedite the matter. The gentleman, I am sure, will recall when the original bill was pending I offered a motion which was defeated that sought to guarantee the bonds as well as the interest. I renewed my efforts to guarantee the bonds last June, and if that had been done thousands of homes would have been saved. You are simply doing today what I tried to do on two occasions and I am sorry to be required to say that the members of the gentleman's party opposed my amendments.

Mr. CARTER of California. If the gentleman will permit, I may say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] that in my particular city of Oakland in the State of California the home-loan office was opened about the middle of last August. The place was flooded with applicants. Many of the mortgagees agreed to accept the bonds. On the 27th of November I checked up the office, and not one single loan had been completed up to that time. I telegraphed the President of the United States on that day asking him if he could not do something to expedite the work of passing these loans, and he referred my letter to the home-loan office here. And in due time my telegram was answered. I want to say that my statement here is no reflection on the management of the office at Oakland, Calif. I know the man in charge there, and he is a good, loyal Democrat to be sure, but I believe he has been doing his utmost to get these loans through, but they were lodged somewhere else.

Let me say further that notwithstanding the numerous complaints that have been made about the situation there, a few days ago the Representatives from California received numerous wires from individuals who were interested, complaining that the same condition, in large measure, still exists, and the home owners were losing their homes. The matter was taken up here with Mr. Delano, who has taken steps, I believe, effective steps, to remedy this situation; but I sincerely trust a little more speed or expedition in passing on these loans will be shown in the future than has been shown in the past, particularly in the State of California. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentleman that speed is not the only thing desired or contemplated under this legislation.

If the Board had nothing but speed in mind, it would be easy to dish out this money to those who come first, but it is important that the Board take time to go properly into each individual application in order that the funds of the Government may be devoted to the purposes for which they were intended and that loans made may inure to the benefit of home owners who are in danger of losing their homes and having their families turned into the streets and highways. The law should be administered with sufficient care to carry its benefits to worthy applicants for whose benefit the law was passed, and not for mortgagees who are only interested in making collections.

There were plenty of mortgagees over all the country anxious to exchange their mortgages for bonds, either with or without Government guaranty. There has been a rush on the part of mortgagees to take advantage of the benefits of the legislation. I feel sure that the Board is undertaking to carry out the purposes of the law. I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS. Let me say that, in my judgment, there is not a Government department that has been rendering more efficient and diligent service than the Home Loan Bank Board. In my own State we have an efficient organization, and they have made quite a record. I think that is generally true throughout the country.

There are individual cases in my district where there has been considerable delay, as stated by the gentleman from New York, but in every instance there has been a good reason for such delay, involving questions of title, questions of value, and other questions which, as the gentleman from Alabama has well said, require the attention of local officials, and in many cases the Home Loan Bank Board here, in order to carry out the purposes of the law, which is to guarantee, or, rather, to protect, the home owners from foreclosure. At the same time there is a responsibility resting on those in charge of this activity to see to it that the United States Government is reasonably and properly protected. I am glad to say this much concerning the Board and its efficient organization.

Mrs. GREENWAY. If the gentleman will yield, I cannot help but feel that this must be a matter of local management for the reason that in Arizona there is no institution of the Government that has been acting with greater efficiency and in a more helpful way than the home-loan institution.

We had, at first, very much the same paralysis, but now that has been relieved, and they will reopen a case that has once been turned down and reconsider it. We have been getting wonderful results and I cannot help feeling that this matter is due to local management.

Mr. CARTER of California. Regardless of whether the trouble is due to local mismanagement, the home owner is losing his home. It may be temporary paralysis in my State, but I fear it will become permanent.

I am just as solicitous as is the gentleman from Tennessee about seeing that these loans are made so that they will protect the Government of the United States. But I do submit to the gentleman from Tennessee and to the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency that when home owners have filed their applications in August and until the 27th day of November not one of them has been approved there is fault somewhere. It may be local inefficiency; but, regardless of what it is, I hope in the future that this clogging up will be done away with.

Mrs. GREENWAY. All I can say is I think we should all help the gentleman, if that is the case.

Mr. CARTER of California. I thank the gentlewoman from Arizona very much.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], under the previous administration we had a former Member of this House from New Jersey, who was manager of the Home Loan Corporation for the State of New York, or at least, the city of New York. I do not know of one loan that was granted during his administration. During the last 8 or 9 months we have had thousands granted in our city and in the suburbs of the city, while during the previous administration I could not find one loan that was granted under that former Member of this House.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand it, the conditions were entirely different at that time from what they were later. The legislation was entirely different. At that time the whole thing was new and there was no organization, but at the present time they are supposed to have an organization.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No; that was for taking care of mortgages. There was not a home saved in our State during the previous administration.

Mr. SNELL. I am not criticizing from a political standpoint, but I think the time has come when we should get more action through well-organized loaning agencies in our State.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We are getting more action and real action where we are entitled to it.

Mr. SNELL. Your own appraisers say it is all right, and why cannot we get the money?

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LUCE. To say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] that what he is referring to is the conduct of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which was not yet created, the bill not having been passed until the present administration came into power.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes; it was passed in the previous administration.

Mr. LUCE. Oh, no.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And it was in effect for over a year.

Mr. SNELL. It is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. LUCE. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation is a product of this Congress.

Mr. STEAGALL. Under the Home Loan Bank Act of the former administration, not $50,000,000 was loaned. Of course, the purposes of the legislation were identical.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. COLDEN. In southern California, where I observed the opening of these offices in Los Angeles, an office was established where probably 20 people were taking applications, and people were lined up for a block long on the street outside. After those applications were made, it was some weeks before appraisals were made, and there were thousands of those applications in that office, and it necessarily takes a lot of time to clear up and make the appraisals on those applications.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. In Joplin, Mo., where I live, we had commissioners there, Judge Kelsey Norman and John Stauffer, and they made loans to the number of about 900. No person in my congressional district has lost his home since this law went into effect. I wired President Roosevelt on two or three occasions where loan companies had sold people's homes, and every one of the sales was stopped, and they took these bonds, and the homes have been saved to the people; and I say to you gentlemen on the other side of the aisle who are complaining, when did you ever pass a law to save the home of any farmer or town man in this country where you saved it, and what did you do during the 60 years that you were running this Government?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. I rise to say to the distinguished minority leader from New York [Mr. SNELL] that the little State of Delaware has the edge on the great State of New York. There have been no complaints or criticisms whatsoever in my State as to the manner in which the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has functioned and is functioning. I will admit that it took a few weeks to get started. There were numerous applications. It took a short period of time for the officials to become acquainted with the provisions of the law and as to how it should be administered in fairness to the borrower as well as the Government.

The State manager, Mr. Thomas B. Young, a very capable and energetic realtor, and his complete office force in each of the counties have been very industrious. They have rendered good service. Many loans have been made and foreclosure proceedings stopped. The H.O.L.C. has been a very valuable agency for the salvation of the homes of many of my constituents.

I am very happy to be privileged to make this observation.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. Was it not perfectly natural and to be expected that there would be some delay in functioning where new machinery was being instituted and the personnel had to be selected and instructed in their respective duties? The reference of the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] was to the effect that the organization in that State began in August and that there had been no loans made in November. Was there not a necessary delay in the organization of the new machinery and in acquiring and instructing the personnel in their duties?

Mr. STEAGALL. Certainly.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to comment on the situation that has been referred to regarding the operation of the home-loan office in California. I call the attention of the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] to the fact that in southern California we have no such condition as he describes in Oakland, Calif. There was, however, in the first few months a condition in California brought about by the fact that our title situation is a peculiar one. We have title companies there that pass on these titles, and it takes time to iron out legal technicalities so that the owner can give a title to property under the conditions that the Government has laid down.

That is a situation that probably does not exist in many other States, and I am very certain that the number of loans that have been granted in southern California are comparable to those in other sections of the country in promptitude and in efficiency. I know of a dozen cases where applications were reopened after having been turned down by one appraiser. A different appraiser was sent out, and the loan was finally put through. There is no warrant at all for the statement that the Home Loan Corporation has not functioned efficiently, at least in southern California, because I know of my own knowledge that it has.

It is true that many loans have been applied for where the property, by reason of its character, would not qualify under the terms of the act. But I know of no instance where the mortgagee was willing to take the bonds and the property stood up under an appraisal where a loan has not been granted promptly.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BUSBY].

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, of course there are varied types of reports to be made on the functioning of this corporation. In the first place, the organization had to be set up, and when it was set up about the only thing it had with which to make loans were bonds. The principal of these bonds was not guaranteed by the Government, although the interest was. Consequently, every mortgagee to whom the bonds were offered was not always ready to take them; they had to make some investigation; they had to determine whether or not the bonds were worth while. So there was a slowness on the part of the people to whom these bonds were offered to exchange perfectly good mortgages for the bonds. The bonds did not take so readily.

So we came on down to the time when it was perfectly apparent that the institution could not function unless the bonds were guaranteed by the Government, and that is the cause of this particular move. Just as soon as the Government began to show that it would likely get behind the bonds they began to rise in price. Now that the Government guaranty of the principal of these bonds is to become a reality, the situation will be satisfactory.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman's speech clearly demonstrates that had the owners of the house voted for my amendment at the time the original bill was considered as well as at the time the second bill was considered the principal of these bonds would have been guaranteed and there would have been none of this difficulty and delay. The gentlemen on the Republican side who are now complaining were among those who voted against my amendment.

Mr. BUSBY. Now I understand that the Members understand that in many sections of the country there was created a condition by the set-up, and of the personnel, which afforded just cause for complaint; but this condition is being straightened out.

I shall make one further observation and then yield the floor. We have in this bill proposed an amendment which makes it possible for those who lost their homes by foreclosure sale or by any other forced method or who had to surrender title to their property to the mortgagee to become eligible for a loan, providing the separation from their property was after January 1, 1930. Instead of providing 2 years from the date of the application, we now go back to a fixed date, January 1, 1930; all persons who have been deprived of their property under a mortgage foreclosure or like condition are, by the provisions of this bill, made eligible for a loan just like the others who are in possession of their property.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUSBY. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not believe that the gentleman has strictly interpreted the cause for the delay when he assigns as the reason the fact the bonds were not guaranteed as to principal. The experience of the branch offices is that when a man makes an application, the manager or someone there in authority tells the applicant that he must first of all secure the written consent of the mortgagee to accept the bonds. The application is not worth the paper it is written on unless it is accompanied by the consent of the mortgagee. Now, that is not the moving reason for the delay; and that is not the reason why only 1,047 loans were made on 68,000 applications in the State of Illinois during 8 months' operation.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, I believe the gentleman's statement clearly shows that that is the reason why the plan did not work out; the manager would not accept the applications unless they were accompanied by a written agreement on the part of the mortgagee to accept the bonds, bonds that were not guaranteed by the Government.

We have available $2,000,000,000 of money with which to take care of $15,000,000,000 or $18,000,000,000 of eligible applications. It is an impossibility, of course, to take care of $15,000,000,000 of loans with $2,000,000,000 of funds unless the funds are increased. But I believe the thing pointed out by the gentleman from Illinois illustrates what I said, that it was due to a lack of confidence in the bonds and a knowledge that in many instances the bonds could not be applied on the mortgage.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is not true so far as our own situation is concerned.

Mr. BUSBY. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit, I may say that practically everyone who has spoken on this subject this morning has spoken from the local point of view and not on the general principles involved. We are trying to make reports on our own particular towns and communities so that it will appear that we are interested in their welfare, as we ought to be; but I am speaking generally about the application of the principle, and I do not care to get into those local situations which ought to be corrected.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I agree in large part with the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi as to the reason for the delay in getting this corporation into operation. Until the time when it appeared that the principal of these bonds, as well as the interest, would be guaranteed by the Government, they ranged in price from 80 cents to 85 cents on the dollar.

It is perfectly apparent that a business man when he has a loan on a man's property secured by a first mortgage for 50 percent of its value is not going to turn over a 100-percent security for an 85-percent security; so that it recurs to the question of not only determining titles by abstracts, determining procedure and the personnel of the various officers and setting up of new machinery, but it comes back to the very question that was under debate in this House on the 28th of last April when the original Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act was under discussion and debate in the House. On that date I offered an amendment substituting the words "direct obligations of the United States Government", in lieu of the words "instrumentalities of", which would have guaranteed both principal and interest of these bonds. The phrase "instrumentalities of" was merely a high-sounding deceptive expression, while the words of my amendment had meaning. The amendment was defeated by a very marked vote. As a result, the matter has been delayed.

May I venture the prediction that since the Government has guaranteed these bonds, and they are now around 100 cents to the dollar, there will be no more delay. May I make this further observation: If we had speeded the thing up and lost a few million dollars on the transactions, there would have been more condemnation on the floor of the House for losing that money than there has been here today because of the fact that they have not speeded up the program of loaning more money.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROWE].

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, I can report for the State of Indiana that Mr. E. Kirk McKinney is doing a good job and we are not having many complaints at this time. I talked with a competent business man in my home town, Mr. Walter H. Sherrill, who is appraiser for the home-loan bank, and he tells me that because of delays which were beyond their control it took several months to get started. He is a very competent, high-class business man. He pointed out good reasons why they could not get under way for some months, but stated that they are going in high gear at this time and that loans are being closed rapidly and are augmented daily.

The Members of this House know that it is impossible to select 100 men and to have all of these 100 men 100 percent efficient. There are bound to be instances where you select someone who is not 100 percent efficient, and this may account for some of the delay in some sections. I am sure Mr. McKinney is doing a good job in my State, and the local boards in my district are excellent men and rendering the best service possible. They are saving hundreds of homes for distressed home owners in the Ninth Indiana District.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Alabama stated, approximately $500,000,000 has been loaned to distressed home owners of this country, but in addition to this many thousands of distressed home owners have been aided materially by the very existence of this act, by its operation, and by the fact that they have applications pending to refinance their homes. A great good is being accomplished by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which in its work will be the greatest corporation in this country.

I come from Ohio, representing that State at large. In Ohio we have made the most outstanding record of all. In our State Henry G. Brunner, formerly chairman of the Democratic State executive committee of Ohio, was designated as State administrator. Under his authority at the present time approximately $80,000,000 has been loaned to more than 30,000 distressed home owners in our State. I can sympathize somewhat with the statement of the distinguished minority leader because, with the exception of Illinois, the record made by the State of New York and by the administrator of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation of New York is the worst of the entire country.

May I refer to the record? In Ohio during the month of February 1934 there were 520 salaried field employees of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. These 520 employees closed more than 7,000 loans. The average time it takes to close a loan in Ohio is 30 days from the date of the application.

In New York State during February there were 760 field employees, and those field employees closed only 1,286 loans, as against the 7,098 loans closed by the 520 Ohio employees.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. How about California?

Mr. YOUNG. In other words, in Ohio in February of this year three field employees closed 40 loans during the entire month. In New York State one field employee closed 1.69 of a loan, and in Illinois the situation is even worse. In Illinois 442 salaried field employees closed only 181 loans. In other words, it took three employees in the State of Illinois of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to close one loan in the entire month. In Ohio, under the administration of Henry G. Brunner, with the fine organization and the efficient work of that organization, the loans of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation are costing the Government an average of $14 a loan. In New York State the loans are costing the taxpayers of this country $122 a loan.

Mr. HASTINGS. What does the gentleman mean by the word "closed"?

Mr. YOUNG. By the word "closed" I mean an application has been made, the loan has been absolutely completed, and the money paid to the home owner.

In Ohio $88,000,000 has been paid to the home owners during the period of its operation. In New York State only $15,000,000 was paid to the home owners in the same time, and in Illinois about $4,000,000. In Ohio the record is outstanding. In New York State and in Illinois the work of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation is indeed the joker in the new deal.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I greatly deplore the conditions which exist in Illinois. The Members from Illinois have endeavored to bring about better cooperation and more speedy action on the part of the Administrator in the State of Illinois. Within the last 3 weeks the Members from Illinois have waited upon Mr. Fahey, chairman of the corporation, as well as some of the members of the board. We have been assured that the red tape and the delay in Illinois will be eliminated and that henceforth a better service will be forthcoming to the 38,000 applicants. We, of course, deplore exceedingly the fact that we are behind other States in obtaining relief to the people.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to my colleague from Illinois.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Is it not a fact that Illinois is in the hands of a Republican manager at this time?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not believe that is proper.

Mr. SABATH. I do not know. It is charged that the one in charge of this important work in Illinois is a Republican, but I do not know. I am looking to the main administration here, and we have been assured of real action and that it will look into the matter and see to it that justice is done in Illinois.

I serve notice now that unless we secure the same treatment in Illinois that has been accorded to other sections and to other States, the corporation will hear from us in no uncertain terms. We will not tolerate existing conditions any longer.

Personally, I think this law has accomplished wonders and has saved hundreds of thousands of home owners. This was the intention of the administration, but, unfortunately, I repeat that this has not been the case in Illinois. However, we will shortly ascertain the underlying reason for the unnecessary delays in our State.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would like to have the gentleman from Illinois yield to me for an observation. Did we not get the same assurance from the corporation when they kicked out Mr. Donne, but conditions have not improved. They are now seeking to avoid responsibility by saying that Mr. Zander, the present manager, is a Republican, when you gentlemen know that he is a Democrat. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether he will endorse my resolution asking for a house cleaning and an investigation of the entire Illinois situation.

Mr. SABATH. In answer to the inquiry of my colleague [Mr. DIRKSEN] let me say this: As I have stated before, I have had several conferences with Mr. Fahey and members of the Board here in Washington. I will have another conference with Mr. Fahey within a day or two, and I shall ascertain from him the underlying reasons for the delay in action on loans in our State, and, whether Mr. Zander is charged as a Republican or a Democrat, if facts warrant, I assure the gentleman that I will give my colleague's resolution early consideration and seek to effect the investigation which he favors; but I am not willing now to favor an investigation that will retard the efforts which are, I am given to understand, under way.

We must not embarrass the corporation in any steps it may be taking to cure this regrettable condition, because to do so would only react most unfavorably to our own people by causing further delay in considering and granting loans. Let us give the corporation its due chance.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly apparent that the discussion has ranged far beyond anything that may be involved in the conference report.

It has been a pleasure for me to yield to gentlemen who desired to make observations in reference to this general matter, but in view of the fact so much time has been consumed, I now move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

AMATEUR BOXING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 828) to authorize boxing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 828) to authorize boxing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

On page 3, line 7, of the House engrossed amendments, strike out the word "amateur"; and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title of the bill; and agree to the same.

MARY T. NORTON,
VINCENT L. PALMISANO,
JAS. L. WHITLEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

WILLIAM H. KING, ARTHUR CAPPER,
ROYAL S. COPELAND,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 828) to authorize boxing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Section 1 of the Senate bill contained a direct prohibition against the voluntary engaging in the District of Columbia in a pugilistic encounter and provided a penalty of imprisonment for not more than 5 years for a violation of this prohibition. The term "pugilistic encounter" was defined by the bill so as to include generally any fistic meeting commonly embraced within the term "prize fight." The remainder of the bill was devoted to the supervision and control of amateur boxing in the District, through the establishment of a boxing commission for that purpose and provision for permits for the holding of boxing exhibitions and licenses for engaging therein. Provision was made authorizing charges to be made for such permits and licenses sufficient to defray the expenses of their issuance and other necessary expenses of the commission. Requirements contained in the Senate bill as to the conduct of boxing exhibitions were as follows: (1) Exhibitions to consist of one or more bouts, but no bout to continue for more than four rounds; (2) no round to exceed 3 minutes; (3) an interval of 1 minute between rounds; and (4) contestants to use gloves of not less than 8 ounces in weight. Penalties for violations of the act and rules and regulations of the commission were also provided for.

The House amendments serve to change the fundamental principle of the Senate bill in that they specifically authorize boxing in the District regardless of its amateur or professional nature. In keeping with this purpose the House amendments omit the first section of the Senate bill and substitute throughout the remainder of the bill the language necessary to give the commission general power over all boxing in the District, and makes reference to amateur boxing only in subsection (b) (1) in which the commission is given power to cooperate with organizations engaged in the promotion and control of amateur boxing. The limitation on the duration of boxing bouts is removed by the House amendments and no substitute limitation is contained therein. The general form of the Senate bill, together with such provisions as do not conflict with the theory of the House amendments, are retained in the amendments. The Senate recedes.

The House amendments propose to amend the title so as to read: "A bill to authorize boxing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

The Senate recedes.

MARY T. NORTON,
VINCENT L. PALMISANO,
JAS. L. WHITLEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee be permitted to sit during sessions of the House for the next 10 days.

Mr. WERNER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House be permitted to sit during sessions of the House for the next 10 days.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr Latta, one of his secretaries.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1935

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 9061) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such district for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes; and pending that, may I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] if we can reach an agreement to close debate this afternoon?

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that we should have at least two and a half hours of general debate. I have requests for approximately an hour and a half or two hours on this side.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Then it will be agreeable to the gentleman for us to run along and close debate tonight?

Mr. DITTER. Will that be with the assurance that there will not be any other conference reports brought up?

Mr. BLANTON. They are subject to be brought up at any time.

Mr. DITTER. I realize that. My only purpose is to try to allot the time to the gentlemen to whom I have promised time, and if we are confronted by the consideration of conference reports, I shall want to reduce the time I have tentatively alloted the gentlemen.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Then it is understood that we may run along and close general debate tonight and read the bill tomorrow?

Mr. DITTER. If the gentleman will yield further, it is understood that the debate this afternoon is to be general debate.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. It is understood that the debate will be concluded tonight, and we will proceed during the remainder of the day with general debate on the District of Columbia appropriation bill and at the conclusion of the session today general debate will be concluded and we will read the bill tomorrow?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be closed when the House adjourns tonight, and that the time be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] and me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H.R. 9061, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. SEARS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the lady from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON].

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, so much has been said and written with regard to the tuberculosis hospital that I decided to get the facts in the case by doing a little personal investigating.

While the story told in the press during the past few weeks led me to believe I would find bad conditions, I was not prepared for what I saw. In order to bring this picture before you of the suffering endured by these unfortunate victims of tuberculosis, crowded into an insanitary hospital, I shall merely give you the facts. If you find it difficult to believe that such conditions can exist in the most beautiful city in the country, then I beg that you call at the hospital and see for yourself.

This matter was brought to my attention because of a provision in the District appropriation bill calling for a tax reduction of 30 cents—from $1.50 to $1.20 a hundred. With every other city finding it necessary to increase taxes, it seemed amazing that Washington could lower the tax rate, particularly as it now has the lowest tax rate of any city of its size in the entire country. The answer is simple if one takes into consideration the few improvements that have been made in hospitals, schools, for sewage disposal, and various other necessities; and it is safe to say that in no city where men and women are elected to office by its citizenry would such conditions be tolerated. What I saw convinces me that the people of the District should have at least elected Representatives in the Congress of the United States to see to it that they receive a square deal.

While it is true that Members of Congress and particularly those on the District appropriations and legislative committees try to be fair and just in consideration of bills before them to benefit the District, it is equally true that every member of those committees has an entire home district to represent, and it is difficult to give the time to District legislation that in all fairness to the voteless people of Washington should be given. That has been particularly true during the past few years of stress and trouble. Therefore, I wish to state at the outset that it is in no spirit of criticism of the Appropriations Committee or its able chairman, for whom I feel a great respect and affection, that I shall attempt to bring before you the reasons why the taxes in the District should not be reduced. Instead of being reduced, I expect before this session of Congress is ended to come before you to plead for a bill that will grant permission to the Commissioners to borrow a sufficient amount of money from the R.F.C. to enable them to start some very badly needed improvements to safeguard the health of the people living here. I have not sufficient time to present the necessity for all of these improvements but hope in the time allotted me to present a picture of misery that will compel every Member of this House to become interested in the subject.

The bare facts are these:

A tuberculosis hospital, erected 30 or more years ago, which was supposed to be merely a wing of what was to be the finished hospital, providing shelter for 220 men and women, white and black, in a space that would be crowded to provide for 100. Three wards are filled with colored people, five wards with white people. In one ward I found 28 people crowded into a room about 20 by 40 feet—just about sufficient space between the beds to walk—one chair upon which the patient's clothing was kept, there being no room for a closet. This ward was provided with 1 bath, 1 shower, 4 basins, and 3 toilets, and the only recreation room for the ward was the square around which was grouped the toilets, basins, bath, and so forth. I found a card table in this space and a few patients playing cards.

Another ward, 22 by 40, contained 29 beds, all filled; still another, 22 beds; 28 in another packed in; no recreation room anywhere. A few outside porches are located in various parts of the building but these are all filled with beds so that they could not be used as recreation rooms. There are no examining rooms in the entire building. The operating room is poorly lighted. They have a very old X-ray machine which could not be used for a patient reclining, he would have to stand to be X-rayed. This, of course, is a great hardship on a very sick patient.

There are no private rooms available for operative cases. Until recently there was only 1 resident doctor, and he now has 1 assistant. There is 1 student interne; 16 nurses, 12 of whom are on days, working 10 hours, relieving one another for the other 2 hours. Four of the 16 are on nights with 12-hour shifts. There is a small, inadequate kitchen on each floor. There is one small room for nurses, about 8 by 8 feet. Four orderlies and doctors are all compelled to use the same bathroom, in which there is one toilet. There are no mechanics on the premises, but there is 1 engineer on nights and 2 during the day. They must take care of electric work and practically everything that must be done. Too great praise cannot be given Dr. Peabody and his small staff. How it is humanly possible for them to live and serve under existing conditions it is difficult to imagine. They are doing a noble work, and those responsible for such conditions should bow their heads in shame. In the most primitive town nothing would be found that is worse. There are 12 tiny shacks on the grounds of the hospital. These are used by the patients on the road to recovery. They are built of sheet iron, heated with a stove in winter, and very cold. In the summer, with the burning sun of Washington shining on them all day, they are absolute places of living torture. There are no toilet facilities in these huts, and the patients must travel to the main building on cold winter nights. Such conditions would be bad for well people, but absolutely cruel for sick people.

I found but one tuberculosis clinic in the city and that had no relation to the hospital. The hospital is under the public-welfare board of the District government and the clinic under Dr. Fowler, United States Health Service. There is now no place to send children suffering from TB. There are about 150 children now attending the so-called "health school", and it is expected that these will be sent to the new children's hospital when it is completed. I understand that this is about the capacity at that new hospital, so that there will still be no place for the hundreds of TB subjects over all Washington. These children should be cared for immediately. It is absolute cruelty to allow poor children to suffer and die for want of proper care in any community, much less a community of wealth and refinement. This is a city of marble buildings to carry on the functions of Government and the most precious asset the Government has must suffer because of the carelessness and indifference of those responsible for their well-being.

In my city, Jersey City, a modest city compared with Washington, we consider our greatest asset the health of the community. Our bill for hospitals for the poor is the largest one we have to pay but the people in that city have never objected to paying their part of a tax bill to give comfort to the poor. Nor do I believe that the people of Washington would object to doing their part if the necessity were properly presented to them. I have said and I repeat that I do not believe that the people of Washington want their taxes reduced at the price of human misery.

Just a few short weeks ago these people responded with enthusiasm to the call of Georgia when it was explained how important it was that proper facilities be built at Warm Springs to relieve suffering children. Children are much the same the world over and I feel confident that once the attention of the people of Washington is called to the cancer in their midst they will respond and serve notice on the legislators that they are unwilling to accept a reduction of 30 cents in their taxes when that money is spent to alleviate suffering and bring to the lives of hundreds of unfortunates relief they are in need of to give them a chance to live.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the lady yield to me?

Mrs. NORTON. Gladly.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Speaking of taxes, in view of the fact that taxes are lower in this city than anywhere else in the United States——

Mrs. NORTON. I mentioned that in the beginning of my statement.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Does not the lady think, in view of the fact that we have spent hundreds of millions of dollars for the beautification and improvement of the city, a city where the tax rate is lower than in any other city in the United States, that the citizens of Washington themselves should spend some of their own money to provide the improvements which the lady speaks of?

Mrs. NORTON. I think they would be glad to do so, but they are not permitted to use their available funds.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Does the lady think that the Government should spend $20,000,000 for that purpose?

Mrs. NORTON. Not $20,000,000, but $2,000,000, to take care of this hospital.

Mr. BLANTON. If the lady will yield, I do not think the gentleman from Alabama should be uneasy about the $20,000,000. That is a newspaper report.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I understood it was to be reported out.

Mr. BLANTON. It might be reported out, but does the gentleman think the House would pass a bill like that? I do not think it would.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I have no objection, of course, to Congress doing what it desires, but in a time like this it occurred to me that it was a pretty large expenditure to take out of the Public Treasury.

Mr. BLANTON. That was mere newspaper propaganda.

Mrs. NORTON. I think the gentleman will find that it is not newspaper propaganda. The Congress will decide that question. We intend to bring the bill in, to cover many necessities, in justice to the people of the District of Columbia who have been handicapped with no Representative either in the House or the Senate.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the lady yield?

Mrs. NORTON. Gladly.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. In response to the gentleman from Alabama, as far as my experience on your committee has been, I find that the people of the District do want to spend their money for better schools and better hospitals, but they have been handicapped in the past. I believe that they should have a Representative in Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. And does the gentleman think the District of Columbia should have two Senators at the other end of the Capitol?

Mrs. NORTON. As an example of what can be achieved through proper cooperation of the administration in order to eliminate the stigma of Washington having the fourth highest death rate from tuberculosis in the country, I shall quote what was accomplished in my county.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the lady from New Jersey has expired.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for 5 minutes more.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Missouri has stepped out for a moment, and I take the liberty of yielding the lady 2 additional minutes.

Mrs. NORTON. In 1907 our death rate was 204 per hundred thousand, and today it has dropped to 52 per hundred thousand. Infection among children exposed to tuberculosis in tubercular families in 1910 was 80 percent. Today it is 44 percent. These figures are based upon the study of approximately 9,000 children tested in our clinics in the last 2 years. This is clearly owing to scientific study and cooperative effort.

In order to combat tuberculosis effectively, adequate hospital provision must be supplemented by TB clinics or dispensaries, augmented by visiting nurses, all of which are absolutely necessary to definitely control the tuberculosis problem.

My dear colleagues, I have gone deeply into this subject because of a conviction that deaths from tuberculosis can be held to a minimum, and because I believe those of us who have the power to assist in this great humanitarian problem and fail to do so shall be called upon to answer to God for our neglect.

In discussing this question I am reminded of an incident of my childhood, when a bereaved mother came to my home to seek comfort from my mother. She had lost six lovely children—all she had—through lack of knowledge and care. Little was then known of how to combat the disease, and when it struck a family death seemed inevitable. Today, thanks to the marvelous work of scientific men and women, cures are made permanent and fewer little caskets are carried from the homes of the poor. God grant the day may come when Washington will join the ranks of those other progressive cities in preventing tuberculosis.

Mr. Chairman, I call attention now to a report from the Medical Society of the District of Columbia. It was presented on February 21, 1934, and contains a study made by the Medical Society in respect to the matter of tuberculosis in the District. That report reads as follows:

The subcommittee on tuberculosis of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia presented their report on the facilities for the treatment and prevention of tuberculosis in the District. This report and the recommendations attached were accepted by the society on February 21, 1934. The study showed clearly:

That the organized profession here, as represented by the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, has not taken an active interest in the problem of tuberculosis in the District, but that no request for the backing or cooperation of the society in this problem has ever come from the Board of Commissioners, the board of public welfare, the Health Department, or the officials of the institutions where tuberculosis is taken care of. Partly as the result of this, there is no coordination of the various agencies having to do with the control of tuberculosis here.

That Washington has the fourth highest death rate from tuberculosis among the cities of this country—124.6 per 100,000 in 1933—and that this rate has risen each year for the past 4 years, whereas the death rate in all comparable cities has decreased; this in spite of a generally better economic situation and less crowded conditions than in any other large city.

That Baltimore with the same climate and almost the same percentage of colored population and with a much worse economic situation has steadily lowered its death rate to 90 per 100,000—34 per 100,000 less deaths than here.

That there are here no sanatorium facilities for hopeful cases, and that Washington is the only community in this country which has no sanatorium for hopeful cases of tuberculosis. Every State has from one to six sanatoria.

That the existing institutions, notably the tuberculosis hospital, the temporary wards at Gallinger, and the tuberculosis clinic, are understaffed, unbelievably overcrowded, starved for funds, and not run in accord with modern ideas for the care of tuberculosis.

That there is no provision for the care of tuberculosis of the bones and joints or the kidney, or other surgical types of tuberculosis.

That with 738 reported cases (1933) it is estimated there are almost 6,000 cases in the District. These figures exclude Government hospitals.

That with 1,197 recorded cases of tuberculosis in children, there are now 25 beds for children with tuberculosis in the District.

That there is practically no check-up of contacts and of exposed persons whether adults or children. Six nurses are assigned to this work, as against Baltimore's 119; therefore, the spread of the disease is not checked at its source, i.e., the infected person.

That the just-completed children's sanatorium lacks, on account of economy cuts, any facilities for the use of the roof as a solarium and, as limited by economy measures, is only large enough to be filled as soon as it is opened.

That adequate hospital beds (we have less than one half bed per death, with 621 deaths last year), adequate nursing service for follow-up, and for study of contacts, and adequate clinic work, all conducted on the highest professional plane, are the essential elements in successful campaigns against tuberculosis—and that we have none of them in the District of Columbia.

After reading this report, I feel absolutely certain that you will join with me in bringing before the Congress our obligation to those poor patients stricken in that hospital, lying there day after day, without proper care which they should have, in cramped quarters, with the sun beating down all summer long on shacks that are not fit for dogs to live in. I cannot believe that my colleagues will not respond to this call and do something for those unfortunate people who cannot help themselves. [Applause.]

You can, and I know you will, help by amending the appropriation bill before us to give a larger Federal appropriation for this purpose and by voting down the reduction in taxes carried in the bill.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. On the matter of the cost involved, I think the gentlewoman might want to have in the RECORD the fact that the new Supreme Court Building, soon to be opened, cost $7,900,000, and that it houses only a few members of the Supreme Court.

Mrs. NORTON. Oh, yes; we could tell of millions of dollars that have been spent for buildings all over the city of Washington. For instance, there is the Commerce Building, erected at a cost of almost $18,000,000.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. What we have been doing here is to build up shrubs and trees along beautiful streets to hide the cesspools behind them so that the visitors to the city would not see them.

Mrs. NORTON. And I wonder how the visitors would feel if we should invite them to go and examine the tuberculosis hospital.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. And I would like to have them go to some of the schools that I visited in this city.

Mrs. NORTON. That is another subject and a long one, and it is one I hope that some attention will be given to in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. And I am wondering if the gentlewoman knows that some of the doctors employed by this Government in these institutions do not even have licenses to practice medicine.

Mrs. NORTON. I do not know anything about that, but I cannot believe that it is true. May I say that I have no criticism to offer of the doctors. I think the doctors in the tuberculosis hospital are doing more than their duty. I do not know of any doctor anywhere in the country who would do the things that Dr. Peabody is doing in that institution.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. I am not singling out any particular hospital, but there are certain doctors in Gallinger and other hospitals in the city who do not even have a license to practice medicine, and who are performing major operations and losing 65 percent of the cases.

Mrs. NORTON. I like to investigate stories myself and do not care to take hearsay evidence on any subject. I do not know anything about what the gentleman says and I am not in a position to criticize.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentlewoman 1 minute more. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. There is no one in the House who is more sympathetic with the work the gentlewoman mentions than I am. Every year I make my small contribution to the Tuberculosis Association in Washington, and also to the one in Abilene, and to the general work in the State of Texas, and I contribute regularly to many individuals in the State of Texas in the tent camp at Carlsbad, and to individuals who are suffering from tuberculosis in Fort Bayard, N.Mex., and Prescott, Ariz. I am personally interested in this great work, and as long as I have a voice in the Congress they will never suffer here in the city of Washington, but I believe this whole hurrah business now raised in Washington is nothing in the world but the annual newspaper stir made every time a District bill comes up in the House.

Mrs. NORTON. Does the gentleman mean to doubt what I have stated when I tell him that I have investigated the matter personally?

Mr. BLANTON. I have investigated everything there is in the District of Columbia. If they have one thing that I have not investigated I do not know what it is.

Mrs. NORTON. Has the gentleman been through the Tuberculosis Hospital in the District of Columbia?

Mr. BLANTON. I helped to build it.

Mrs. NORTON. Has the gentleman been through it recently?

Mr. BLANTON. Not within the last few months; no.

Mrs. NORTON. Has the gentleman been there recently? The condition I have discussed covers years, not months.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from New Jersey has again expired.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN].

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein material which I will refer to in the course of my talk.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the remarks I am about to make should more properly be addressed to the Committee on Rules, before which committee I am thus far unable to have a hearing. They pertain to House Resolution 287, which I introduced on March 1 last. The resolution proposes a committee of this House to investigate conditions as they now exist and have existed for a long time in the Bureau of Internal Revenue. As many of the Members here know, I have been giving considerable time and attention to this question of the evasion of the payment of taxes by large taxpayers and others through maneuvers and manipulations which are made possible because of the present organization within the Bureau of Internal Revenue and the cooperation of certified accountants on the outside and lawyers who are practicing before the Bureau of Internal Revenue. I have repeatedly called the attention of this House to the abuses which obtain in this respect and have pointed out from time to time wherein the Government of the United States, after passing tax bills and providing for the collection of equitable taxes from the people of the United States, has made it possible for these particularly favored ones who are able to hire lawyers and use their influence, political and other contact, which is available in departments, and through various channels of political pressure, to avoid the payment of their proper share of the taxes, and thus defraud the Government.

This subject is particularly pertinent at this time because there is in conference between the two Houses a bill proposing to increase the taxes of the people of the United States. My position is that it is a great deal better to collect the taxes that are now due the United States than it is to levy new taxes upon the people of the United States, because new levies of taxes will be levied on all classes of people who will thus have to pay those taxes that have not been paid by those people who have been favored through this racket that has prevailed here over a long time.

I have tried in every way possible to get consideration of this resolution. I have talked to the officials in the Treasury Department, Mr. Oliphant and Mr. Jackson, who are not averse to this investigation. I have talked to the Speaker of this House, to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], the Democratic leader. I have talked to the Chairman of the Rules Committee and to members of the Rules Committee; and the matters which I am going to present to you here today, as I have said, should properly be presented to the Rules Committee. I hope that, as a result of the presentation which I am going to make, the Rules Committee will take under consideration that condition which I will present which I am satisfied Members of this House know exists and should be corrected.

I am not proposing in this respect an investigation with a brass band.

I am proposing a select committee of this House to act virtually as a court, who will select members from the Joint Committee on Taxation of the House and the Senate, who know that this situation exists, and to pick from the Internal Revenue Bureau itself, honest men who also know that these things exist and have told me they exist, and who want the situation corrected.

May I point out here that every department head who has attempted to correct these situations in the last few years has been completely surrounded by this clique, and before he realizes it he cannot tell what is going on in his department, and the racket proceeds without any hindrance. It is a terrible situation in that respect, and yet a Member of the House who presents or attempts to present this situation to the Rules Committee of this House cannot even get a hearing and cannot have an opportunity to bring men as witnesses before the Rules Committee. I begin to feel that the administration wants to protect this racket and intends to protect this racket, or else why do they not give it consideration? There can be no refutation of the charges that I am about to make.

Can it be that the present administration is not going to make Henry L. Doherty pay the taxes to this Government that he owes; can it be possible that this Government is going to permit this man to further continue his exploitation of the innocent investors of this country? I must again remind you that the political lobbyist attorney of the Doherty Cities Service and other companies is Arthur F. Mullin, former national committeeman from Nebraska, one of the chief dispensers of patronage of this administration, who shares fees with other lobbyist attorneys on getting through questionable claims against the Government, and who, I am told, is the lobbyist who got the $15,000,000 from P.W.A. for a water and power plant for Nebraska, which project is being so bitterly opposed by the coal interests and labor in the Middle West.

I charge that the present Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Guy T. Helvering, is continuing the well-known unfair practices in the Bureau of Internal Revenue; that is to say, there is favor being shown certain taxpayers at the expense of other taxpayers resulting in a loss of revenue to the Government and in some instances friends and political favorites are the recipients. I submit that in any of these events the practices should be stopped whether it necessitates the removal of the Commissioner or the removal of lesser officials.

I condemn the further use of confidential memoranda in this department through which certain taxpayers are favored over others who are not informed of the special favor granted. This practice should be discontinued forthwith. Many of the large taxpayers who have been able to obtain preference have benefited as have likewise the various rings of lawyers and certified public accountants, such as Seifert; Gregg; Clifford; Alvord; Price, Waterhouse & Co.; Ernst & Ernst; and many others.

I have only scratched the surface, but I have named certain outstanding lawyers and accountants who are involved. There are many more.

Compromises ought to be discontinued or abolished, or the compromise should be left to the Department of Justice or to the Board of Tax Appeals, or some other agency or independent bureau, as the Government has never been known to get a square deal in cases that have been compromised through the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I am sorry, but I cannot yield.

The Bureau is honeycombed with officials in key positions who are trained under the regime of the last dozen years who have never given the Government a square deal but were always and eternally looking for and devising loopholes to defraud the Government by favoring certain large taxpayers, their favorite lawyer friends, or their favorite certified accountants.

Take, for instance, the well-known Crucible Steel Co. case. While Joe Callan was Deputy Commissioner of Internal Revenue under the Wilson administration $5,000,000 additional tax was assessed against this company. Later Callan resigned and within a few months thereafter came back before the Bureau with a claim for the refund of this tax. The greater portion of it was refunded or abated. More recently, during the present administration, with Mr. Helvering as Commissioner, this man was called in as an adviser to the administration and put in charge of the reorganization of the Bureau of Internal Revenue. While he was reorganizing the Bureau he had claims pending before it for clients who were claiming large refunds, and certain refunds were allowed his clients by the Department.

Now, I ask you, Mr. Chairman, whether such conditions as that should be permitted to exist? That is what I am talking about and what I am trying to correct.

Information as regards certain vulnerable tax cases leak out of the Department into the offices of these tax consultants, lawyers, and accountants which information is used by these attorneys and accountants to secure their employment by these specific taxpayers which cases are based frequently upon ill-advised or bad contentions that no precedent could be found for their allowance and frequently these cases are without any foundation in law or justification in fact but are used as a vehicle to defraud the Government and furnish fees to the lawyers and accountants and in many of these cases precedents had to be established violative of all the laws of evidence. It was such cases as these that brought about the simple little confidential memorandum scheme which has been and is being used now to dispense with essential and necessary evidence to secure abatements and refunds for these accountants and attorneys. The attitude of mind of some of these men is that an abatement or refund of taxes should always be allowed whether there is any law for it or any evidence justifying it. A case can always be made out for the taxpayer by a confidential mimeograph through the compromise, and woe be unto any auditor who questions the legality or justice of a confidential mimeograph.

This confidential mimeograph which has been installed by the men administering this Bureau has cost the people of the United States hundreds of millions of dollars.

Why is it, I ask, that Mr. Helvering permits this collusion by these employees of his department? Does he not know of the outside affiliations and practices of these officials wherein they have allowed their friends on the outside, practicing before the Bureau, free access to the Bureau files contrary to law and have tipped them off to cases wherein a little juggling or pull (a confidential mimeograph or compromise agreement) would reverse the tax assessed by the Bureau and produce a refund or abatement of taxes? Does not Mr. Helvering know that this ring is operating very secretly and that if an auditor complains of these practices or does not agree with the favorite consideration given to particular taxpayers under these confidential mimeographs, secret rulings (based upon insufficient evidence or no evidence at all) he or she is immediately marked as an undesirable and his or her records of efficiency or records of qualifications are changed; that it is easy then to demote or recommend for dismissal such auditors and get rid of them? Such has been the case during the administration of Mr. Helvering.

In other words, if these people look out for the interests of Uncle Sam and it meets with the disapproval of this ring or clique, who are fleecing Uncle Sam, the records of these people are tampered with and the first thing they know they are out of jobs.

May I say that there has been practically no change made in the Audit Division of the Department of Internal Revenue since Mr. Helvering came into office. I believe that I am practically correct when I say that the only changes that have taken place are one chief of section transferred to audit review; one audit reviewer transferred to chief of section; a few auditors to review section; a few transfers in the General Counsel's Office; but in most cases the chief assistants have remained the same.

A splendid appointment has been made as General Counsel of this Bureau—Mr. Robert H. Jackson. The administration is to be congratulated upon the employment of this very able lawyer to this particular position.

I have had conversations with Mr. Jackson and it will not be violating any confidence, I believe, to say, Mr. Chairman, that I talked to Mr. Jackson about this proposed investigation of the Bureau of Internal Revenue. He wants it. I said to him:

Shall I take it up with the Secretary of the Treasury?

He said:

No; I will take it up; let me talk to the General Counsel.

And he did so; and the following day he sent me the following letter:

Hon. LOUIS T. MCFADDEN,
New House Office Building.

MY DEAR MR. MCFADDEN: I have examined the resolution which you have introduced, calling for an investigation of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, as you requested me to do, and have considered carefully its possible effect upon the work here.

Speaking only for myself and only insofar as it affects the work of the General Counsel's Office, I see no objection to the proposed investigation, which I believe could be carried on without substantial interference to the work of the Office so far as demands upon our time are concerned.

An investigation of this Office might result in bringing to my attention conditions which I would wish to remedy but which might not otherwise be noted. In any event, I have not the slightest hesitation in offering to cooperate fully either with the committee which you propose or any other congressional committee which desires to go into the conduct of this office.

With best personal regards, I am,
Very sincerely yours,

ROBERT H. JACKSON,
General Counsel.

I discussed in detail the kind of an investigation that should be made, which I have just stated: The selection of a member or two from the Joint Committee on Taxation and the selection of certain men in the Bureau of Internal Revenue who know that this situation exists and who want to correct it. These men cannot act independently. Mr. Jackson cannot act independently. He does not know at this moment to whom he is talking in his department whether the chiefs of these divisions are part of this clique or not. I am suggesting a committee of this House so that they can assist and aid in the correction of this situation.

I am not talking politics here. I have no pride of authorship. I am pointing out a situation which should have attention.

The special advisory committee has remained practically the same. A few new members have been brought in from the outside and now it is called "the technical staff."

If the present administration wishes to know the truth, there are men inside and outside the Treasury familiar with the practices that I am referring to who can point out the cases and persons involved, and they can be procured to advise the administration, but it must be in confidence, as any man who has ever attempted such a thing before—and there have been many—has been discharged or has had charges trumped up against him and has been disgraced.

There are many instances where honest men in these departments have met with the opposition of the particular cliques who are tied in with the lawyers on the outside, and they have very shortly found themselves either demoted or discharged entirely from their positions. This is a powerful group inside and outside who are aiding and abetting illegal practices in this Bureau.

Witness the fate of all those who testified in the Couzens investigation of the Department and those who gave evidence in the Government bond investigation.

Practically every honest person who gave material information to either one of these committees has either been demoted or so humiliated that he has either resigned or has been dropped from the Treasury Department.

In connection with the perpetuation of the present regime the schemings of the various rings of lawyers and accountants to perpetuate the old regime and to keep in key positions those who are all right and who will cooperate with the lawyers and accountants on the outside, these groups have had their heads together in more than one secret huddle in the recent past.

There is probably in excess of a half billion dollars involved in this situation at the present moment.

This situation must be corrected because involved in it are hundreds of millions of dollars of taxes which should and must be paid to the Government of the United States, otherwise the tax burdens imposed upon the constituents of the Members of this House, due to this failure to collect the just taxes due from these large taxpayers, are considerably increased.

Among the taxpayers who have been evading taxes that I have specifically picked out, and I have only scratched the surface in this respect, have been the well-known evasions of the Mellon group of industries and the ex-Secretary of the Treasury himself, whose tax matters are now in the hands of the Department of Justice. Without this investigation and the material facts which would be disclosed by it, I seriously question whether the Department of Justice will be able to get the information which they should have in the prosecution of the Mellon cases. Why? Because at the present moment the man in charge of these particular files is a Mellon man. These other taxpayers also have their own men in key positions who look out for possible investigations of any violations by the Department of Justice.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Does the gentleman believe that a select committee would have any better opportunity to ascertain the facts?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; I do. This will correct the situation I am referring to in the Department.

Mr. BLANCHARD. On what theory does the gentleman expect that a select committee will have a better opportunity to obtain the information than the Department of Justice?

Mr. McFADDEN. I suggested that members of the Joint Committee on Taxation of the House and Senate be selected, and that they in turn pick out certain men that are known not to be a member of the ring in the Bureau of Internal Revenue. I suggest that this matter be done quietly in order to get an honest correction of this condition which exists. This Congress cannot afford any longer to delay and permit this fraud to be carried on. It is a racket.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. This ring that the gentleman speaks of, or this clique, are hold-overs of the Hoover administration?

Mr. McFADDEN. Many of them have been in there for years. They are kept in there by these influences. This is not a political proposition. It is financial. It is a racket. It is a ring. That is why it should be cleaned out of the Department, and there should be no further delay because it is costing the people of this country millions of dollars.

Another one of the flagrant instances of tax evasion I have called attention to repeatedly is that of H. L. Doherty and his various corporations. I spoke previously on the floor of this House about the influences that are being used by Mr. Doherty. He is organized from one end of this country to the other. Wherever any of his public utilities are operating he has his methods of gaining the favor of those who might expose these various deals. The last time I spoke on this question I referred to the Cities Service Club, the Doherty Club, down on K Street. Here is a photograph of the place, with the City Service insignia on each door, where a man with influence in the Government and in legislation can go and spend the evening and be the guest of this gentleman who has defrauded the United States Government out of its proper taxes. Mr. Doherty knows how to gain favor with those who have the kind of influence he needs—and he gets it.

May I tell you how he has done some of this business? Some of this information has come out before the Federal Trade Commission, and more will come out in the next few days. The hearings so far disclose that the holding or the parent company has collected from subsidiary companies taxes which they, the subsidiary companies, figured were due to the Government.

The holding or parent company is holding those as an asset and is defrauding the Government of their rightful amount of taxes. And some of this you are permitting through the continuing of consolidated returns.

In addition, I call attention to the fact that the mark-up of values on the books of many of his corporations is fraudulent and that the financial statements upon which is based the sales and purchases of his stock through the curb exchange in New York are a false base. I have called the attention of the curb exchange to this fact and have furnished them with the information which would justify the suspension on the curb exchange of the securities of the Doherty companies. People are being defrauded from one end of this country to the other. I shall place in the RECORD in connection with this matter certain statements made by people who have been deliberately defrauded by this man in the financing of his companies. They are as follows, and I am quoting a few of the people who have been defrauded by the Doherty Cities Service and other companies. Here is one from Oklahoma. I quote:

With a great deal of interest I read about your plain speaking about that bird Doherty and the ill-fated Cities Service Co.

The kidnapers and the gangsters are holy compared with this bird Doherty, who sold under all kind of lies of "saving for old age" and all kind of slogans this rotten Cities Service shares.

I am one of the victims who bought for cash and cash again in order to save for old age, but the present system is not saving for old age, but saving for skunks in business and other highway robbers of different kind.

One can better save for machine guns and know that he has something that will talk with force. That is what should be used on these betrayers of the masses who were inveigled by a totally corruptionist system of stock selling as practiced by the Cities Service gangdom.

Yes, save for old age, and be totally fleeced out of one's savings by fictitious statements.

Of course, I do not have a particle of confidence in any bond and any stock any more, because the system of robbery is evident everywhere.

The Czarist Government was not more corrupt than that of the present system here today.

Here is one from an attorney at law in New York City:

I know something about Mr. Henry L. Doherty. He was the backer of an investment house in this city from whom I obtained very substantial judgments for issuing fraudulent prospectus and selling fraudulent securities.

I quote from an offering by Leach Bros., Inc., 60 Wall Street, New York City, wherein, according to their February 13, 1934, circular, they offer Cities Service Co. debentures gold 5s due in 1958 at a bid and offered price at 48 and 49, in which earnings before depreciation for 9 months ended September 30, 1933, equal 2.39 times bond interest. My correspondent says "this is false and misleading."

I quote from another correspondent, Brooklyn, N.Y.:

"As a former stock salesman for Henry L. Doherty & Co., a stock-sales organization for the Cities Service Co. exclusive", who asks, "who was it that permitted Mr. Alton B. Jones or Mr. Russum to refer to the United States Senators and Congressmen as hinterland oppositionists as interferents with normal progress of business, and telling us at meetings when Congress adjourns stocks will go up? By what authority could Judge Foster tell us to approach the workingmen of this country and tell them that they should do as he has done, invest all his cash and all his stock dividends for reinvestment purposes in Cities Service Co.?"

Pennsylvania Securities Commission says that the Indian Territory Illuminating Oil Co.—a Doherty company—never was registered by H. L. Doherty & Co. in the State of Pennsylvania.

Another correspondent from Pittsburgh says:

The tragic thing about the make-up of the Cities Service security market is the fact that 95 percent of the security holders, which are approximately 600,000 in number (the second largest security list of any corporation in the country) were all people of small means, and they deliberately sold and practiced the distribution to this class of purchasers. In other words, the uninitiated and uninformed sucker class.

Further, for your information, they sold Indian Territory Illuminating Oil common stock in the State of Pennsylvania during the years 1930–31 without having taken out a permit through the securities commission in this State. The stock was sold anywhere from $31 to $47 a share and admitted to enlisted trading on the New York Curb, but it is very inactive and is now selling for approximately $3 a share. (This stock was issued as rights at $17 per share.)

These are simply a few letters that I pick out at random from a great mass of similar letters which have come to me.

Now let me show you how Doherty uses his influence. When a committee of this Congress made a recent visit to the city of New York—and I am not blaming the Members of Congress—this gentleman who seeks such influence and publicity saw fit to entertain those Members with a radio program, and it was broadcast throughout the country that this particular group of Congressmen were the guests of Henry L. Doherty and his Cities Service Co., which, so far as Cities Service—Doherty's company—was concerned, showed that his company was on friendly terms with Congressmen.

The recent hearing before the Federal Trade Commission showed that he fraudulently took a profit of $19,000,000, which is a small estimate of the total amount, as will be shown later. And again Mr. Doherty's organization operates. When the President takes a fishing trip in Florida waters this gentleman sees to it that his headquarters are established in the Miami Biltmore Hotel, a Doherty-owned hotel. That shows how this gentleman is trying to get past his fraudulent acts in connection with the defrauding of the United States Government of its proper amount of taxes and the public through the sale of his worthless securities.

There are other cases. The Associated Gas & Electric Co. is another glaring instance. Practically every public utility that has been investigated under the Walsh resolution by the Federal Trade Commission, it will be shown, have pyramided and have marked up their values and issued and sold the stock based on those fictitious values. They have collected from their subsidiary companies the taxes due the United States and have withheld them as a capital asset of the holding company and have avoided payment into the Treasury of the United States of their just proportion of these taxes.

Now I give an analysis of an article by Logan Morris, ex-chairman United States Board of Tax Appeals and present member thereof, which appears in a January-February 1934 issue of a prominent magazine, Additional assessments of taxes proposed by 60-day letters by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, between July 1, 1924, and July 1, 1933, a period of 9 years.

Number of cases—additional assessments proposed

72,752	$2,061,009,337.36
16,502 pending July 1, 1933	663,719,560.60
56,250 disposed of	1,397,289,776.76
56,250 taxes collected	445,518,642.70
56,250 (B.T.A.) allowed	951,771,134.06
Rate of allowance (B.T.A.) per annum, 9 years	105,753,237.12
Amount recommended to be disallowed by audit unit per annum	155,365,530.75

The reduction of deficiencies, amounting to $951,771,134.06, as shown in the above statement, while ostensibly representing reduction granted by the Board of Tax Appeals, in reality includes also reductions made by way of settlement in the Bureau of Internal Revenue between the issuance of notices of deficiency to taxpayers and final judgment by the Tax Board.

Briefly, the procedure is as follows: When the income-tax unit determines a deficiency in tax, the so-called "60-day letter" is mailed to the taxpayer. The taxpayer then has the privilege of taking an appeal to the Board of Tax Appeals. The case so appealed may be disposed of in either of two ways. First, it may be heard upon its merits by the Board of Tax Appeals and judgment based upon such an opinion as the board may render in the proceeding. Or, second, the case may be given further consideration in the Bureau of Internal Revenue, and if the parties agree upon a settlement a stipulation to that effect is filed with the Board of Tax Appeals, in which event the Board enters a judgment based upon the stipulation without a review of the merits of the case. Consequently, as indicated above, the concessions in tax ostensibly allowed by the Board of Tax Appeals include concessions not only actually made by the Board, but also concessions made within the Bureau by way of administrative settlements. The administrative settlements until quite recently were made in the Bureau principally by a body known as "the special advisory committee." Since Commissioner Helvering assumed office that body has been renamed "the technical staff", with a few minor changes in personnel.

An analysis of the figures presented in this statement clearly demonstrates either one of two things; first, that the audit which in the first instance proposes the deficiencies is grossly inefficient and by its proposals unduly harasses the taxpayers; or, secondly, that concessions made after the completion of the audit are unjustifiable.

In this connection it would be interesting to know, and I now call on the Bureau of Internal Revenue to give us the information that would show, what portion of this tax that failed of collection was due to compromise agreements or stipulated agreements entered into by the officials of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, which stipulations were not reviewed by the Board of Tax Appeals. In other words, what I am trying to distinguish is the amount that failed of collection because of the action of the Bureau as distinguished from the action of the Board of Tax Appeals not only for the period covered by this memorandum but for the period from July 1, 1933, to date.

What I have said with respect to taxes loosely or illegally refunded is confirmed by a pamphlet put out by the Internal Revenue Department entitled "The Internal Revenue News", in volume 5, no. 11, May 1932. At page 2 is set out a chart showing deficiencies proposed to be assessed by the Bureau in 60-day letters that were sent out to the taxpayers between the dates of February 1 and March 31, 1932, and the amount of taxes that were refunded on the basis of redetermination made by the special advisory committee, which committee is now known as "the technical staff." In this table the deficiency shown as proposed on cases recommended for settlement that were up before the Special Advisory Committee on Appeal were in the amount of $17,183,804.96, and the deficiency redetermined on this amount that was recommended for settlement is $3,851,070.66, showing that the result of this redetermination by the special advisory committee is that out of $17,183,804.96 proposed to be assessed, this committee remitted to the taxpayers $13,332,734.30 and of the amount proposed to be assessed only collected or assessed $3,851,070.66, or, in other words, that the Government was the loser by virtue of the action of the special advisory committee of 78 percent of the taxes that had been assessed and proposed for collection.

I am reliably informed, and so charge, that the condition in the Bureau today respecting refunds is even worse than it was at the date of this publication; that is, that the Government today is suffering a greater loss by virtue of the loose, unauthorized, or illegal manner in which these cases are being handled today.

EVASION OF SURTAXES BY THE USE OF A CORPORATE ENTITY

Features of the income tax law which are sources of tax leaks:

First. Depreciation based upon values other than cost.

Second. Depletion (see schedule Gulf Oil Co.).

Third. Dividends allowed as deductions.

Fourth. Special assessments allowed simply because taxpayers enjoyed large incomes.

Fifth. Erroneous valuations of securities and other properties in determining bases to be used in computing the profits realized or losses sustained on the disposition of such properties.

Sixth. Failure to administer section 220 of the Revenue Act of 1918 and corresponding sections of subsequent acts.

Seventh. Failure to audit cases which show "no tax" on the face of the return.

Eighth. Estate-tax cases: Failure to tax in the settlement of estate-tax cases properties transferred in contemplation of death.

Ninth. Personal holding companies: Evasion of tax through the creation of corporations for the purpose of taking over the holdings of individuals.

Tenth. Confidential memoranda, stipulations, or compromises: Settlement of cases by officials of the Government in which they are personally interested or from which they receive benefits on the basis of confidential rulings.

How about the many Mellon cases that were settled by stipulation, compromise, or on the basis of confidential memoranda? In this connection on the occasion of my previous remarks I handed in a list containing a few names of Mellon companies, among which were included Gulf Oil Co.; Aluminum Co. of America; Gulf, Atlantic & West Indies Steamship Co., and I now wish to include the Philadelphia Co. and the United States Steel, and to call attention to that great host of public-utilities companies that span this country from ocean to ocean and from Canada to Mexico, most of whom have evaded taxes through false bases set up for depreciation and through consolidations, mergers, and reorganizations.

We know how H. L. Doherty handled his stuff through Cities Service Securities Co. and H. L. Doherty & Co., Inc. The records of these companies and of all corporations are reported through Poor's and Moody's Manuals and in the annals of the State where the particular company was incorporated and also in the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

Further, as to Mr. Doherty, I would ask him what was the purpose of the incorporation of Henry L. Doherty & Co., Inc., and the other companies in which he is interested. This man, H. L. Doherty, robbed his own employees. He forced them to take and subscribe to the securities of his various companies when they were ranging around heights to which he had skyrocketed them. When they fell in market value and earning power to practically nothing, he would not allow his employees, so I am informed, to turn the stocks back and forfeit the amounts they paid on them but insisted that they must pay the full price agreed to be paid for them and deducted the amounts out of their meager salaries. Mr. Doherty's tax matters, upon which a question has been raised, will take care of themselves if Mr. Doherty will waive the secrecy clause of his income-tax returns and permit them to be examined in the open and will make the books and records of his companies available and permit a disclosure of what they show with respect to capitalization, surplus, and the use made thereof, security values, and taxes.

Now, directing attention again to the Bureau of Internal Revenue, Mr. Hill, the chairman of the subcommittee for the House Ways and Means Committee, writing for the Nation's Business, January issue, 1934, in an article appearing beginning at page 17, has something to say about "Tax Leaks Which Cost Millions." He ascribes these to two general sources, first, faults in the law and, second, faults in the administration of the law by the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

The faults or defects in the law are enumerated and pointed out at the beginning of my remarks. The leaks or faults due to administration Mr. Hill says are due to acts of the administrators of the law, that is the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and those in authority under him without any authority in the law. If this is true, then are these acts not fraudulent when done, authorized, or permitted by a Secretary of the Treasury or any one under him, especially the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who is directly in charge of such matters and particularly when done in connection with or relation to cases in which they are directly interested or are the beneficiaries? Does any limitation run against the Government's right to reopen such cases and collect the taxes shown to be fraudulently, illegally, or loosely paid out without any authority in the law? Is there any question but that all taxes refunded or abated by Mr. Mellon or anybody else as Secretary of the Treasury, or by D. H. Blair or anybody else as Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to themselves as taxpayers or to persons, companies, estates, and so forth, in which they are directly interested, or through which they profit, which refunds or abatements are based upon either confidential memoranda, stipulated agreements, authorized compromises, or any other questionable procedure? In this character of case where the agent of the Government is the tax beneficiary, is there not such fiduciary relationship as that fraud is presumed and the burden of negativing it on the Government agent acting in such fiduciary capacity? I refer particularly to such flagrant cases including the Cannon estate, the estate of Mr. D. H. Blair's father-in-law, of which Mr. Blair was one of the executors, and the other cases to which I have heretofore referred.

I have a list of the names of the ring in the Department, I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin, of the men who compose this ring. I could present this to the House, but it would not do the Members any good. This information should only be given to the Rules Committee behind closed doors, and if the particular people on this list are taken out of this Department, this will come nearer correcting the situation and establishing an honest regime in this Department than anything else that could be done.

Now that I have presented sufficient facts I hope to challenge the interest of the Rules Committee of this House. I hope they will not pass this over with a gesture. If there is any feeling on account of a minority Member introducing the bill, I pray some of you Democrats to put in such a measure. I shall do what I can to help you, but there is a situation here that should not be delayed any further. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUFFIN].

Mr. RUFFIN. Mr. Chairman, "I am smarter than the law" was the headline streaming across the front page of my home city paper on Sunday last. This was not the statement of a prominent lawyer but was the brazen, boastful declaration of one of the most dastardly outlaws of the country. The immediate provocation for this exclamation was that he or some of his confederates had recently killed a police officer, kidnaped another one, and were then being pursued by officers in four States.

Similar incidents have been happening daily over the country during the last several years. In my own State of Missouri I call to mind now two occasions within the last few months wherein 10 armed police officers were assassinated by roving bandits. Besides these, scores of innocent, unarmed citizens have been robbed, kidnaped, or murdered by the same class of criminals.

The enormous cost of our attempts at the enforcement of the criminal laws as well as all losses resulting directly and indirectly from racketeering in all its ramifications, is in the long run, of course, borne by the rank and file of the taxpayers. This amount runs into billions of dollars each year, and the burden is more irksome during hard times. There is no doubt but that organized crime has far outstripped our means of combating crime in many particulars within the last decade. The racketeer and kidnaper is no more a respecter of State lines than was the boll weevil a generation ago. The enforcement machinery of our 48 States has not been able to deal effectively with these roving bands of criminals in their interstate activities.

There has been for months a strong clamor for the Federal Government to step forward and take a more active part in fighting crime. Some of these suggestions have gone so far as to advise that martial law be declared and military action taken to rid our country of crime. Some would have the Federal Government take over the entire police power from the States and centralize the control of it in Washington. Such a course would be illogical and unthinkable. The responsibility of the enforcement of the law generally should rest primarily on the people of the community affected. The various communities should have complete control of the enforcement of all laws which it is possible for them to adequately enforce. To unwarrantably extend the powers of the Federal Government upon the States would not only create resentment toward Federal bureaucracy, but would also weaken the morale of the various communities.

Our problem is to determine to what extent the Federal Government should go. In accordance with this principle, I am convinced that we should extend the Federal penal statutes under the commerce clause of the Constitution so as to cover, insofar as we reasonably can, the unlawful activities of those who deliberately take advantage of the protection afforded them by State lines in perpetrating their crimes. The strong arm of the Federal Government should fall on those who live off their fellowmen by use of force and threats, in all cases where the Federal Government can legally reach them.

Federal control was extended over kidnapers by the passage of the Patterson Act in 1932. It should now be extended to the racketeer. Several bills constituting a complete program, and designed to extend the powers of the Federal Government in the aforementioned particulars, have been recently prepared by the Department of Justice and have passed the Senate. They are now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary in the House. While I do not subscribe to all the details of these bills, I do strongly favor many of their salient objectives.

A proposed Federal antiracketeering statute, S. 2248, has been introduced, and is designed to protect interstate trade and commerce against interference by violence, threats, coercion, or intimidation. In the past the Federal Government has been practically restrained in the prosecution of racketeers to mere incidental violations of law, such as mail fraud or income-tax evasions, and for violations under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. The Sherman Act was primarily designed to prevent capitalistic combinations and monopolies, and, of course, is not adequate for prosecution of persons who commit acts of violence, intimidation, and extortion. Furthermore, the Sherman Act requires proof of the conspiracy, combination, or monopoly, and it is often difficult to prove that acts of racketeers affecting interstate commerce amount to a conspiracy in restraint of such commerce, or a monopoly. This bill, with some clarifying changes in subsection 3 of section 2 should be enacted into law. Racketeering must stop.

Another bill is pending, which is designed to extend the provisions of the national motor vehicle act to other stolen property and to make it a crime to knowingly transport stolen property in interstate or foreign commerce. A companion bill makes it a Federal offense to transport in interstate commerce, any stolen security, or to receive, conceal, store, barter, sell, or dispose of any security moving as, or which is a part of, interstate or foreign commerce, knowing the same to have been stolen. Bills incorporating similar principles have been before every Congress during the last decade and have at different times passed one or the other House of Congress, and should pass both Houses at this session.

A bill, S. 2249, applying the powers of the Federal Government, under the commerce clause of the Constitution, to extortion by means of telephone, telegraph, radio, oral message, or otherwise, is now pending. This bill is designed to bolster up the Patterson Act passed in 1932, which makes it a Federal offense to transmit threats through the mail with intent to extort any money or other thing of value. Criminals have been using the above means to convey threats rather than the mails. Other slight changes are contemplated in the Patterson Act which are designed to make it more effective. Among these is the provision that in the absence of the return of the person kidnaped, and in the absence of the apprehension of the kidnaper during a period of 3 days, the presumption arises that such person has been transported in interstate or foreign commerce, but such presumption is not conclusive.

A bill, S. 2841, as well as several other bills, providing punishment for certain offenses against banks operating under the laws of the United States, or any members of the Federal Reserve System, has been introduced. This law should be made to cover all banks which are members of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, as all such banks are required by law to join the Federal Reserve System by July 1, 1936. The enactment of this law would throw the full weight of the Federal Government against the most thoroughly organized and the most menacing bands of criminals with which we have to deal. This law would supplement, but not supersede, the activities of the States in their attempts to bring these atrocious marauders to justice.

A bill, S. 2080, is designed to make it a Federal offense for anyone to murder or otherwise kill or assault any Federal officer or employee while engaged in the performance of his official duties or on account of his official duties. Objections have been interposed to this bill on the ground that it is too broad in that it should not cover all Federal employees. I am inclined to think that it at least should cover all Federal officers, while in the performance of their duties, whose duty it is to make arrests or to serve process.

A bill, S. 2575, provides punishment for any person, whether employee or not, who assists in any riot or escape at any Federal penal institution, or who conspires to cause such a riot or escape. It also provides Federal punishment for anyone who, without the consent of the warden, conveys into a Federal institution tools, weapons, narcotic drugs, and other contraband articles. It also makes it an offense to send out from such institution any letter or message otherwise than in accordance with the rules of the institution. It strikes me that there is no good reason why the Federal Government should be longer forced to resort to State courts in the regulation of its own criminal institutions.

Two important bills, S. 2840 and S. 2844, similar in principle to the Harrison Antinarcotic Act, dealing with the importation, manufacture, and sale or other disposition of machine guns and firearms, are now pending. These bills are based on the taxing power of the Federal Government and the power over interstate commerce. They provide for the taxation of manufacturers, importers, and dealers in small firearms and machine guns, and require the registration of pawnbrokers and other dealers in used firearms. They also provide for a tax on the sale or other disposal of firearms and machine guns by importers, manufacturers, and others, and provide for a stamp tax on the disposal of every small firearm and machine gun, as well as for the positive identification of each recipient of such weapon. After a time it should be possible to ascertain, by proper credentials, the identity of the possessors of machine guns and sawed-off shotguns. There is no doubt but that steps should be taken to adequately regulate the circulation of sawed-off shotguns and machine guns, and there is no valid reason why the owners of these implements of terror should not be known. This bill also makes it unlawful to dispose of any machine gun without the consent of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, whose duty it shall be to keep a record of all transfers.

There are other details covered by these bills which will no doubt meet with opposition in some quarters; but I believe it is generally agreed that their salient features should be enacted into law without delay. Other procedural changes in the Federal criminal statutes are covered in bills now pending, some of which will no doubt meet with opposition; but as many of them have been put forward for a long period of years, I am hopeful that they will be duly considered by the Congress during this session.

In recognition of intelligent public opinion to the effect that crime is a major problem and is one deserving of careful study, the Government has recently established in the city of Springfield, Mo., a hospital to be used as a laboratory for the purpose of scientific research and investigation in this field. If we expect to pass out of the category of one of the most lawless nations in the world, we should continue the work that has been started in this direction with the same zeal that we have attacked other major problems in the past.

I am hopeful that the program outlined above will prove to be an effective step in the permanent eradication of crime in the United States.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUFFIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. I want to endorse what the gentleman has said, although that may not be so important to the gentleman, and I also want to inquire of the gentleman about the status of the bill which makes it a crime to transport stolen property in interstate commerce.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. RUFFIN. It is now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, and I think it has passed the Senate.

Mr. CULKIN. I understand the bill has been defeated in the Senate. I understand the Senator from Utah opposed the measure and it was knocked off the calendar. I may say to the gentleman that I regard this as a most important measure in correcting present crime conditions in the United States.

Mr. RUFFIN. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman in that respect.

Mr. CULKIN. I also want to congratulate the gentleman on his statement here today.

Mr. RUFFIN. I thank the gentleman. [Applause.]

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DE PRIEST].

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Chairman, I am going to talk, if permissible, on the District of Columbia appropriation bill for a few moments. The Board of Education having in charge the schools here in Washington made a recommendation to the Bureau of the Budget asking for $30,000 to reequip and refurnish the Shaw Junior High School. The Bureau of the Budget cut the estimate to $15,000, and the District subcommittee has seen fit to eliminate this reduced amount.

The school building has not been refurnished in 31 years. The furniture is inadequate, old, and worn out, and I hope the committee having this appropriation bill in charge will see fit to restore the item by a committee amendment. I would rather see this done by a committee amendment than an amendment offered from the floor, because it is essential and necessary that this should be done. There is only the small amount of $15,000 involved, and I have here a report from the Board of Education, and I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read it in my time so that the Members may have the benefit of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the matter referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

REEQUIPPING SHAW JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOL

(Estimate 1935, $15,000)

The Shaw Junior High School was transferred to the old McKinley High School Building in September 1928. In the interest of economy, comparatively little new equipment was purchased for the Shaw Junior High School at that time. The large majority of equipment abandoned by the McKinley High School was refinished and repaired and children and teachers were required to use this old equipment.

This old equipment had been in constant use by day and night schools for possibly 31 years, and since the original refinishing and repair it has been necessary to make frequent repairs to the equipment.

In addition to its age and condition, the equipment abandoned by the McKinley High School had been procured on the basis of a technical senior high school and is not fully suitable for children of junior-high-school age.

The school authorities urgently recommend that this old equipment at the Shaw Junior High School be replaced to the extent of $15,000 with standard equipment approved by the Board of Education for children of junior-high-school age. The limited appropriation will not permit of complete reequipping of this building, and it will be necessary to continue in use such equipment now in the building as is found to be in good condition, even though such retained equipment may not be in accordance with the approved standards for junior-high-school instruction.

The equipment proposed to be replaced at this time is covered by the following list:

Auditorium chairs	$2,700
Domestic-art rooms	1,000
Domestic-science rooms	1,000
Drawing rooms	800
Pupils' desks and chairs for 26 classrooms	7,730
Refinishing equipment	400
Storage lockers	352
Teachers' chairs	108
Teachers' desks	578
Teachers' lockers	132
Teachers' rest rooms	200
	15,000

Mr. DE PRIEST. I hope the committee will give this matter due consideration and bring in an amendment so that this school may be properly equipped and the children prepared with a better education.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN].

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss briefly today a question in which I believe most of the people are vitally interested at this time, and that is the subject of flying. We have been considering various angles of it in Congress for some time, and quite frequently we confuse the terms that are involved. There is a difference in the various elements that go into the making up of this particular subject. It is divided into two fields—lighter-than-air craft and heavier-than-air craft.

Briefly, I may say with reference to heavier-than-air craft, and its relationship to the Government at the present time, that there has been considerable criticism of the Post Office Department for a recent cancelation of air-mail contracts, and this has caused more or less Nation-wide publicity.

I may say with reference to this particular matter that the United States Army carried mail for a good many years, and I think the Air Corps of the Army can still carry it. If it cannot, I want to know why, and I think the country wants to know why; but this is the very thing that a lot of people do not like to talk about today.

It may be necessary to carry on an investigation to find out whether or not it is true that the Army Air Corps cannot carry the mail, and if it is true, as to whether or not it was occasioned by the sale to the Army Air Corps of a lot of obsolete and improperly equipped machines.

That is an important question that is going to be answered before this thing is over. In my opinion it should have been settled before any action was taken to return the air mail to private lines. Sooner or later murder will out, and that is what we are going to discover before the proposition has been finally settled.

Now, I want to devote the balance of my time to the other phase of flying, and that is lighter-than-air craft.

A headline in a recent Washington paper to the effect that the P.W.A. may build two dirigibles prompts me to say the United States Government has no business to dabble around in that kind of a deal with the taxpayers' money.

We have spent about a hundred million dollars scorching our fingers in that fire and lost scores of human lives. The situation might even be termed "legalized murder." It is high time we declare a halt.

Congress has been circularized during the past few months by a corporation that evidently wants to aid someone in securing a loan from the taxpayers for the purpose of building two more airships. The suggestion is made that it might even be necessary to construct another hangar, and that after we spent $2,000,000 of the people's money in building one over at Akron, Ohio. We had better determine just what is going to become of that monument before we go any further with this thing. Just how are the taxpayers going to benefit from it? Is the money going to be returned to them or are they going to have to leave it there as an investment in a workshop for the Goodyear Zeppelin Co.?

The program of dirigible building that is under consideration has been going on for years. In addition to the construction of "blimps", our Government financed the building of the famous airship known as the Shenandoah, that came to a disastrous end over the State of Ohio several years ago, and cost us a lot of human lives in addition to several million dollars.

Since that time Uncle Sam has experimented further to the extent of building the Akron, which is now, largely, at least, at the bottom of the Atlantic Ocean; and the Macon, which was recently launched.

We have heard considerable about the feasibility of experimenting with lighter-than-air craft for national-defense purposes. The very structure of the ships, as well as our experience and that of other governments, makes such a program ill-advised. I doubt if Congress and the country at large recall the fact that in order to build a stable airship the structure must have a very marked degree of stability. That stability is gained largely from two sources—the manner in which the ship is constructed and the material from which it is built. If the material is not of sufficient strength, then the construction is only an incident of its successful or unsuccessful navigation.

If the structure of an airship is made of material having adequate tensile strength to withstand severe strains, it necessarily becomes too heavy. Unfortunately, the carrying capacity of an airship depends largely upon the lightness of its structure. In other words, the more weight that goes into the building of the ship the less tonnage it will be able to lift and transport.

These observations bring us to the conclusion that the practicability of an airship depends upon lightness of structure. But, unfortunately, we cannot obtain this lightness of structure and at the same time insure proper stability. At present in our dirigible-building program we have used a product known as "duralumin", manufactured by America's Aluminum Trust. That material is soft, and when used in a girder will withstand a certain amount of constant pressure, but a sudden blow or shock will cause it to collapse.

Furthermore, any weaving, hammering, or pounding upon it tends to crystallize it, and thus cause it to break like cardboard. Now, what happens after the structure has been completed and gets into the air? Here is exactly what occurs, and my statements are borne out by the experience of the United States Navy in such matters.

The vast surface of a dirigible that is necessarily exposed to the elements is its greatest hazard. A mere wetting of the shell of a ship like the Akron or the Macon will add from 12 to 14 tons to its weight. In other words, a rainstorm through which the ship might pass would decrease its carrying capacity to that extent.

To take the Akron as an example, the enormous load of the ship (403,000 pounds according to the Goodyear Zeppelin Co., 380,000 according to the Navy) was lifted by 100,042 large gas bags or cells filled with helium, some of the cells holding as much as 1½ million cubic feet of gas. The point I want to make clear is this. The gas bags are inside the structure and push up and outward to lift the load, which is, in turn, distributed over the entire structure by a network of steel wires running in all directions on the outside. With the enormous lift that helium has, there is very little or no pressure in the cells. Even though they are filled to capacity, a small man walking around on the top of the cell will sink to his crotch, so that is conclusive proof to me that there is very little or no pressure. Now we get to the fly in the ointment. The structure is built to withstand pressure from the inside and the network of wires on the outside protect this and carry the load, but what happens when we reverse the process and put pressure on the enormous outside surface, say a nice 40-mile wind, with practically no pressure inside or steel wires to help out? I should like an answer to this one from the eminent Dr. Einstein. Any sensible person can tell you what will happen—the same thing that happened to the Akron and many others—they collapse like an eggshell. The Macon, or any other ship of this design or construction, will have the same finish if they ever get into a violent storm area, as there is simply nothing there to offset the enormous pressure from the outside.

There has been much speculation as to why and how the Akron crashed off Barnegat Light at 12:33 a.m., April 4, 1933, completely destroying itself and carrying 73 members of its crew to their death. I will tell you why, in my humble opinion and that of aircraft experts who, for obvious reasons, do not get on the front page very often. The statement has been made at different times, and was brought out in certain phases of the investigation of the disaster, that the ship broke in two. The probability is that such was not the case.

Our experience with the Shenandoah, and the experiences of foreign countries with ships of similar design, have indicated that they cannot withstand a severe storm. The question is apt to be asked as to why and how Count Hugo von Eckner has been able to navigate the Graf Zeppelin so successfully. His indefinite schedule explains that almost completely. It will be noticed that, if necessary, he will postpone his flight several days in order to gain the advantage of proper weather conditions, or perhaps detour his line of travel as much as two or three hundred miles or more in order to avoid a storm area.

The fact that the framework of the American ships has been built of duralumin, which will not withstand a sudden blow without breaking, indicates certain things to my mind and to the mind of any other reasoning man or woman in regard to the Akron crash. Without doubt, that ship was caught in a severe line squall, or electrical storm, predicted before the ship ever left the ground. When the terrific winds struck the enormous surface of the dirigible this soft metal, duralumin, could not withstand the shock. So what happened? The structure of the ship simply collapsed; the broken girders punctured the gas bags and she fell like a plummet. It must be remembered that the weight of the control cabins, the motors, gas and oil, water ballast, and the various heavy parts of the ship are distributed over its large area by a network of wires. If the gas bags had not been punctured, and the ship had merely broken in two, then certainly it would have been sustained in the air much longer than it was, as in the case of the Shenandoah. Furthermore, it would have necessarily floated on the surface of the sea after it struck the water. But what happened? The three survivors testified that after the second drop began the ship fell like a plummet until it struck the surface of the sea, and sank instantly. As I remember it, Deal stated he saw no evidences of the ship on the surface when he came to the top, other than bits of broken wreckage. This very fact in itself should indicate that it did not break in two; or, at least, if it did, the network of wires held the wreck together, which sank immediately.

Some fantastic minds suggested soon after the wreck that parts of the ship might be floating around in the stratosphere. The same thing could be said for the parts of an old cultivator I threw in the creek. The wreck of the Akron is still at the bottom of the sea. It is perfectly possible it may have been discovered and purposely left there. To raise it and return the bodies of the men who manned the ship to their loved ones would have had a bad effect upon the building of dirigibles with taxpayers' money.

That reminds me, if we are going to have economy in government—and I am for it—let us have some. I would suggest we go about getting it where we can lop it off in chunks. In this day of billions I still cling to some of my rural characteristics of wanting to try and save a few fractions thereof now and then for the people, sort of like some folks save baling wire, bottle caps, and old pieces of string.

Now, why all this discussion of what is today, unfortunately, naval history or air history or some kind of history? Simply this: I want to impress upon the House and the country the fact that the United States Government has spent approximately a hundred million dollars in the building of lighter-than-air craft. I have indicated to you where the very principles involved in their successful operation are incompatible from the standpoint of national defense. In other words, if you build the ships of a material sufficiently strong to withstand a severe storm, thus making them practical, they are so heavy they cannot get off the ground with a pay load of sufficient size to make their operation profitable. Of course, it is true that the building of these ships has afforded the Goodyear Zeppelin plant at Akron, Ohio, a vast source of income. It is also true that it has been a considerable source of income to Mr. Andrew W. Mellon's Aluminum Corporation of America, which has been selling duralumin under a virtual monopoly; and now comes the Respress Aeronautical Engineering Corporation, of Cranston, R.I., with a lot of propaganda to join the procession.

Such a program is not fair to the taxpayers of this country. It is not fair to the loved ones of the 73 men who now sleep beneath the waves of the Atlantic Ocean, all for the sake of profit to some of America's large corporations.

The reason for this extended discussion with reference to the construction and operation of dirigibles and the disasters that have been experienced by our lighter-than-air craft is of a dual nature. In the first place, the time has come when it is being suggested to Congress that the Akron be replaced at an expense that would probably total at least $5,000,000. There is talk of the P.W.A. building two more of the ships. Furthermore, I want Congress and the Nation to know wherein dirigible construction must, as a part of the very nature of circumstances involved therein, be impractical from the standpoint of being agencies in our system of national defense. As I have said previously in these remarks, ships of the present design and construction cannot be built to withstand all kinds of weather conditions, which would prevent emergency flying. They would even be quite impractical as freight carriers unless a more or less regular schedule could be maintained. If improvements of design can be made that will make them serviceable in the latter field, then all well and good; but why should the people's money furnish the wherewithal for the experiment?

It should be apparent to anyone who is blessed with normal sight to be able to conclude that the ships are not practical in war time. It is evident from maneuvers I have witnessed myself and that you have seen with your own eyes that they are cumbersome things at best when in the air. To land them or to launch them requires the assistance of more or less experienced ground crews. Former Secretary of the Navy Adams did not even consider it feasible to send a dirigible—the Los Angeles—with supplies to the earthquake zone of Santo Domingo in September 1930. It was indicated the ship could not make the trip because mooring and landing facilities were lacking, and also because of possible storms in the hurricane area. May I ask the friends of the dirigible where they expect to land their fighters in time of war? Do they think they can drop ground crews out of control cabins with parachutes? Do they think they are going to find them at any point where it becomes imperative for them to sit down, so to speak? Obviously, a dirigible would be more or less impractical as a cruiser of the air during hostilities. They are comparatively easy prey to antiaircraft gunners. Their tremendous bulk and their clumsy flight make them easy meat for such marksmen or destroyer planes.

For example, in a recent sham battle in the Southwest, a fleet of war planes theoretically destroyed the Macon three times within the course of 24 hours. Of course, very little notice was made of this fact, and the incident was carried in merely a few inches of type.

It is interesting to note in a report of the congressional investigation of the destruction of the Akron there is a polite statement to the effect that "a sense of decency causes the mind to shrink from pronouncing judgment on the dead", which is immediately followed by that very judgment on the dead from which the committee so politely shrank. Commander McCord, according to the committee, was responsible for the tragedy because "responsibility was due to the navigation of the ship into storm conditions." So, I have concluded that the "eyes of the fleet" must never fly into storm conditions. Oh, what a polite and properly conducted war our next struggle must surely be!

But slight additional comment need be made with reference to the disasters to the American-built dirigible, Shenandoah, the Italian built—American purchased—Roma, the French Dixmude, the Akron, and our blimps, one of which went down searching for the remains of the latter, except that in almost every case the ill-fated craft were the "last word" in dirigible construction. So it was when the British ship R–101 took to the air.

We might, if we only wanted to, look at an impressive summary of England's post-war experiences with dirigibles compiled by Lt. Comdr. J. M. Kenworth for the Saturday Review; the NS–11 struck by lightning in 1919 and destroyed with her whole crew. The R–24 and R–29 were scrapped after a few flights. The R–26 was scrapped 10 months after launching. The R–31 was scrapped after two flights. The R–32 was scrapped on the strength of experience gained with the R–31. The R–34 was wrecked in 1931. The R–35 construction was canceled after $375,000 had been spent. The R–36 was scrapped after 97 hours in the air. The R–37 was scrapped after less than a hundred hours in the air. The R–38 was destroyed with the loss of 44 lives, including American officers and enlisted men. Both the R–39 and the R–80 were scrapped before making a single flight.

In a debate on airships in the House of Commons in March 1928 Frank Rose, a critic of such craft, declared that if history counted for anything the two proposed airships, the R–100 and the R–101, were doomed. Up to date he reckoned a total expenditure of almost $12,000,000 for construction alone, and Great Britain had received only 1,040 hours of flying in return—at a cost of approximately $7,500 per flying hour. The two dirigibles, the building of which Mr. Rose was opposing, were afterward constructed at an additional cost of $10,000,000. The R–101 met with the well-known disaster, and the other has been dismantled. With reference to the former incident, the London Morning Post commented editorially:

> And there is nothing to be said against the construction of more airships, and, if necessary, larger airships, provided only the public is not required to share in the expense of building them.

I should like to suggest that at a time when we are faced with the necessity for economy in Government expenditures we can very well stop the construction of airships because of their lack of military value, the fact that leading nations of the world have abandoned them for such purposes, and likewise the fact that our own experience has been extremely sad and costly.

There is an additional reason why there may be another move inaugurated in Congress, either during the present session or during coming sessions, to further experiment with dirigibles. I have already intimated that the Goodyear Zeppelin Corporation of America and the Andrew W. Mellon Aluminum Trust are vitally interested in the continuation of such a program. If you do not think that is true, then why did the former company, as soon as they secured the contract from the Government for the building of the Akron and the Macon, boost their issue of common stock from 1,450,000 to 5,000,000 shares? There may be a preferred-stock list in connection with that deal which would lay back the ears of any overburdened taxpayer.

There is a further reason why an attempt may be made to appropriate funds for the construction of more dirigibles, if not this session then at some other. A measure that passed the House during the seventy-second session contained a neat little joker that could possibly have cost the taxpayers of the United States many millions of dollars, if not billions, and will do so later on if a similar provision ever becomes law. It had a nice patriotic flare to it, just as did the hooey about America's mighty dirigibles, the Akron and her sister ship the Macon—a sort of "Hail Columbia" lilt to it.

It is difficult to censure anyone for having voted for such a measure, because it sounded innocent and delightfully progressive; in the parlance of modern journalism, we might even say "air-minded", but after defining the terms under which the Postmaster General may enter into contracts we find in the proposed measure the following:

> The rate of compensation for services in the transportation of mails under this section shall not exceed the following: $20 per mile in the case of airships or other aircraft capable of carrying at least 10,000 pounds of mail and a suitable commercial load a distance of at least 2,000 miles without refueling. * * *

Now, I want the House to note these words, "capable of carrying." No aircraft in existence at the present time can carry 10,000 pounds of mail plus a commercial load a distance of 2,000 miles except a dirigible. That very fact in itself eliminates competition except for those who are interested in dirigible construction and operation. Of course, no one needs to remind me of the fact that the measure provides for letting contracts on the basis of competitive bids, but those bids are necessarily limited to big dirigibles in the Akron and the Macon class, and I will let you guess who those owners are.

Let us look at that $20 per mile; it is approximately 3,000 miles across the Atlantic Ocean, or on a round trip the ship would cover about 6,000 miles. The Government could, within that law, pay $120,000 for the transportation of 1 pound of mail across the ocean. That is the same old story of ocean mail contracts that have been successful in building treasure ships or some of America's financiers.

For example, in little less than 1 year the Post Office Department paid the Export Steamship Co., of which J. P. Morgan and Vincent Astor are directors, the sum of $704,940 for carrying 3 pounds of mail across the ocean. In other words, in this particular case it happened to cost the Government $234,980 a pound to transport its mail. The above are not the only offenders. There are the South Atlantic Steamship Co., the Mississippi Shipping Co., the Grace Steamship Lines, the American-West African Lines, and others. The subsidy was paid out under the provisions of the Jones-White Merchant Marine Act of 1928, which provided that in order to encourage the development of a large American merchant marine, the Post Office Department would pay subsidies in the form of postal rates based on the tonnage, mileage, and speed of the subsidized ships.

The old rate for carrying ocean mail, charged by both American and foreign ships before that law went into effect, was a flat charge of 80 cents per pound. Thus what the Government paid $1,400,000 for to the Morgan-Astor owned Export Steamship Co. would have cost only $9.60 under the old rates. Speaking of economy, I should like to suggest to the House and to the National Economy League, there is one place where we can economize, and the prevention of the passage of such a bill as I have described with reference to future transoceanic air-mail contracts will prevent similar vast expenditures for the purpose of subsidizing the experimentations of private companies in the building and operation of dirigibles that the experience of a long period of years has proved impractical.

Now, Members of the House, these observations lead me to this conclusion. As a result of the evidences I have brought to bear to prove the impracticability of dirigible construction, from the standpoint of war-time use, any further program of this nature inaugurated by Congress will be little short of insanity.

Soon after the crash of the English ship—the R–101—the New York Sun said in its issue of October 9, 1930:

> The only thing that will affect this policy (lighter-than-air craft building) will be the refusal of Congress to appropriate more millions for the building of more aerial death traps. It is silly to say that the R–101 disaster will contribute much of importance not already known about construction and operation of gigantic dirigibles. It has been demonstrated over and over again, demonstrated thoroughly enough to convince anybody but a member or supporter of the Bureau of (Naval) Aeronautics that dirigibles—which the same Mr. Ingalls recently declared to be practically invulnerable—suffer from weakness inherent in their very nature. Both Admiral Moffet and Mr. Ingalls loudly deplore that the R–101 was inflated with hydrogen gas; they intimate there would have been no disaster if helium had been employed. The Shenandoah was inflated with helium gas when it cracked under the strain of a prairie windstorm.

And I might add in my own words that the Akron was likewise inflated with helium when she plunged to her watery grave off Barnegat Light.

The Washington Times, in a news article under date of April 12, 1933, indicated that the loss involved in that most recent tragedy was approximately $10,000,000, the sum being a conservative estimate from figures obtained through a check on all the elements of the expense of operation, personnel pay and training, loss of helium gas, and so forth, with nothing said about the lives of 73 human beings that were lost. Speaking of legalized murder, it would seem that there could be no more excellent example than that experience.

The taxpayers of this country must not be insulted with additional appropriations for such works. I am inclined to think the mills of those taxpayers, like the mills of the gods, grind slowly, but they grind exceedingly fine. We must not continue spending their money in such a wasteful manner in order that the profits thereof may go into the pockets of the rich, and continue to float a program that has been kept alive in America after England, France, and all the great powers of the world, bristling with other types of armament, have abandoned attempts to adapt dirigibles to either peacetime or defense purposes, while the hearts of many ache for those who were lost on the Shenandoah and for those who went down into the sea with the twisted, broken wreckage of the Akron.

Money that belongs to the people should be sacred, and the lives of human beings are precious, according to the annals of civilization. [Applause.]

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, when I picked up the morning paper today and read that the ladies of the D.A.R., now in conference assembled, had been told yesterday that this Congress had appropriated a million and a quarter dollars for the construction of the American embassy in Moscow, and that it would cost $400,000 per annum to keep it up, I was reminded of the definition of genius as being the infinite capacity for making mistakes, and especially does it seem that this capacity is augmented in an election year.

What are the facts? The facts are that this Congress appropriated $1,165,000, not for an ambassador's residence, which is what the word "embassy" means, but for a complete diplomatic and consular mission, consisting of, first, a centralized office building for diplomatic, consular officers, and all other American representatives in Moscow; second, residential quarters for the entire American staff in Moscow, now numbering about 40, and finally, an ambassador's residence, which, instead of costing $1,250,000, will cost less than $200,000.

What were the precedents as set by our Republican friends? In the spring of 1925 the Congress authorized an expenditure of $1,250,000 for a complete diplomatic mission in Tokyo. This project in Japan consists of a centralized office building, two apartment houses for the lower-salaried staff, and an ambassador's residence, and seems to me a clear analogy to the project envisaged for Moscow.

Again in the Coolidge administration Congress authorized the acquisition and repair of an Ambassador's residence in Paris for $300,000, and subsequently under the Foreign Service Buildings Act passed in the Coolidge administration in May 1926 the Government acquired a plot of land in Paris for a centralized office building at a cost of $1,219,000. This office building which I have not seen, but am informed, is well designed and constructed by an American architect and an American general contractor, has just been finished at a cost of $1,275,000, making a total capital investment in Paris of nearly $3,000,000. The cost of the maintenance of this office building is estimated at 30.19 cents a square foot as compared with the maintenance cost of 31.99 cents for our House Office Buildings, or an estimate of 46.66 cents a square foot for the Senate Office Building, including the new wing. Again, under the same Foreign Service Buildings Act in the Hoover administration, the Government acquired in Buenos Aires an Ambassador's residence standing in 2¼ acres of ground, for $1,269,000 with an added cost of more than $150,000 for repairs, and so forth. In comparison with this, our Democratic project of an Ambassador's residence in Moscow to cost not more than $200,000 seems eminently modest.

Again, in Rome, Italy, the Government acquired, in the Hoover administration, a plot of land on which were two identical houses which are to be used after remodeling and repair, the one for all Government offices and the other for an Ambassador's residence. This Rome purchase totaled $1,105,000.

Again in Berlin under the Hoover administration a plot of land consisting of an acre and a half in the heart of the city was acquired for $1,705,000. When this is improved with an office building which will include the Ambassador's residence and offices for all American representatives in Berlin, the total cost will approximate two and a half million dollars, which is considerably more than $1,165,000 now projected for Russia.

How do these expenditures abroad compare with our Government expenditures in this country? Generally—and I may say much to my surprise—I find that even in a Republican administration the expenditures abroad were less than the expenditures under a Republican administration right here in Washington. For example, the cost of property purchased in Paris was approximately $28.75 a square foot; for Berlin, $25.46 a square foot; for Rome, $10.16 a square foot. All these prices are for the complete purchase, and therefore the value of the standing buildings is figured as nothing. By contrast the cost of the land to the Government under the Supreme Court Building, which was acquired by condemnation, was $9.74 a square foot; under the building just being finished for the Department of Justice was $34.73; under the building now housing the Post Office Department, $22.77 a square foot; under the Interstate Commerce and Labor Building, $17.82 a square foot.

The comparable construction in Tokyo was $0.57 a cubic foot for the new buildings; the cost of the new Paris office building was $0.602 a cubic foot, whereas the cost of the Supreme Court Building is $1.20 a cubic foot; the cost of the Department of Commerce Building was $0.615 a cubic foot; the cost of the Post Office Building was $0.635 a cubic foot; and the cost of the Internal Revenue Building was $0.535 a cubic foot.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted as a part of my remarks an excerpt from the Thanksgiving Day speech of President Roosevelt at Savannah a few days after he recognized Russia.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

FROM PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S SPEECH AT SAVANNAH, SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1933

CANNOT CURE ILLNESS OF 12 YEARS IN 1

The saving grace of America lies in the fact that the overwhelming majority of Americans are possessed of two great qualities—a sense of humor and a sense of proportion. With the one they smile at those who would divide up all the money in the Nation on a per capita basis every Saturday night and at those who lament that they would rather possess pounds and francs than dollars.

With our sense of proportion we understand and accept the fact that in the short space of 1 year we cannot cure the chronic illness that beset us for a dozen years, nor restore the social and economic order with equal and simultaneous success in every part of the Nation and in every walk of life. But, my friends, we are on the way.

It is the pioneering spirit and understanding perspective of the people of the United States which already is making itself felt among other nations of the world.

The simple translation of the peaceful and neighborly purposes of the United States has already given to our sister American Republics a greater faith in our professions of friendship than they have held since the time, over a century ago, when James Monroe encouraged them in their struggles for freedom.

So, too, I have had an example of the effect of honest statement and simple explanation of the fundamental American policy during the past week in Washington. For 16 long years a nation, larger even than ours in population and extent of territory, has been unable to speak officially with the United States or to maintain normal relations. I believe sincerely that the most impelling motive that has lain behind the conversations which were successfully concluded yesterday between Russia and the United States was the desire of both countries for peace and for the strengthening of the peaceful purposes of the civilized world.

It will interest you to know that in the year 1809 the President of the United States, Thomas Jefferson, wrote as follows to his Russian friend, M. Dashkoff:

"Russia and the United States being in character and practice essentially pacific, a common interest in the rights of peaceable nations gives us a common cause in their maintenance."

HOLDS PEACE STRENGTHENED BY RECOGNITION OF RUSSIA

In this spirit of Thomas Jefferson, Mr. Litvinoff and I believe that through the resumption of normal relations the prospects of peace over all the world are greatly strengthened.

Furthermore, I am confident that in a State like Georgia, which had its roots in religious teachings and religious liberty and was the first State in which a Sunday school was established, there must be satisfaction to know that from now on any American sojourning among the great Russian people will be free to worship God in his own way.

It is perhaps especially significant that I should speak of the resumption of relations with Russia in the city from which a century ago the first trans-Atlantic steamship set out on its voyage to the Old World.

I am glad to be back on Georgia soil. I am hurrying to Warm Springs with special interest, for I shall see a splendid new building, given to the cause of helping crippled children by the citizens of the State of Georgia. And I am hurrying back to my cottage there for the almost equally important objective of seeing to it that a prize Georgia turkey is put into the primest possible condition for the Thanksgiving Day feast.

On this Thanksgiving I live to think that many more fathers and mothers and children will partake of turkey than for many years past. What a splendid thing it would be if in every community throughout the land, in celebration of this Thanksgiving—and here in Georgia in celebration of the bicentennial of the founding of the colony—every community would set as its Thanksgiving Day objective the providing of a Thanksgiving dinner for those who have not yet been blessed by the returning prosperity sufficiently to provide their own.

Let me read to you in closing a message delivered a generation ago by a great son of a great Georgia mother, Theodore Roosevelt:

"Materially we must strive to secure a broader economic opportunity for all men so that each shall have a better chance to show the stuff of which he is made. Spiritually and ethically we must strive to bring about clean living and right thinking. We appreciate that the things of the body are important; but we appreciate also that the things of the soul are immeasurably more important. The foundation stone of national life is and ever must be the high individual character of the individual citizen."

I count on the citizens of America to continue to march with me.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Now I shall be very glad to yield for questions.

Mr. RANDOLPH. If the gentleman will yield, I am intensely interested in what the gentleman has said and am in full agreement with his views that we should have adequate quarters for our Embassy in Russia. I do want to ask this question, however: Who is the Senator who made the remarks before the D.A.R. convention yesterday?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. It was the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. BARBOUR?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes. May I say further that the statement that $400,000 per annum will be the cost of the annual upkeep is entirely inaccurate; of that amount about $150,000 represents the pay of the personnel, and then there must be deducted such items as heat, fuel, light, telegraph, and other expenses incident to administration. So only a comparatively small part of that amount really represents the outlay which will continue throughout the years. This amount will be reduced next year, I think, when we report the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1936.

It is also interesting to note that the cost of maintaining our Embassy and offices in Paris, exclusive of the interest on the capital investment of $2,800,000, is approximately $300,000.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. COLMER. Is the gentleman familiar with the amount of money other countries have spent by way of investment in embassies in this country?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I think they have been very extravagant; and I do not think a democratic Government like ours will ever approve of doing more than this Congress has appropriated for Moscow and which a former Congress appropriated for Tokyo. When the matter of the purchase of the Ambassador's residence in Argentina was brought to the attention of the House, there was real indignation on both sides of the aisle at the action of the commission in spending money so recklessly. [Applause.]

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, some weeks ago, the majority leader, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], and other Members of the House objected to certain news articles and bulk matter that were going into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. At that time I told the majority leader that I would use what influence I had with the Joint Committee on Printing in trying to correct this practice, or at least see what would be done to make it conform with existing laws touching the subject.

I requested the Public Printer to ascertain the annual cost of the bulk matter that goes into the RECORD at the request of the Members of the House, and he advised me that it was between $250,000 and $300,000. This, of course, covers the time the Congress is in session, usually about 5 months.

I have observed, during this session of Congress, that a great deal of printed matter is being inserted in the RECORD and have tried my best to secure the adoption by the Committee on Printing of the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the following shall be a joint rule of the Senate and House of Representatives, viz:

It shall not be in order to entertain a motion or a request for unanimous consent to print any matter as a document other than an official communication transmitted pursuant to law, nor to insert any matter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD other than memorials of State legislatures, unless such printing or insertion shall be recommended by the Committee on Printing of either House, accompanied by an estimate by the Public Printer of the probable cost thereof.

The presiding officers of the two Houses, respectively, shall enforce this rule.

Other resolutions have been presented to the committee, but the Joint Committee on Printing does not agree on the manner of curbing the Members of the Senate and House inserting in the RECORD bulk printing and miscellaneous matter.

I should like to speak at great length in reference to some of the things that have been inserted in the RECORD during this session, but time will not permit. I do, however, want to call the attention of the Members of the House to letters that have been inserted in the RECORD during the past week. Very prominent Members have inserted these letters at the request of others. The letters take up as many as five and a half pages and cost the taxpayers of this country $250 for the insertion. In addition to that they use the privilege of franking these personal remarks all over their districts.

Now, in my opinion this is absolutely wrong. If a Member of Congress having served 4 or 5 years is not able to convince the people back home that he is able to represent them, I see no reason why the taxpayers of this country should have to pay for franking out these letters for the benefit of individual Members in their own districts. The franking of these matters involves a greater expense to the taxpayers of the country than does the insertion in the RECORD. Why should the taxpayers be imposed upon to pay the great expense of telling to the constituents of a Congressman or Senator what a fine fellow he is, what ability he possesses, how hard he works for their interest?

I realize a Member of Congress can be just as busy as he chooses, and I believe that the great majority of Members of Congress are ardent workers and deserve credit for doing the work they do.

There is also the fact that when we have these pamphlets printed they have written on their face, "Not printed at Government expense." May I say that I have tried to make an investigation, and I find that the amount that we pay for these pamphlets is not in accordance with what an individual would have to pay for printing same in any printing shop in the United States. The taxpayers of the country are paying for these remarks, the Members of Congress getting the benefit. I say that it is absolutely wrong to what extent some Members use the privilege, and we ought to curb the practice.

May I say that any Member of the House of Representatives who asks an influential Member of the House, whether it be the majority leader, the minority leader, or someone else, to insert a speech of his in the RECORD is doing the wrong thing. If he wants to put the speech in the RECORD, he ought to put it in under his own name and not force an influential Member to do something that I have my doubts at times if the Member wants to do. If each Member of the House of Representatives were to put in a letter that took five and a half pages, it would cost the taxpayers over $100,000. Not only that, but if you have a number of thousand printed in the Printing Office, it is liable to cost the taxpayers of this country four or five hundred thousand dollars; and I do not think the taxpayers want to spread this kind of self-written literature over all the country for the political and social benefit of a Member of Congress.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. I am interested in the gentleman's statement that the Government Printing Office prints the speeches of Members at less than cost. The chairman of the committee made the statement on the floor of the House that the Government made about 10 percent profit. On yesterday I ordered a thousand copies of a speech, and I paid $23.37 for the thousand. I believe you could get them printed in Washington or a printing office in the gentleman's local community for that price. If the gentleman says that they are being printed below cost he is in disagreement with his own chairman, who says that the Government is making a profit of 10 percent. I agree with the gentleman that no Member should insert extraneous matter into the RECORD unless it is in the interest of the general welfare.

Mr. RICH. May I say that Mr. LAMBETH is in hearty accord with the statement I have made regarding printing bulk matter, by unanimous consent, and is doing everything he can to reduce the cost of the Government printing. He does not want this extraneous matter placed in the RECORD.

Mr. PATMAN. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. He told me time and time again that this was the case so far as the cost of printing these pamphlets is concerned. We have had presented to us a proposition from outside people who would take over the Government printing and save the Government $2,000,000 a year if they could operate the plant. I am not in favor of doing away with the Government Printing Office, because I think there is a necessity to maintain the Government Printing Office. I do object, however, to increasing its personnel for emergency organizations printing such as N.R.A., A.A.A., C.W.A., P.W.A., and so forth, employing 650 additional persons in the Government Printing Office above their regular working force, when the printing plants of this country are crying for work to keep their plants in operation. They pay taxes and support this Government; yet we permit the Government to increase its operation. It is wrong. Members of Congress, it is socialistic government. I have opposed it, and shall oppose it, for no other reason than that it is wrong for our Government to go into business in competition with private enterprise.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE].

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Chairman, there has been so much misrepresentation and erroneous information given out concerning the Frazier-Lemke bill that I feel called upon to explain this bill so that the Members may know just what it is. Some of these misstatements were undoubtedly made for the purpose of preventing us from getting 145 signatures on the petition to discharge the committee. At least, they were made by Members who did not have the courtesy to read the bill and inform themselves on what it was before they spoke. To these people I would suggest this rule: "If you do not know what a bill is, either find out or remain silent until you do know.

The Frazier-Lemke bill provides that the United States Government shall refinance existing farm indebtedness at 1½-percent interest and 1½-percent principal on the amortization plan, not by issuing bonds but by issuing Federal Reserve notes secured by the best securities on earth, first mortgages on farm lands—better security than gold or silver, because you cannot eat gold or silver, but you can eat the products that grow on the farms, therefore your life depends upon the farms. These farm mortgages are the best security on the face of the earth. If our Government has enough intelligence to do this, it will make a profit of $6,345,000,000 at 1½-percent interest in 47 years, the time required for amortization of the farm indebtedness.

Let us compare the Frazier-Lemke bill with the one passed by the special session of Congress, written in New York in the atmosphere of the money changers. Under that bill, if all the farm indebtedness were refinanced, the farmers of this Nation would pay $12,492,500,000 in 39 years to the bondholders. Under the Frazier-Lemke bill the farmers would have to pay just $6,149,500,000 less interest in 47 years, and at the same time the Government would make a net profit of $6,345,000,000 and to that extent lessen our Federal tax burden.

Under the present Farm Mortgage Act the farmer is asked to pay 4½-percent interest if he lives in a Federal farm loan association district, and 5 percent if he does not, and in addition pay 1 percent for administration and buy stock in an amount equal to 5 percent of the loan, making 10½ or 11 percent for the first year and thereafter 4½- or 5-percent interest, together with 1 percent for amortization, making 5½ or 6 percent annually until paid. While under the Frazier-Lemke bill he will pay 1½-percent interest and 1½-percent principal, or $30 for each $1,000 borrowed, for approximately 47 years. Under the Frazier-Lemke bill a farmer could carry a $17,000 mortgage loan, as far as his ability to pay goes, as easily as a $5,000 loan under the present law. The Frazier-Lemke bill takes into consideration the farmer's ability to pay. Under the provisions of this bill a farmer, on a $10,000 loan, will have to pay $24,000 less in interest in 47 years than he would have to pay if he got the same loan for 6 percent straight. Surely we are all for that. Another difference is that under the present law hundreds and thousands of farmers are losing their farms by mortgage foreclosure because of their inability to meet the requirements and limitations of that law, while under the Frazier-Lemke bill they could be refinanced and their homes saved.

There is a limitation of the amount of Federal Reserve notes that can be issued under this bill because the bill provides that—

> Whenever the amount of money actually in circulation in the United States shall exceed $75 per capita, then the Treasurer of the United States, by and with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board and the President of the United States, may retire Federal Reserve notes in an amount equal to the principal paid on farm-loan bonds for which Federal Reserve notes were issued, not to exceed 2 percent in any one year of the amount of Federal Reserve notes so issued.

Under this provision, if this bill had been a law when this session of Congress opened, there could have been issued approximately $3,000,000,000—but since the per capita circulation has gone down $3.63 since this session opened, since there has been a deflation to that extent, there could now be issued under that bill some $3,200,000,000. In order to satisfy our critics, we are willing to accept an amendment when this bill comes up, limiting in express words, that the amount of Federal Reserve notes outstanding at any one time under this bill shall not exceed $3,000,000,000.

This will be sufficient to refinance and save the farmers. If we had passed this bill in the special session, this $3,000,000,000, used as a revolving fund, would have given us an intelligent expansion of the currency and would have made it unnecessary for the Government to issue billions of tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds. That is the difference between the Frazier-Lemke bill and the present policy of the Government borrowing money and guaranteeing bonds.

In passing, I simply wish to state that there never was any justification for the wild statements that the passage of this bill would require eight and one-half billion dollars of new currency. In fact, it will not require $3,000,000,000 as a revolving fund because when sufficient new currency is issued and the people again have enough money to do the Nation's business, they themselves will buy some of these bonds, and $3,000,000,000 as a revolving fund will be more than sufficient to refinance the entire farm indebtedness.

Our Government now prints Federal Reserve notes and gives them to the Federal Reserve bank at 0.7 of 1 cent per bill—the cost of printing. It makes no difference whether that bill is a one-dollar bill or a thousand-dollar bill—or whether they keep it for 1 year or for 20 years—all they ever pay your Uncle Sam for it is 0.7 of 1 cent per bill. The amount of all the paper money given by the Government to the banks amounted on January 1 last to over $4,878,500,000, of which amount over $3,332,000,000 were Federal Reserve notes.

What is back of this paper money? Is there gold back of it? There is not. Is there even a farm back of it? There is not. There is simply the indebtedness of the United States—a Government bond—back of it. There is no gold back of it and if any of you think there is, just take a Federal Reserve note to the United States Treasury and try to get gold for it, and you will find that you cannot get it. If you could get it, then I could have you arrested for violating the law and having monetary gold in your possession. That is how much gold you have back of the Federal Reserve notes now in circulation. I am informed that some of the Federal Reserve banks' notes, issued under the act that we passed during the special session of Congress, have nothing back of them excepting bonds of some of Mr. Insull's public utilities. Of course I am not objecting to this, but I simply want to impress upon your minds that money is made by law, that it is a medium of exchange—a yardstick with which we measure the muscular and brain energy of a people, and we ought to have enough intelligence in this Congress to provide a sufficient medium of exchange—enough money to keep the energy of the people of the United States busy in useful occupations.

Of course, there can be too much money as well as there can be too little. Just now we have too little. The depression was caused and is due to the fact that we have too little—too few yardsticks—not enough money to do the Nation's business. Our trouble has been that we have not had the courage to approach this subject fearlessly and intelligently, but instead have tried to borrow ourselves out of debt by plunging the Nation further into debt.

After your Government had given all this money to these bankers, it found it necessary to borrow back some of the money that it gave away. It had to sell bonds and certificates of indebtedness. The amount of these bonds and certificates of indebtedness on January 1 last amounted to over $25,000,000,000 and will be some $32,000,000,000 by the end of the year. These bonds bear interest on an average of about 3½ percent and are tax exempt. In other words, these bankers use the $4,878,500,000 paper money which your Government gave them as a revolving fund, with which they bought the $25,000,000,000 tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds and certificates of indebtedness.

If our Government can do this for the bankers, why can it not do it for the farmers? Why not do it for agriculture? Why not issue Federal Reserve notes secured by better security than the bankers put up—secured by the farms of this Nation? Why not do the reasonable thing, the intelligent thing, the only thing, and pass the Frazier-Lemke bill? When this bill becomes a law, it will reduce a farmer's indebtedness by three fifths in 47 years because of the lower rate of interest, and in addition the Government will make a net profit of $6,345,000,000.

When the Frazier-Lemke bill passes there will be issued and put into circulation among the people between two and three billion dollars of new currency—Federal Reserve notes. It will again give purchasing power to the people. The farmer will pay his banker, his merchant, his lawyer, and his doctor, and they in turn will pay their bills, and all will start in again repairing and improving their homes. Unemployment and starvation will cease. The enforced idleness of millions of men and women will disappear, and we will hear no more of overproduction. Consumption will again be normal—real prosperity will return. There is danger ahead. You cannot keep on borrowing money—you cannot continue the C.W.A. and P.W.A.—because the credit of the United States is sooner or later going to be exhausted. Let us put more money in circulation among the men and women of this Nation. Let us get this bill out of committee, pass it, and put two or three billion dollars in actual circulation.

This bill has the official endorsement of the National Farmers' Union; it has the official endorsement of some State Farm Bureau organizations and of many bureau and grange locals throughout the Nation. It has the approval of 95 percent of the farmers of this Nation; it has the approval of every intelligent banker, business, and professional man and woman. Twenty-one State legislatures have asked Congress to pass this bill. They are Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, and Wisconsin. It has the approval of the lower house of the State Legislature of New York, the President's own State, as well as that of Ohio and of Delaware. Surely no Member of Congress from these States is justified in ignoring these mandates from his State.

Last Monday we were within a few signatures of the required 145 to discharge the committee having charge of the Frazier-Lemke bill. Not only were we within striking distance but sufficient Members were ready to sign, when suddenly all the force of the conservatives of both parties was brought into action to prevent Members from signing and to urge those who had signed to withdraw their names.

I am informed that there were long-distance telephone calls from New York—that there were local telephone calls here in Washington—that Members were called up and visited in their offices and urged to withdraw their names. In short, the Frazier-Lemke bill ran into a wet spell—a Rainey spell—and when that spell was over, 12 of the outposts on the petition had been washed away—12 Members had withdrawn their names. The hopes and aspirations of the 30,000,000 men, women, and children that live on the farms were again temporarily dashed upon the rocks, but not permanently wrecked or destroyed because we are going to get the Frazier-Lemke bill out of committee in spite of this opposition. Time and determination will right all wrong—justice will eventually triumph.

Two of the 12 Members who lost themselves in the onslaught have since regained their better judgment and reinstated their names; whether the other 10 have actually drowned or been permanently lost during the Rainey spell remains to be seen. Their names will be made public unless they reinstate them. The people of their State and district have a right to know who's who and they shall know. In the meantime, in fairness to these Members, knowing the terrific pressure that was used to get their names off, we will give them a breathing spell to regain their better judgment. In the end, they will have to decide what the electorate in their district demands of them in this case; that decision is their privilege.

I will say to the men and women that I have no objection and find no fault with any man or any woman who took his or her name off of that petition, but I think they did not act for the best interests of this Nation when they did it.

I did not find any pressure up there in the press gallery, I found the pressure about 12 feet below the press gallery that took off the names.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEMKE. Certainly.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. I took my name off of the Frazier-Lemke petition for the reason that it had been there for 2 months and nothing had been done. I am ready to "go to bat" for the bill, but I think when a bill languishes that long you are going to have trouble when it gets out and is up for consideration, and we had better turn another way for relief.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEMKE. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. I should like to make an observation. My name is also on that petition, and I think the number of it is 23, signed during the first session of the Congress, and I want to say to my good friend from Indiana that we will never get satisfactory refinancing of farm mortgages if Members state that they believe in the bill, but they do not believe in it to the extent of discharging the committee from further consideration of the bill. I say to you that when 145 Members of the House of Representatives sign a petition to discharge a committee from further consideration of any bill, it ought to be brought up and given a chance to be voted upon, because 125 Members of this House represent at least 40,000,000 people of this great country of ours.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEMKE. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state to the Membership of the House how many names have been withdrawn from the petition to discharge the committee?

Mr. LEMKE. I will do that, because a misstatement was made on the floor here that there were 14. There were not 14; there were 12, and 2 went back on, and I am satisfied that the other 10 are going back on. [Applause.]

I want to say to the gentlewoman from Indiana that I am glad that she is with the farmers. I know she believes in the farmers' cause, and I would ask her to put her name back on the petition, because she took it off just at the time when we would have gone over, because on that day we had 141 signatures.

In the meantime, in order to keep the Members from reinstating their names, it has been stated from the floor of the House and from the Speaker's chair that it was against the rule to make their names public. The rule reads in part:

The motion—

That is, the petition—

shall be placed in the custody of the Clerk, who shall arrange some convenient place for the signature of Members. A signature may be withdrawn by a Member in writing at any time before the motion is entered on the Journal. When Members to the total number of 145 shall have signed the motion it shall be entered on the Journal, printed with the signatures thereto in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and referred to the Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees.

There is not a word in that language that requires secrecy or star-chamber proceedings. The fact is that the rule itself requires it to be made public through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD when 145 signatures are secured.

I appeal to each and every Member of this House to read this rule and then tell me whether the interpretation put upon the language by former Speakers of this House is justifiable. I deny that any former Speaker could have intelligently and fairly interpreted that language to mean secrecy. The fact that other Speakers have done violence to the language is no reason why our distinguished Speaker should do so. The right to alter the rules belongs to the Membership of this body and not to the Speaker. I deny that there is anything in this rule that prevents any Member from making public the names of those who signed the petition or those who withdrew their names. Some of the Members who signed the petition themselves made that fact public to their constituents. Surely, no Member wishes to secretly take his name off without his constituents' knowledge. No Speaker or any Member of this House—who temporarily forget that they are but the servants of the people—can put a padlock upon our brains or seal our lips. The public have a right to know what their representatives in Washington are doing—and they are going to know, and we are sure that no Member objects to their knowing.

I am sure that those who withdrew their names and have not as yet reinstated them, were acting in good faith and whatever their ultimate action on this matter is, will not object to having the public know it. I am sure that the 131 Members of this Congress, whose names still remain on the petition, have the courage of their conviction—the honesty of their conscience, so that they are proud to have the world know that they had the common decency of signing the petition to bring the Frazier-Lemke bill out of committee and onto the floor for a discussion on its merits.

There is no occasion for secrecy about this. There is no rule to the contrary, and the Speaker cannot make rules to tell this body what to do, or what to say, or how to think. The rules are made on the floor of the House by the House. If you can tell me that I cannot make it public when I sign a petition, then you can tell me I cannot make it public when I withdraw my name, and you can tell me that I cannot make it public that I did not sign a petition. Let us stop this silly talk about rules. The public has a right to know who signs these petitions and who does not, and no one who has signed or withdrawn their names have been heard to object.

I am not asking you to vote for this measure, but let us put our names on this petition and find out whether we want this legislation or not. A majority should rule, not a little minority that gets names taken off after they are put on a petition.

This bill is not only for the benefit of the farmers; it benefits all classes of people. Here are some telegrams of endorsement. Here is one from the McKenzie County Bankers' Association of North Dakota. Here is one from the First International Bank of Minot, urging that this bill be passed. Here is one from the People's State Bank of Velva, N.Dak. Here is one from the Independent Bankers' Association of the State of Minnesota. Here is one from the Chamber of Commerce of Fargo, N.Dak. Here is a letter of endorsement from the First National Bank of Roxton, Tex. Here is one from three banks, the First National Bank, the Farmers' State Bank, the Liberty National Bank of Dickinson, N.Dak. Here is another from the State bank examiner of North Dakota, Adam Lefor. Here is a letter from Elmer A. Benson, commissioner of banks of the State of Minnesota. Here is a letter from the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation. Here are endorsements from Farm Bureau and Grange local organizations, all urging that this bill be passed, and all but one received within the last 2 days.

Now, here is a telegram that I do want to read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman may read the telegram.

Mr. LEMKE. The telegram reads as follows:

BISMARCK, N.DAK., April 17, 1934.

Hon. WILLIAM LEMKE,
House of Representatives:

I strongly urge the passage of the Frazier-Lemke refinancing bill. Farmers for the past 10 years have operated under adverse conditions, resulting in an accumulation of debts, nonpayment of taxes, and almost completely eliminating their purchasing power, until it has seriously affected business men, banks, and the State. Farmer needs to refinance his present indebtedness under a more favorable mortgage than he is offered at the present time. The Frazier-Lemke bill would refinance not only the farmers' mortgages and indebtedness but would also put the financial structure of the State, business men, and banks in a much improved condition and without question would revive business, because the farmer would have his purchasing power increased on account of the benefits he would derive under the more favorable terms of the Frazier-Lemke bill.

BANK OF NORTH DAKOTA,
R. M. STANGLER.

That is from the Bank of North Dakota, R. M. Stangler, manager. It is the only State-owned, operated, and controlled bank in the United States of America, one of the strongest and best institutions in the country.

(The time of Mr. LEMKE having expired, he was given 5 minutes more.)

Mr. BUCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEMKE. I will yield.

Mr. BUCK. I should like to ask the gentleman if he is aware of the fact that when the bill came up in the Committee on Agriculture, and a hearing was asked for on the bill, the leading proponent for the bill asked that the matter lie on the table?

Mr. LEMKE. There was an attempt made, as there was in the McLeod bill, to chloroform it by sending it to the Rules Committee, and if that had been done, I would have had to start all over again.

Mr. BUCK. The gentleman is is in error in saying that there was an attempt to chloroform the bill in the Committee on Agriculture. The question was whether we would give a hearing on the bill.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEMKE. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman has referred to me. The matter came up on two occasions. I offered the Frazier-Lemke bill as a substitute in the committee, and both times I was ruled out of order by the chairman. In fairness to the Members of the House, I want to say that it was said that there would be an opportunity for it to be considered under the discharge rule.

The other day I asked that the matter be referred to the committee immediately, for I believed we could not get it in that short time on the floor of the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, cannot the gentleman be given 15 minutes to make a speech?

Mr. BUCK. If the gentleman will further yield, I want to say that at the meeting of the Committee on Agriculture it was determined not to use it as a substitute for the bill from the Committee on Banking and Currency, but a request was made whether the committee would hear it, and the gentleman from Wisconsin desired it to be laid on the table.

Mr. LEMKE. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. I have no quarrel with the Committee on Agriculture, because 6 of the Democratic members and 5 of the Republican members signed the petition to discharge the committee. So I take my hat off to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEMKE. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is it not a fact that the gentleman from North Dakota and myself have talked over this matter and decided that we would have a better opportunity to get consideration of the bill if we could appeal to the Members of the House to sign this petition, realizing that if the committee took any action it would put the matter up to the Rules Committee, and delay action, and absolutely kill any possible action at this session of Congress?

Mr. LEMKE. Yes; and at the time the gentleman talked to me I told him that we had 15 Members pledged to go and sign and make up the few that we lacked from having 145 and we would have had enough if we had not run into wet weather. We ran into a Rainey day.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman and I are in accord on that proposition.

Mr. LEMKE. Absolutely.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 minutes more.

Mr. LEMKE. I want to say to you Members that I find no fault with any Member who signed the petition or who has taken his name off the petition. I think they are sincere and honest, and that they are not afraid to have their names made public. I object to the attempt to gag us.

I cannot agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that the press should be muzzled. I believe that the Associated Press, by turning the white light of publicity upon what takes place here on this floor, is rendering the Nation a great service. I cannot conceive how any Member can so far forget himself as to criticize the press for keeping the public informed. Especially do I wish to congratulate the Hearst press, because under its able editorial writer, Arthur Brisbane, it has for years been in the forefront advocating progressive legislation. If it were not for the press, how could the people way up there on the Panhandle—up there in the rarified air that develops such wonderful lung power—ever be able to discover when they had made a mistake on election day? No; what the gentleman from Texas needs is more publicity, not less. He did not sign the petition, therefore was not able to take his name off. Nobody who has signed it is complaining, nor anyone who took his name off. Is the gentleman afraid that the people of his district may discover that he did not sign?

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] stated the other day that the rule permitting 145 Members to discharge a committee was a foolish rule. He talked about the orderly procedure of committees. In reply I will say that I know of no discharge petition that ever was foolish enough to attempt to violate the spirit of the Declaration of Independence and the spirit of the fourteenth amendment by putting up a sign on the public House restaurant and attempting to make it a private restaurant for Members only, in order to prevent a colored gentleman, a secretary of a Member of Congress, from getting his meals there. Yet that was the work of a committee, we are told.

I have signed every petition on the Speaker's desk to discharge a committee for the reason that I have discovered, in the short time that I have been here, that important legislation—legislation that the people want—is generally chloroformed or has most of its teeth pulled in committees. I have discovered that as a rule, if any Cabinet officer or Secretary objects to a measure, the committee will chloroform it. In other words, the laws of this Nation are now largely being written by persons who are not Members of Congress, who never have been Members, and who never could or would be elected. I have signed these petitions, believing that on all important legislation the Members of this Congress have a right finally to pass upon its merits. The reason that there are so many petitions at the Speaker's desk now is because an unwarranted attempt has been made to throttle the will of this Congress, and, through them, the will of the people of this Nation.

Therefore, I respectfully ask the Members of this Congress who are interested in agriculture, and who believe that the farmer should have a new deal and not only a new shuffle, to come up here to the Speaker's desk and sign the petition. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEMKE. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Whenever the people of this country want to get away from the farms, or want to get away from their homes and away from their business connections, it is a liability, rather than an asset, and I say that then this country is on the wrong road to recovery.

Mr. LEMKE. The gentleman has signed the petition, has he not?

Mr. RICH. I signed the petition; and there is one thing I want to do, and that is to be sure that we have not got a real inflation measure here, and then I am for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield the gentleman from North Dakota 1 minute more?

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman from North Dakota mentioned something about Cabinet officers lobbying against this bill. I have heard reports that certain Cabinet officers called up Members of this House, called them out in the corridors and asked them to withdraw their names from this petition. Is that the truth? Can the gentleman answer that?

Mr. LEMKE. I have been so informed. There has been some question as to who gave the names of those who signed to the Post Office Department and to the Department of Commerce. Both departments, I am informed, had a list and called up Members that had signed and asked them to take their names off the petition. Some of these calls, I understand, came by long distance from New York.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman know the real opposition to this bill? Because they are the same opponents of the McLeod bill and of all other bills that seek to issue new money.

Mr. LEMKE. The gentleman is correct—the opposition comes from the international bankers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has again expired.

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, it is amazing how reckless and willful some of these Republican gentlemen can be in their misrepresentation of facts. The gentleman who preceded me, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE], is one of those. He opposed bringing in the rule to expedite the business of the House and now he is objecting very much because we do not bring in a rule. If the Rules Committee were to bring in rules on all of the bills pending before it, we would have about 150 bills before this House and that would make an impossible situation. I have supported all of the farm legislation and did it for many years before the gentleman was a Member of this House.

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I cannot now.

Mr. LEMKE. I was going to ask the gentleman to sign the petition.

Mr. SABATH. I have voted for all farm-relief legislation for more than 20 years, and during all of that time Congress has not done so much for the farmers as has been done within 1 year under a Democratic administration, under the leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt. The trouble with you and others is that you are trying to secure a lot of publicity to obtain credit at home, and that is the underlying reason for many of the reckless and insincere speeches and statements that are being made. Let us be honest. You know that within a year we have appropriated, to aid and refinance the farmers, two and one half billion dollars. We have made over 250,000 individual loans, have reduced the interest on farm mortgages by nearly one half, and are making farm loans to the amount of $3,000,000 a day, all of which has saved hundreds of thousands of farmers from losing their farms. So that today, as I have stated, more has been done for the farmers during the period of 1 year under the Democratic administration than was done during 12 years under 3 Republican administrations. [Applause.]

Personally, if I knew where and how the money could be obtained I would sign the gentleman's petition; but in my city, in my State, as well as in the gentleman's State, are thousands of people who are clamoring for the refinancing of the so-called "gold bonds" that were issued under a Republican administration to the extent of billions of dollars. I have the utmost sympathy for these unfortunate men who have been imposed upon and who have invested their hard-earned money in these bonds. I would like to help them. I hold in my hand a newspaper clipping stating that 20,000 people marched in my city demanding action to relieve them and to secure some legislation to bring about relief to the hundreds and thousands of old men and women, widows and orphans who invested their every dollar in these securities. I wish it could be done, and I shall do all in my power to bring about some relief for these unfortunate people who are being taken advantage of by the very people who unloaded these bonds upon them, who have organized so-called "protective bondholders' committees" to enable them to control these properties. They have organized not for the purpose of protecting the bondholders but to protect themselves and to rob the bondholders of any equity they may have left in these properties. For the purpose of protecting these bondholders I have been supporting not only resolutions to bring about investigations, but have also introduced a resolution for the punishment of all those guilty of dishonest transactions.

In addition to these demands thousands upon thousands of depositors in banks that were forced to close because of the Republican panic and conditions brought about by the Republican administration are clamoring for their money. I wish we could take care of these depositors and pay them dollar for dollar, but it cannot all be done overnight. We of the Democratic Party are doing everything humanly possible to relieve the American people. It took 12 years of Republican administration to bring wreck, ruin, and despair to America. We cannot rectify and reconstruct in 1 year that which the Republican administration took 12 years to tear down. We are making progress. I think we are doing splendidly, and I think the American people recognize and appreciate the honest efforts of President Roosevelt and his administration. If there is any doubt of that, scan the Illinois primary election returns. I feel that within a short time additional legislation will be forthcoming to give further relief and aid for the American people, including both farm and city dwellers. I am sure that such remedial legislation will be passed as speedily as possible.

Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen from the rural sections of the country, unfortunately, are under the impression that only they are entitled to exist and live; they forget that we have millions and millions of people, worthy wage earners, who have been out of employment for 2 or 3 years, who are still unable to find employment, and cannot find enough to exist on. They have no land from which to obtain a living. This administration praiseworthily has taken care of at least 4,000,000 or 5,000,000 of these unfortunate heads of families and has saved them from literal starvation.

This administration should not be unjustly and unfairly criticized by the Republicans. Let us be honest with ourselves; let us be honest with the country; let us be honest with the people whom we represent, whom we have been elected to serve. Let us not be carried away by politics.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SABATH. No; I am sorry I cannot yield, for it would not be a question intelligent enough for any man to answer.

We are making progress; and I say to the Members representing the farm section of the country that they never had a more friendly administration or a more friendly Congress than it has right now. [Applause.] We are legislating in the right direction, and relief will be forthcoming to a greater extent than ever before in the history of the country.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot be real angry with my Republican colleagues. They are in desperate circumstances; they are trying to create some issue for the forthcoming campaign, and for that reason, day in and day out, they vainly try to find something to criticize in the actions of either the Democratic House or the Democratic Administration.

A few moments ago the gentleman from Pennsylvania complained of the tremendous cost of the printing of speeches. He did not, however, say that this Democratic administration has saved in the printing bill alone over $160,000 within only the last few months. We have been saving money; we have been curtailing; we have been practicing real economy instead of lip economy, the kind rendered by the Republican Party. For years the Republicans preached economy without practicing it. As a matter of fact, during that time appropriations increased to such an extent that during the last year of the Republican administration there was a deficit of over $3,000,000,000. We cannot wonder, therefore, that these gentlemen realize that the people who are against them are trying to create new issues.

This was the effort yesterday of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN]. Having heard the evidence against Dr. Wirt given by 6 honest and honorable American citizens, 3 ladies and 3 gentlemen, he took the floor and cried that we had been attacking unfairly poor Dr. Wirt; but six honorable and honest people had given him the lie direct right to his face.

Within 5 minutes that these men and women contradicted Dr. Wirt and said that every word Dr. Wirt had said was untrue, the gentleman from Kansas takes the floor and pleads that we are persecutorily assailing and attacking poor Dr. Wirt, and calls out to the people of the States and of the country, "They have been unfair; they have also attacked Colonel Lindbergh and Eddie Rickenbacker and others."

No; the Democratic Party has not been attacking them. We recognize the services they have rendered as flyers and as soldiers; but we do maintain that these prominent names should not be used by greedy interests and the corporations which have secured contracts by collusion and fraud, contracts that have unnecessarily cost the Government from $6,000,000 to $10,000,000 annually.

I hope that in the future the Republicans will think twice before they accuse us of attacking people, and in the same breath attack honest and honorable men and women who are patriotically serving the Nation for a nominal compensation.

I had hoped that we could continue to legislate without injecting too much politics during the soul-trying days through which we have gone, but unfortunately this is not the case, as my Republican friends here on the left seemed to feel it absolutely necessary to create some political issue by making these reckless, willful, and deliberate charges which are unfounded in fact and in truth.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I cannot yield.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Is there one sentence of the gentleman's speech which is not political?

Mr. SABATH. No, my speech is not political. I am pleading for legislation in the interest of the masses instead of the classes. Whenever there is an issue between the special interest and the wage earners of America, I am always ready and willing to do my humble little bit, my share, and my part to protect and aid the masses and the wage earners.

About an hour ago the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] made an attack against the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. I feel he is right in his statements as to the abuses that existed in that Department under a Republican administration, due to the manipulation that was started early in 1921, as soon as President Harding was able to organize that bureau. They immediately started to refund millions and millions that had been properly collected by a Democratic administration.

I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I am in favor of the investigation; and I say again we will find that 95 percent of all the abuses in that Department are due to those Republicans who were placed in important key positions from 1920 to 1932. I hope the investigation will be forthcoming, because I am satisfied that many of the members of these boards, and the others responsible for these great refunds, will be discharged, dismissed, and justifiably eliminated from the public service.

An impartial investigation will prove beyond any doubt that the present Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Mr. Helvering, is conducting that office honestly and efficiently. The only possible charge that can be made against him is that he has not discharged many of the officials under him, who were planted in the Bureau before he took office by the special interests, to enable them to obtain large refunds, allowances, and adjustments that cost the Government during the 12 years of Republican administration over $3,000,000,000. These selfsame officials have been and are still responsible for nearly $2,000,000,000 remaining uncollected. I know that the present Commissioner, Mr. Helvering, will exert every effort at his command to collect these unpaid taxes, whether they are due from Japanese, English, or American corporations, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] knows whereof I am speaking.

So it is not that I do not always agree with some Republicans. When they are honest and when they try to legislate in the right direction I am with them, but, unfortunately, this is very seldom. I am with the gentleman from Pennsylvania in his efforts to investigate all abuses and corruption of the Mellon administration or any other administration where corruption existed or exists. I am proud that I have been able to bring about a few investigations such as that of the stock exchange, the Post Office air-mail contracts, and the bankruptcy and receiverships rackets—investigations that have been of benefit to the people and will result in the saving of millions of dollars to the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

PUBLIC ACQUISITION OF ELECTRIC SYSTEMS

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to bring to your attention and to urge your support of a bill I have introduced, known as H.R. 8928.

It provides for the utilization of electrical energy generated in connection with Federal projects, by authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to finance the acquisition of electrical works by municipalities and other public bodies.

This bill is in line with the President's four-corner yardstick plan, which seeks the development of the Nation's great waterways in a way to produce vast blocks of electrical energy.

The four-corner plan contemplates such a development on the Columbia River in the Northwest; the Colorado River in the Southwest; the Tennessee River in the Southeast; and the St. Lawrence River in the Northeast. This will give the Nation a balanced production of electrical energy and the advantages of an ample power load available to all sections on equal terms. At the same time it will provide a rate norm for all sections and thus make further exploitation by the Power Trust impossible.

Under existing legislation, municipalities and other public bodies may be financed by the Public Works Administration in the construction of new electric works, which in many cases are or would be competitive with private works already established. This bill provides for financing the establishment of publicly owned works by such municipalities or other public bodies through the acquisition of existing works, even in cases where all principles of economics require that if public works are to be established it should be done by acquisition and not by the construction of competitive works.

The Federal Government now owns various power generating works, some completed and some in process of construction. These include the Tennessee Valley, Boulder Dam, and Columbia River developments, and numerous other developments in connection with reclamation projects. In addition, other Federal projects involving the generation of electricity at widely scattered points in the United States are under active discussion.

The success of these projects requires that municipalities and other public bodies should be in a position to receive and distribute such Federal electricity. In many cases the economical and logical thing to do is for such public bodies to acquire existing private systems. They are unable to do so without Federal assistance in financing, because at this time it is practically impossible for municipalities and other public bodies to float bond issues to carry out projects, even though they may be of great local importance and in some instances necessary adjuncts to Federal projects.

Statutory limitations on interest rates make it legally impossible for many municipalities to offer their bonds at rates which will attract private capital. Even where such limitations do not exist, the offering of such bonds at high rates would be contrary to the public welfare in that it would tend to increase interest rates generally at a time when the policy of the administration is to reduce them.

It is understood that the Tennessee Valley Authority has already acquired, or arranged for the acquisition by it, of certain privately owned transmission and distribution systems, but has not undertaken to finance the acquisition of such projects by municipalities in the Tennessee Valley area, and it does not appear to be clear that it would have the legal right so to do.

The proposed bill would make it possible for any such municipality desiring to acquire an existing system or works to obtain a loan from the R.F.C. for that purpose whenever it had entered into a contract for electric energy from the Tennessee Valley project, and would extend the same privilege to municipalities wherever located, which might be in areas which can be served with electricity from Federal works.

Notwithstanding the fact noted above, that any such acquisition must necessarily create employment, the bill does not authorize any grants such as are made in connection with P.W.A. financing, but contemplates full repayment within 20 years.

In view of the fact that the funds loaned by the R.F.C. are acquired by borrowing and that the rate of interest paid by it for money is less than the rate of interest it charges for loans, such loans, if made in connection with sound projects, will not cost the Government anything, but, on the contrary, will return a profit to it. In effect, such loans are a pledge of the credit of the United States and do not involve the advancing of any money raised by any form of taxation.

The soundness and security of the contemplated loans are doubly assured by the fact that they can be made only with the approval of the R.F.C. and the approval of the department, agency, or instrumentality in charge of the Federal project from which the electric energy is to be obtained.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK].

Mr. BECK. Mr. Chairman, I have asked time in order that I could pay a modest but sincere tribute to the eloquent and noble speech that was made in this House by our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. SHANNON, on the occasion of Jefferson's Birthday. The highest praise that I can pay to his speech is that it was worthy of a great subject, and I am sure that in his mind, as in mine, when I read it—for, unfortunately, I was out of the city and was not privileged to hear it—there must have been a thought that it was an illustration of the proverbial ingratitude of republics that here in Washington, outside of the chamber of horrors in the Capitol, there is no adequate memorial to express the undying gratitude that all generations of Americans should have for this great leader of the American people, who in his very rare combination of practical statecraft as a leader of the masses and a noble idealism, was one of the most remarkable statesmen in the annals of the world.

I am not one of those who believe that Thomas Jefferson originated democracy, because I prefer to think that democracy originated in the cradle at Bethlehem, where the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man began with the breath of the Man of Nazareth. [Applause.] But I do say that Jefferson rendered the same role to modern democracy—and by that I mean no political party, but democracy in its broadest and most catholic sense—that Rostand in his play, Chanticleer, gave to his hero in stating that while Chanticleer did not cause the sun to rise, he nevertheless, with his clarion call, was among the first of men to greet the reddening morn of democracy in our age. [Applause.]

It was Jefferson of all men who, with his great and unbroken faith in the people and in his desire for the common welfare, led the modern forces of our age on the triumphant march of democracy. [Applause.]

When this House has the rare privilege of a fine speech on a noble subject, such as that of the gentleman from Missouri, adequate recognition should be given to this eloquent tribute to one of the greatest men in American history.

I pass to a matter that to my mind is a portentous reality, and that is that there is not only no adequate memorial to Jefferson in the Capital of the Nation or, indeed, anywhere outside of his own State of Virginia, but Jefferson is today the "forgotten man" in the philosophy of American politics. If there be any party today that truly follows the doctrines of Thomas Jefferson, I have yet to know it. In fact, the gentleman from Missouri recognized that so far as his party and his associates were concerned the principles of Jefferson were "more honored in the breach than in the observance." They could not be honored in the breach, because the future destiny of this Republic must depend to a very large extent on the extent to which we can return to the principles of Jefferson. Of such return there is at present no evidence.

Perhaps the noblest interpretation of an ideal form of government was that in his first inaugural when he defined as the ideal of America "a wise and frugal Government, which shall restrain men from injuring one another, shall leave them otherwise free to regulate their own pursuits, and shall not take from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned."

Apart from that great ideal of government which was Jefferson's and of which he gave a very noble example, not merely in his two administrations but in the succeeding ones that he dominated from the summit of Monticello, I think we must all recognize that in the present tendency toward centralization of power, not merely in the Federal Government but in one man, we have so far departed from the principles of Jefferson that they are virtually nonexistent for any practical purpose.

It is a curious fact, as explaining why there is no adequate memorial, that the party strife between Jefferson and Hamilton, in which each of them was partly right and each partly wrong, is the only conflict of party politics whose animosities have survived the deaths of the great protagonists. You and I and others care nothing about the great quarrel between the senatorial triumvirate of Webster, Clay, Calhoun, and Andrew Jackson. It excites no feelings in our breasts. We honor all four alike, but although the doctrines of Jefferson have "faded like streaks of morning cloud into the infinite azure of the past", the fact is that to this day the animosities created between Hamilton and Jefferson so far survive that men on the Democratic side of this aisle are not always fair to Hamilton, and I am sure that we of the Republican Party do not always justly recognize the transcendent merits of Thomas Jefferson in the foundation of this Nation.

The fact of the matter is—and I hope my time will not expire, because I shall address myself to what I believe is a practical consideration, and not a mere dissertation upon history, prompted by the eloquent tribute of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON]—I say the fact of the matter is, today, that while in the first 60 years of the nineteenth century Jefferson was triumphant and Hamilton was the defeated man in the great intellectual duel, yet today the doctrines of Hamilton are triumphant even in the councils of the party that calls itself the Jeffersonian Democracy; because no one, I think, can seriously question that this administration, above every other administration, is realizing beyond any dream of Alexander Hamilton his ideas as to the nature of our Government and what its desired form should be. His dream was the absorption of the States in the Federal Government. That dream has come to pass to an alarming extent.

To illustrate this, I want to read two quotations from Alexander Hamilton's one great speech in the Constitutional Convention. His part in drafting the Constitution has been very much exaggerated. He rendered great service in the origin of the convention and the ratification of the Constitution. But in the convention of 1787, after he had made a great speech, so little attention was given to it by the members of the convention that he went back to New York to practice law, and thereafter rarely appeared in the convention until its last days. In this speech of June 18 he said of the States:

> If they (the States) were extinguished, I am persuaded that great economy might be obtained by substituting a general government. I do not mean to shock the public opinion by proposing such a measure, but, on the other hand, I see no other necessity for declining it.

In other words, he would have abolished all the States if he could have had his way and if public opinion had permitted, and when this statement was criticized on a later day, he amplified his thought. He said:

> By an abolition of the States I meant that no boundary could be drawn between the National and State legislatures and that the former must therefore have indefinite authority. If it were limited at all, the rivalship of the States would gradually subvert it. As States I think they ought to be abolished, but I admit the necessity of leaving in them subordinate jurisdictions.

Meaning purely police administration in local affairs. That dream of Hamilton has now been realized. In the vital matter of trade and industry, your form of government and the Constitution, which is its organic law, are more concerned with trade and industry than with any other subject. The interference of the Federal Government in the intimate personal life of the individual may be slight, but its interference in trade relations and the commercial intercourse is now very great, and today, under the National Recovery Act, the line of demarcation prescribed by the Constitution between Federal authority over interstate commerce and foreign commerce on the one hand and the authority of the State upon commerce and trade that is wholly within its borders, is nonexistent. It has been obliterated in the last 12 months, so that for purposes of trade and commerce we have this startling and portentous fact that we are today, in the matter of trade and industry, not a federation of States, but a unitary socialistic State, and no one can successfully challenge the statement.

You may say it is only temporary and produced by considerations of a great emergency, but as to that, it is enough to paraphrase what Madame Roland said on the scaffold in respect to liberty: "Emergency, Emergency, how many crimes against the constitution have been committed in thy name." [Applause.]

To illustrate the depths to which the so-called "brain trust", or the inner advisers of the President, if the brain trust be mythical, can go and have gone in abolishing the States, is illustrated by a model law that the N.R.A. recently sent to the various States to eliminate any possibility of contest of the constitutionality of the N.R.A. in respect of purely domestic commerce.

In other words, after four Federal courts in this country had decided that the N.R.A., in respect of trade or commerce wholly within a State, was unconstitutional, thereupon the disciples of Prof. Felix Frankfurter determined to formulate a bill whereby the States would voluntarily eliminate themselves by surrendering their police powers in the matter of trade and commerce and thus confirm the existing usurpation of power over domestic trade by the Federal Government. I want to read to you, to prove that this is so, the part of this model law that was sent out by the Federal Government through the N.R.A. to the legislatures of the States and, presumably, to the governors thereof, with the request that they speedily pass the law so that the States in respect of the trade and commerce that is wholly within their borders should be nonexistent.

Section 2 of this proposed law reads as follows, and I do beg of all of you to listen to it, because it attracted very little attention.

Ten years ago, certainly a generation ago, what I shall read would have caused an upheaval in this country that would have shaken our social order to its foundations. This is the section which they want the States to pass:

> SEC. 2. To effectuate the policy of this act—

That is, the Federal National Recovery Act—> the governor—

That is, of the States—

> is hereby authorized to consent to the President of the United States utilizing State and local officers and employees in effectuating the policies of the National Industrial Recovery Act in accordance with the provisions of section 2 (a) of that act.

In other words, the legislatures of the States are asked to tell their governors to crawl to the feet of Federal power and say to the President, "All the agencies of the State from myself, the Governor, down to the humblest constable are now subject to your order and dictation in policing a law which, in respect to domestic trade, can have no justification whatever in the Constitution."

If the States of this Union pass any such law—and some of them may have already done so—then the States, the once proud, self-conscious sovereign States, would today be little more than police provinces, because they would have turned over all the police authority of the State to the President, so that the President could say to a constable in Tampa, Fla., "Arrest that pants presser, who has dared to press pants and deliver them around the corner to a local customer" at less than the code price, and this on the ground that he is interfering with the national recovery platform.

Think, gentlemen—and I recur to my original theme—what Thomas Jefferson would have said if he had been confronted with such a proposition—he, who believed that the Union could not be indissoluble unless the States were indestructible. [Applause.] What would Jefferson think of a proposition from the Federal Government that the States should turn over all their police agencies to the Federal Government and be subjected to the command of the President as to what they should do?

What would Jefferson have thought of a theory of the "brain trust" that a man who simply pressed a pair of pantaloons and delivered them around the corner could be controlled in respect to the price that he was to charge for his own labor?

Jefferson inveighed against that in his first inaugural, when he said:

> You shall not take from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned.

If the humble pants presser of Tampa, Fla., wants to press pants for a 50-cent fee instead of a 75-cent fee, it is, after all, the sweat of his own brow or the brawn of his own good right arm that created the product. Why should a Government a thousand miles distant tell him what he should charge for his labor? If he cannot sell his labor except as permitted by the Federal Government, is he truly a free man? Would Jefferson have so characterized him?

Until the last 12 months, until this emergency had confused our ideas of right and wrong, of liberty and bondage, of constitutionality and unconstitutionality, it would have been regarded as an abhorrent proposition that the Federal Government should dictate to a man what he should charge for his labor. Yet that is the whole principle of the Recovery Act—to limit the power of a manufacturer to expand his product, to limit the hours that either he can employ or that employees can be employed, to limit the price of the product, to segregate him into groups in which all his individuality is lost; in other words, to destroy the very soul of the individual. Thomas Jefferson worshipped above everything else the liberty of the human soul. It was Jefferson who said:

> I will wage eternal warfare against any form of tyranny over the mind of man.

[Applause.]

Jefferson made many mistakes, he did things that were regrettable, as which of us has not? But his distinguishing merit, the one thing that he stands for above everything else, was his belief in the liberty of the individual and his sacred right to live his own life in his own way, free from any except the most necessary restraint of the Government. It was that thought he put into the glorious preamble of the Declaration of Independence, and today our Government, not through the fault of any one party—it is perhaps the extreme pressure of the times—is a living negation of everything that Thomas Jefferson taught.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECK. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I should like to ask the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania to elaborate a little more upon the question of the legal effect of the act of a State legislature in putting at the disposal of the President, under the provisions of the Industrial Recovery Act, the police powers of the State—as to whether or not it amounts to the same thing as a ratification of an amendment to the Constitution in the way of surrender of power?

Mr. BECK. I would reply to that by saying that it would depend in each case upon the constitution of the State. I doubt whether there is any constitution of any State that would authorize its legislature to say to the Governor, "You turn over our police authorities to the President", and therefore any act of such legislature would violate the power vested by the people of that State in the legislature.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECK. Yes.

Mr. KELLER. Is the gentleman willing to tell us specifically exactly what he would have done if the conditions had been reversed and the Republican Party had come into power under the same conditions the Democratic Party came into power?

Mr. BECK. My friend passes now to an economic phase of the matter. I was discussing the broad question of rights in the light of Jefferson's philosophy. Nevertheless, I shall endeavor to answer to the best of my ability. I say, in the first place, that in the summer before the Presidential election, recovery was already in progress.

It was halted by the Presidential election, and, naturally, in the interregnum between the election and the 4th of March there was a retardation of prosperity. After that, if this Government of ours had only allowed the people to recuperate by natural methods—I do not mean now the questions of relief; of course, they were obviously necessary, but if the Government had refrained from interference with trade and industry and the tampering with the currency and the violation of the solemn pledge of this country in the matter of how its obligations should be paid, if the administration had only desisted from those measures and left it to the people, there was enough resilience in the American people to have recovered from the emergency; and we would today be much further on the way to complete recovery than we now are. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLER. In other words, the gentleman would have done nothing?

Mr. BECK. Oh, no; I have not said that.

Mr. KELLER. I wish the gentleman would be specific in his statement on the subject.

Mr. BECK. I have just said what I would do.

Mr. KELLER. What would the gentleman really have done?

Mr. BECK. Well, I have told the gentleman from Illinois, but I am afraid he did not comprehend. I have already stated to the gentleman from Illinois that to the extent that relief measures were necessary either to the individual or to the States they are a credit to this administration and are helpful to the country.

I would not have interfered by regimenting the American people in their industrial activities by laws restricting individual initiative. In that respect the American, if I may be pardoned a classical quotation, is like Ajax as depicted in the Homeric epic when Ajax was enveloped with unnatural clouds and darkness in his fight with Hector. He said:

> Dispel this cloud, the light of Heaven restore;
> Give me to see, and Ajax asks no more.

Had the American people not been enveloped in the fogs, mists, and clouds of un-Jeffersonian and undemocratic interferences with individual liberty, he would have been farther along today on the road to recovery than he is. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLER. How much longer would the gentleman have waited before he gave relief?

Mr. BECK. I would have given relief immediately.

Mr. KELLER. To what would the gentleman have given relief—agriculture?

Mr. BECK. I cannot, with limited time, run the whole gamut of social measures; I have not the time.

I now yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The question I wanted to ask has been partially answered. It was this: The doctrines and policy followed by the Republican Party were purely Jeffersonian doctrines and policy up to 1932, were they?

Mr. BECK. No; I did not say they were.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Or approximately so?

Mr. BECK. I said that by comparison with the policies and acts of the Democratic Party they were Jeffersonian. [Laughter.]

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes. What would Jefferson's reaction have been had he been alive in 1932 when 15,000,000 people had the right both collectively and individually to starve to death without governmental interference?

Mr. BECK. I have already answered that.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECK. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman referred to the fact that he did not know of the constitution of a single State that granted to the legislature the power and the right to ratify this proposed measure. As I understand it, the Constitution of the United States is a grant of power; and the constitutions of the States are restrictions or limitations of power.

Mr. BECK. Oh, no.

Mr. PATMAN. And if the State constitution does not deny the legislature the right to pass such a law, the legislature would be within its rights to pass the law. Is that right?

Mr. BECK. I am not familiar with the constitutions of all the States. I imagine that every State constitution which follows the forms of the Federal Constitution as well as of antecedent State constitutions, defines the powers of the legislature, and the legislature has no power except as the sovereign people have given them power through the State constitution.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman means the grant of power?

Mr. BECK. Yes. The legislature has only the powers granted by the State constitution. Unless, therefore, the State constitution gives the State legislature the right to bargain away the police powers of the State, the legislature would have no such right.

Mr. PATMAN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that each State constitution is a grant of power to the respective legislature and that the legislature cannot do anything more than what the State constitution provides it may do?

Mr. BECK. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. I cannot agree with the gentleman.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I do not believe the gentleman means quite that.

Mr. BECK. I do not know whether we understand each other. The people, of course, are sovereign under our theory of government. They create a constitution which provides exactly what the legislature shall do. Until the people have declared otherwise in their capacity as the people, the legislature cannot do more than the constitution has authorized them to do. If it authorizes them to pass any kind of an act, then a different question arises.

Mr. PATMAN. In other words, the gentleman says that the constitution of a State is a grant of power to the legislature of that State?

Mr. BECK. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. And that the legislature cannot exceed the powers granted by the constitution?

Mr. BECK. That is my judgment.

Mr. PATMAN. I am sorry I cannot agree with the gentleman. I have the utmost confidence in and respect for the gentleman's judgment, but I cannot agree with him. I think that a State constitution contains limitations on the power of the legislature, but that the legislature can do anything that the constitution does not prohibit.

Mr. BECK. I have so much respect in turn for the gentleman from Texas that he may refer to a constitution in Texas which grants all legislative powers to the legislature. If that is so, then he is right as to Texas. I do not pretend to know what the constitutions of all the States are.

Mr. PATMAN. I believe that is the broad principle; the Constitution of the United States contains a grant of powers to Congress, but a State constitution contains limitations of powers and the legislature can pass any law that is not prohibited by the State constitution, whereas Congress can pass only such laws as are permitted by the United States Constitution.

(Mr. BECK asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, after listening to the learned and able address of my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania, who has just preceded me and paid such fine tribute to the immortal Jefferson, I hesitate to speak to you on this occasion, and especially since I must speak entirely without notes and wholly extemporaneously.

I am asking the privilege of speaking to the House this afternoon for the purpose of discussing one phase of taxation, and I hope I may be pardoned for some historical references when I say that it is universally known and a historic fact that taxation, when it reaches the point of oppressiveness, has always been resisted by the people. I am going to talk about the particular feature of taxation relating to one product in this country which is produced by the farmers. The product I refer to is tobacco, a luxury in the use of which I do not indulge in any form.

As far back as the 16th day of December 1773 a few of our ancestors who did not believe very much in oppressive taxation called a little tea party down in the harbor of Boston and threw the King's tea overboard; and from that time to this people have been objecting to oppressive taxation. Even that incident itself foretold of a bloody revolution against obnoxious taxing laws and gave birth to a nation. If there is anybody in the whole of the United States that has a right to object to the rate of taxation and the amount of taxes paid by any particular industry, it is the producers of tobacco.

I realize that there are many Members of this House who are not familiar with the amount of taxes actually paid by tobacco producers, unless it be those Members who live in tobacco-producing States like my own State, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia, or unless they be members of the Committee on Ways and Means, that deals with the subject of taxation and has made a special study of the matter; and I myself make no claim to any special knowledge on the subject, although I am deeply concerned for the tobacco growers of my State.

Under the law as it exists today, cigarettes are taxed $3 per thousand cigarettes. Under the state of production of tobacco in Kentucky, the State I live in, 3 pounds of tobacco produce 1,000 cigarettes; so that, as a matter of fact, tobacco bears a tax of $1 per pound on the product as it is produced. In addition to that there is a processor's tax under the new regime of taxation of 4 cents per pound, making $1.04 for each pound of tobacco produced on the farm. Down in Kentucky in the White Tobacco Belt, known as the "burley district", the tobacco farmers produce as an average about 1,000 pounds of tobacco per acre. At this rate of taxation the 1,000 pounds of tobacco would pay $1,040 per acre in taxes. In addition to that, if you take a tobacco farmer who produces 1 acre of tobacco, he produces a product that yields to the Treasury of the United States $1,040. If he produces 10 acres of tobacco, he produces a product that yields to the Treasury $10,400. Let us see what the small farmer that has as much as 50 acres pays. He produces to the Government of the United States $52,000 each year. That is an enormous tax for one farmer to produce for the Government, and yet we are planning, as I understand it now, through the means or medium of a subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee, to discover new sources of taxation and new means of producing revenue. I think the subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee considering that matter now has about made up their minds to recommend to the committee and to the House through the committee that instead of increasing the taxes on a great many of our products that are now excessively taxed they are going to ask for a reduction of taxes. This is the reason I am speaking on the question of taxation of tobacco.

I think the tobacco farmers of all the States that produce tobacco are paying more than their just share of the taxes of the country. Yet, when you realize that tobacco will produce that much revenue, at the same time the processors of tobacco—and I have reference to the four big tobacco manufacturing companies, including the American Tobacco Co. and the three others I could name—make more profit in 1 year in the form of dividends out of the tobacco that they manufacture off the farmer than the amount of taxes that the farmer pays and the amount of money that the farmer receives for the tobacco that he markets. So there is something wrong between the tobacco plant and the use of it by the man who chews or smokes it, and I think the attention of Congress ought to be directed to this recommendation along with the other recommendations that the committee may be able to make, and I for one want to be sure that in the writing of future tax laws some provision must be made whereby any savings that may be accomplished in the rates or amounts of taxes on tobacco must go to the tobacco farmer and not to the Tobacco Trust.

I call attention here to the testimony of some of the people who testified before the Ways and Means Committee in hearings during the present Congress on the revision of the tax bill. One of the witnesses who testified here said that the consumption of plug and twist chewing tobacco had decreased solely because of the excessive amount of taxes required to be paid. I have always taken the position, like I did when I offered an amendment here to reduce the excise tax on liquor from $2 to $1 per gallon, that excessive taxes have a tendency to drive the product off the market and it in fact produces less revenue with a high tax than it would with a reasonable tax. This witness, H. P. Taylor, who represented the Independent Tobacco Manufacturers, made this statement before the Ways and Means Committee:

> The consumption of plug and twist chewing tobacco when there was a low tax rate in 1917, as shown by Government records, was plug 179,000,000 pounds and twist 15,000,000 pounds, while with the present high tax rate of 18 cents per pound the consumption of plug has decreased to 76,000,000 pounds and twist chewing tobacco to 6,000,000 in 1931, which are the last figures available from the Internal Revenue Bureau, and our records show a further decline in the years 1932 to 1933.

So that, as a matter of fact, the revenue was decreased at least 66⅔ percent by reason of the exorbitant tax of 18 cents per pound placed on chewing tobacco. That is in addition to the tax that the cigarette tobacco produces. This shows that exorbitant rates of taxes always have and always will retard production and at the same time decrease rather than increase the amount of revenue to the Treasury, as well as curtail by from 50 to 60 percent the farmers' income from his crop. It is detrimental to both the farmer and the Government.

Of course, I realize we are doing many things in this Congress that, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] said a while ago, might not have been regarded as at all safe 10 years ago or even at the beginning of the present generation; but it is my judgment that when a crop of any kind produced by a farmer does yield or must yield a revenue amounting in 1 year to three or four times the value of the soil in which it is produced, it is excessive taxation; and, with this condition, I would not be surprised if there were not some relief for the burdened Kentucky tobacco growers through the Congress of the United States by means of a modification of the present revenue statutes, we may get back to the days of the Boston Tea Party or at least back as far as the days of the night riders of some 10 or 15 years ago. My plan would be to redraft our tax laws so as to ride the American Tobacco Trust out of the picture and aid the producers. Cut the graft from between the source of production and the market place.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to my colleague from Kentucky.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. In view of the fact that in the year 1932, when the companies made the biggest net profit in the history of the tobacco industry and paid in that same year the smallest amount to the farmers of the country, and in view of that record there in which Mr. Parker, the counsel for the Big Four, stated that they paid the farmer what they had to pay him for his crop, does the gentleman believe they would pass one penny of a reduction on to the farmer unless we made them do it by law?

Mr. MAY. That is a very correct question to be asked and I am glad to answer it by saying that in my judgment unless the law carried a penalty and a requirement that it be carried back to the farmer, the farmer would not profit one cent by a 50-percent reduction in the amount of revenue paid by the tobacco companies.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to my good friend from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Three or four years ago, as I understand, there was a tax refund of $75,000,000 to one of the members of the Tobacco Trust. Did they distribute any of that money among the tobacco farmers?

Mr. MAY. They did not distribute it to any of the tobacco farmers—and I want it understood that I am not advocating any reduction of taxes as far as the processors are concerned—but I am advocating some kind of a measure that will get back to the soil where the tobacco is produced and relieve the tobacco farmers; and if they do not present that kind of bill, I shall not vote for it.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield further at this point?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Does not the gentleman believe this House could write legislation which would require that a certain percentage of revenue derived from farm products must be returned to the producer of that product and that such legislation could be administered with the present set-up in the A.A.A., and instead of giving these companies a flat reduction in tax, take such flat reduction in tax and distribute it among the growers of the product?

Mr. MAY. I think while the A.A.A. is regimenting every kind of industry in connection with agriculture, it ought to be one of their first efforts to adopt some method or adopt some code or issue some order, even though it violates all the creeds of Jefferson from the Declaration of Independence down to the present time, by which the strong hold and the deadly grasp of the American Tobacco Co. can be released from the throats of the tobacco growers of the United States.

There is one bill pending in the House that ought to be considered by the proper committee and reported to the House and acted upon. I think the bill was introduced by one of my colleagues from Kentucky, Mr. SPENCE. The bill provides that the Department of Agriculture or the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, with the funds made available under the various acts for relief that we have enacted here, shall buy up from the farmers the cheap grades of tobacco and hold them and allow the farmer to get the benefit of the higher prices on the better products; and after this is done and the production of tobacco regulated in this way, put the cheaper grade on the market and let it be disposed of at what would then be a profit to the farmer. The prudent farmer, who produces several grades of livestock, will, when the market is bad, put only the high grades on the market because he knows that it would mean disaster to undertake to market the inferior grades when the market demand is low. The same rule would apply to tobacco, corn, or any other product that sells in grades, which I, by my own experience, have found to be true in the production and marketing of coal.

You know, when we grade our coal and screen it and clean it and separate it into three or four grades, ranging from nut and slack up to egg and lump and block, we always get a premium price for the high grade, but the quantity of production of the low grades is so great that when we get the low price on that it takes all the profit out of the premium product.

This is just what the American Tobacco Trust is doing to the Kentucky, Virginia, Tennessee, North Carolina, and South Carolina tobacco producer, by ranging practically three fourths of their crop to the lower grades and paying the low-grade prices for it, and then, when they put it into the manufactured product, boost the price and get the profit out of it while the farmer loses. I say there must be something done to relieve the tobacco grower.

Mr. BOLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BOLAND. The gentleman's reference is to soft coal and not to anthracite coal?

Mr. MAY. Yes; I know very little about anthracite coal, except I know it is mined and sold at about four or five times as much per ton as soft coal, and that it is probably confined to only four or five counties in the State of Pennsylvania, as I understand it, with the exception of a little pocket of it in Virginia.

Mr. BOLAND. Of course, the gentleman will admit that anthracite coal should be sold at a premium?

Mr. MAY. I will admit that anthracite coal is a far superior product to soft coal, as far as cleanliness is concerned, and as a fuel.

Mr. Chairman, I voted for the Bankhead cotton control bill with much reluctance upon two grounds: First, it appeared in the debates on the bill that practically all the farmers of the Cotton Belt were for it and their fine delegations of Representatives from the cotton States were practically unanimous for it, and my high esteem and friendship for them was a compelling influence. In the second place, while I was opposed to the principle of the bill and thought it too much of a departure from the fundamentals of our Government and too drastic in its provisions, yet I voted for it upon the further idea that if it proves to be as bad and as vicious as I thought it would be, I would at least have the consolation of knowing my friends from the South would try it out before it gets to my constituents, who do not produce cotton. Now I am told there is pending a bill of like character to be applied to the tobacco crop, and I reserve my rights in voting on such a measure until more thought and consideration. The Kentucky tobacco growers, blessed by the richest and most productive soil and the most beautiful farms upon the face of the earth, with their high order of intelligence, their well-known reputation for industry and thrift, need no regulation of their farming industry by the Federal Government; but they do ask, and they are entitled to, the enactment of just laws for their protection against the greedy and avaricious profiteers that conspire among themselves annually to exploit the fruits of their toil. We should call in council the statesmanship of this Congress and push to speedy enactment some measure for their protection.

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOLAND].

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, I tried at the time the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] was on the floor, asking for an investigation of the Internal Revenue Department, to ask him one question in regard to the income taxes that were refunded under the Mellon administration as Secretary of the Treasury. At that time, the Members of the House will recall, the great Secretary we had was responsible for allowing $4,000,000,000 to be returned as overpaid income taxes, $3,000,000,000 of which was returned to the great State of Pennsylvania, which I have the honor to represent in part.

In other words, if there is to be an investigation of the Revenue Department, I sincerely hope and trust that they will investigate Mr. Mellon's reign as Secretary of the Treasury and why the $4,000,000,000 was returned. But I did not take the floor for the purpose of talking about the Internal Revenue Department.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLAND. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman realizes that there was an investigation going on at one time, and if it had not been that Mr. Mellon fled under fire there would have been a complete investigation.

Mr. BOLAND. I believe that is right. I wanted to ask my colleague [Mr. MCFADDEN] if the investigation would go back that far.

I am here to speak a few words in behalf of the really forgotten man. I refer to the railroad employee who has lost his job through no fault of his own, but through the unfair competition that is existing, that has existed, and has become a terrible menace to this country. The time is coming when Congress must take cognizance of that fact and eliminate the menace, which is a growing menace to our country and the traveling public.

I refer to those great big trailers and trucks on the highways which are monopolizing the highways to such an extent that it will be imperative for Congress to do something about it.

In the Seventy-second Congress I presented a bill and had a hearing on it, but action was delayed on it. I introduced a bill in this Congress—House Resolution 13—and went before the Ways and Means Committee, and in their judgment, because it proposed to levy a tax on busses traveling intrastate, they said they had no jurisdiction over the bill and that it should go to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

I went before the legislative counsel to get their views on that point, and they said they could not find out how a bill could be written that would raise revenue and have the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have jurisdiction.

So the situation is that the Ways and Means Committee will not take it, because it should go to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce will not take it because it raises revenue. Therefore, the only solution is a petition to take the bill from the committee. The committee is not antagonistic to my so doing.

There is only one possibly way that you can eliminate this menace, and that is to provide a tax on interstate busses and trucks—not busses and trucks that operate within the States. I am in hearty sympathy with truck and bus owners operating within the State and will at all times give my best efforts in their behalf. I fully realize their importance to all communities and their necessity, and will at all times protect them to the best of my ability. My bill does not apply to those. I will try to convince this honorable body that it should put a tax on busses and trucks operating in interstate commerce.

I have no connection with railroads whatsoever, am not interested in the management of their systems or in any other capacity, but I am vitally interested in the reduction of railroad employees who have lost their positions caused by a reduction of business due to the operation of these busses and trucks upon our highways, thereby making unfair competition in this line.

The original purpose of our highways was to take the public out of the mud and give decent roads to the traveling public. At the rate the trucks and trailers are operating we might just as well admit that there will soon be no room for the traveling public.

Another menace to the public is that of dangerous grade crossings. In 1930 the railroads spent $30,000,000 in eliminating grade crossings, still the growing construction of highways is causing more grade crossings than are being eliminated, and these same busses and trucks are receiving the benefit of this yearly expenditure without contributing 1 cent cost to themselves. In many parts of the country, particularly those of sparse population, the taxes received from railroads constitute the largest contribution toward the maintenance of schools, governmental, and civic activities, which this growing menace to both the public and employees of railroads is allowed to go unrestrained and unregulated and untaxed proportionately. Effective legislation must be placed upon the statutes to regulate this monopolizing of our highways. This bill I have introduced and for which a petition is on the Speaker's desk to secure signatures so that it can be acted upon on the floor, will accomplish the purpose intended, namely, stop these large freight-carrying trucks crossing the country. It will stop them from being responsible for railroaders losing their jobs. It will stop them from taking the necessities of life from the families of these men who depend entirely upon this class of employment for a livelihood. It will allow the railroads to carry this freight that will in turn put these employees back to work.

It will give the highways back to the traveling public without the fear such as now exists—unwarranted accidents, and in many cases, great loss of life. It will create more sales for automobiles because traveling on the highways will be less dangerous if these large trucks are eliminated from them.

The Government will receive a substantial revenue which is badly needed, and the great fear that now prevails—traveling on our highways, especially at night, will cease.

In the name of those unemployed railroad employees, I ask the Members of Congress to sign the petition on the Speaker's desk so that it can be presented to the House for action. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BOLAND. I am very sorry that I cannot answer the gentleman. I should like to answer any question relative to this matter, but time will not permit.

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Chairman, after listening to the many illuminating addresses delivered by Members here today, explaining the principle of innate recovery, I should be rejoicing in the spirit of optimism if it were not for the fact that we have had this same positive assurance from year to year since the beginning of this panic. While I am anxious and want to be optimistic, I am not accepting the panacea of faith and confidence [applause] to bring a restoration of the buying and consuming power of the people. I am not accepting the meaningless claim of a "better feeling" among the people [applause], nor that prosperity is "just around the corner." [Applause.] I believe that prosperity will come back sometime, now or in the far distant, hazy future [applause]—come back, just as health may come back to the sick man without or in spite of the doctor. I believe in the innate power of the people collectively to recover from this paralysis of industry just as the body to recover from disease.

THE PROBLEM OF THE PANIC

But this is not our problem here today to wait on nature. Our problem is to remedy the economic disorder and to bring prosperity back with certainty, promptly, and without hesitation or delay. The people have already discharged one board of physicians for failure to diagnose and remedy the panic, and they will be just as ready and impatient to dismiss another school of economic doctors, if they fail or allow the country to suffer on in the throes of panic and depression.

This paralysis of industry did not come to all parts of our industrial system at one time like the fall of the wonderful one-horse shay. The panic came first to the one basic industry upon which all other trades and callings are dependent, and from that one basic industry reached back to other industrial callings until the economic depression had paralyzed every part and was full and complete.

CRITICS MUST EXPLAIN REMEDY

I have no patience with critics of the industrial plans proposed by others unless they are ready and can explain their own system of recovery, can point out in detail every step necessary and required, and can show the relationship of cause and effect. I believe that prosperity must first come back to agriculture before prosperity can come back to any other branch of industry. And it is my purpose in these remarks to give my reasons for this position, and I propose to go into detail in showing the cause and in making my explanation. In this I am being more and more assured from the experiences, events, and developments of the times. Prosperity must first come back to the farmers.

OUR SPECIALIZED SYSTEM OF INDUSTRY

A proper analysis for consideration of this panic or depression requires a knowledge and understanding of our specialized industrial system, of its different parts and functions, a knowledge of its dependent trades, occupations, and callings, and the basis and foundation upon which the system as a whole is based and made to rest. It must be realized and understood that our specialized system of industry is a growth and development of farming and agriculture, is built upon and around farming and agriculture, is first dependent upon farming and agriculture, and without farming and agriculture, the parent of our industrial system, no other trade, business, or calling could survive or exist for a single day.

LIKE THE GROWTH OF A TREE

Our specialized system of industry may be likened unto or compared with the growth or development of a tree, the roots, body, or trunk of which correspond to farming and agriculture, and the branches, twigs, and leaves representing the different trades and callings which have grown up and clustered around or thrown out from the body of the tree, the roots, body, branches, twigs, and leaves—all forming one complete whole. All the different parts of the tree are dependent upon the roots, taking water and nourishment from the ground to be carried by the plant-life currents going upward through the body to replenish and carry plant food for the growth and development of its parts. The different trades and callings of industry, the different professions and occupations of our specialized industrial system can no more thrive and exist without farming and agriculture than the branches, twigs, and leaves of the tree can grow and survive independently and separately without and from the roots, body, and trunk of the tree.

DIFFERENCE IN FARM AND INDUSTRIAL PRICES

If a tree is suffering impairment in growth or is failing, dwarfed, or dying from drought and want of water, neither the tree nor the perishing twigs and leaves themselves can be revived, nourished, or saved by sprinkling the falling branches and leaves for the water to be carried downward through the tree. The prompt, direct, and only way to replenish and save the tree, its branches, leaves, and twigs, is to restore water to the roots of the tree. The water thus restored to the roots will be carried upward by the vital life currents of the tree through the trunk to restore the branches, leaves, and twigs, and every dependent part of the tree. It is folly and equally impossible to restore prosperity to industry by stimulating factory production, or starting industrial employment, or any other dependent part of industry which has grown up and around agriculture, without first restoring farming and agriculture.

Any evil impairing the roots of a tree or causing a failure of plant food in the soil at the roots of a tree will be reflected and shown in the branches and leaves dependent and suffering from the failure at the roots. Restoration of the failing, dying tree must come up from the roots to restore the branches, twigs, and leaves. And any evil impairing farming and agriculture, any abuse to burden the farmer, and agriculture, taking away farm earnings and income, farm buying and consuming power, will be reflected in the impairment and the failure or destruction in every other dependent trade and calling, because all business and industry are dependent upon farming and agriculture. The restoration of industrial prosperity must first come up from farming and agriculture, from a return of farm earnings and income and a restoration of the farm buying and consuming power.

THE DEPRESSION FIRST CAME TO THE FARMERS

There is a difference in controlling and maintaining prices of industrial and manufactured commodities and the value of farm and agricultural products. Prices and values of manufactured products are fixed, adjusted, and maintained arbitrarily by the determination of producers or by agreement among the manufacturers, and are thereby controlled and maintained at will. But by reason of the number of independent farmers, no such determination by agreement is possible, and prices of farm products and commodities are left to be fixed and determined by the volume and supply of money in circulation, controlling the general commodity price level, under which farm prices rise and fall as the money in circulation is increased and decreased. If the volume and supply of money are increased, farm prices will rise with the increased volume of money. If the volume and supply of money are decreased, farm prices will fall with the decreased supply of money. If the volume of money is reduced one half, prices of farm products will fall one half If the volume and supply of money are doubled, farm prices will rise and be doubled, and are at all times subject to control by the volume and supply of money, all other elements and conditions being equal.

Manufacturers are thereby able to control and maintain prices regardless and independent of the money supply and the price movements of farm products, and under which farm buying power has been reduced by both falling farm prices and rising prices for farm supplies and equipment. It is for these reasons that the withdrawal of money from circulation brought a fall of farm prices while manufactured values and prices were maintained and that there must be a restoration of the volume of money and a rise of farm values and prices first before farm buying and consuming power is restored.

THE FARM CONSUMING POWER

With manufacturers raising and maintaining by agreement the prices of manufactured products which farmers must pay for supplies and equipment, and with the manipulating financiers and bankers, through the contraction of the supply of money, forcing down values and the farm-price level to give increased value to their money and bonds, the farmers are left to pay tribute both to manufacturers and industrial producers and the manipulating bankers and financiers, under whom they are being held in economic slavery under Pharaoh with the order to make bricks without straw. Farmers were able to pay the tribute of high prices levied by manufacturers while higher farm prices were maintained; but when money was withdrawn from circulation and farm prices were forced down, they could not pay tribute both to manufacturers and financiers, and they fell exhausted under the crushing burdens exacted both by manufacturers and financiers. It was the secret contraction of money, begun by the manipulating bankers in 1920, to double, triple, and multiply the value of their money and bonds, which brought the fall of farm values and the crushing economic burdens upon the farmers and made their slavery and thraldom complete, the effect of which is charged and described in the Prairie Farmer in these words:

> In 1920, in almost the twinkling of an eye, the condition was reversed. Prices fell to a ruinous low level. The exchange of commodities almost stopped. No one could sell anything at a price that was considered fair. Wheat fell in price in 8 months from $3 to $1.60 per bushel. Corn fell from $1.50 to 35 cents per bushel. Hogs, cattle, and all farm livestock and other farm products fell in proportion.

FARMS AND CITIES

But this is not only true in principle and theory; it is also true of experience and in fact. It is true of this panic as with all the other panics and depressions—that the depression came first to the farmers, destroying farm buying and consuming power; that farming and agriculture were paralyzed before the blight of this depression had reached back to factory, mill, and workshop, and the touch of its withering hand had thrown industrial labor out of employment and destroyed labor's buying and consuming power.

It is the history of this panic or depression that the hard times began with the farmers, came first with the fall of farm values and prices, forcing down and taking away the farmers' earnings and income, destroying the farmers' buying and consuming power; and, finally and ultimately, reaching back through our specialized system of industry, brought unemployment to the laboring masses and destroying the buying and consuming power of men in other trades and callings until all industry was paralyzed, until the panic was made full and complete.

WHY PROSPERITY NOT RESTORED

When this crisis fell upon the farming industry, with the higher normal values and price level, the farmers were selling not more than one fourth of their crops with which to pay taxes and interest, leaving them the other three fourths or more with which to buy, take, and consume the products of factory, mill, and workshop. But when money was secretly contracted in 1920, forcing down values and the price level, the farmers were compelled to sell all four fourths of their crops and products, with which to pay taxes, interest, and fixed charges, and were left with no part with which to buy and consume, destroying the buying and consuming power of 40,000,000 of farm population and dependents. And, finally, this failure and destruction of the farmers' buying and consuming power left the retail merchant without demand, the wholesale house without sales, and the factory, mill, and workshop without orders. And the wheels of industry slackened and slowed down and brought unemployment to industrial labor and destroyed the buying and consuming power of another 30,000,000 and their dependents, and the fatal circle of hard times, want, suffering, and distress in the midst of plenty and great abundance was realized and became complete.

ALL DEPENDENT UPON FARMING

The farm population not only includes the most numerous class of consumers, but a class which buys and consumes double what any other class consumes. The 40,000,000 farm population and dependents not only buy and consume what other classes buy and consume for personal and family use, not only what other classes buy for their homes, but as much more outside of their homes. The 40,000,000 farm population and dependents after buying household supplies and for personal and family use buy many other articles for use in farm equipment and operation.

Having found the cause, how the contraction of money operated to bring a fall of values and of the price level, thereby destroying the buying and consuming power, first of the farm population and dependents and then of the industrial laboring classes, and finally involving the whole body of the people—now let us consider the recovery program to remedy the cause and evil and bring relief from the panic. If a withdrawal of money from circulation will cause a fall of values and of the price level, effect a decrease in earnings and income, and destroy the farm buying and consuming power, then nothing is more reasonable, more plausible, logical, and conclusive than that a restoration of money in circulation will cause a rise of values and of the farm price level, a return of farm earnings and income, and a restoration of the farm buying and consuming power.

ALL MUST WAIT UPON FARMING

It has been truly said of farming and agriculture: Destroy the farms and the agricultural industry and leave the towns and cities stand, and the towns and cities will perish, will fall to debris and decay. But destroy the towns and cities and leave farming and agriculture, and the towns and cities will rise again from the debris, ashes, and chaos, because farming and agriculture are the fountainhead and source, are the foundation and basis, of all business and enterprise, of all prosperity, industry, and wealth. And it can be said with equal truth that prosperity and industrial recovery must come to the towns and cities from farming and agriculture, the source of all wealth and prosperity. Prosperity and industrial recovery must come and can only come from a rise of farm values and of the price level, from a return of farm earnings and income, from a restoration of the farm buying and consuming power—the power to take, buy, and consume the products of factory, mill, and workshop—of the industrial labor of the towns and cities.

Prosperity must first be restored where prosperity was first destroyed. Prosperity was first destroyed with the farmers. Prosperity must first be restored with the farmers. Prosperity can best be restored by using the same power and means which were used to destroy prosperity. The power of money was used to destroy prosperity, and the power of money must be used to restore prosperity. The steps and course which were taken to impair and destroy prosperity must be retraced and taken in reverse order to bring back and restore prosperity. The volume and supply of money which were contracted and withdrawn from circulation must now be restored back to circulation. As the withdrawal of money from circulation forced down values and the farm price level, so the restoration of money back in circulation will raise farm values and the price level.

The rise of farm values and the price level will increase farm earnings and income. The increase of farm earnings and income will give the farmer a greater surplus remaining after the payment of taxes, interest, and fixed charges. This surplus remaining represents and will restore the farm buying and consuming power, the farmers' power to buy, take, and consume the products of industry, industrial labor. With the restoration of farm buying and consuming power, the demand from farmers, as orders going back through retail merchant and wholesale house to factory, mill, and workshop, will start production to supply their demands. The restoration of production in industry will restore employment to industrial labor and will restore labor's buying and consuming power. And with the buying and consuming power restored both to farm and industrial labor, prosperity will be far on the way to all other trades and branches of industry.

But why is the money not restored, restored and turned back to circulation? Restoring the money in circulation is the simplest and least difficult step to be taken in the administration of the recovery program. It is the one step which could be taken promptly, immediately, and without delay. The machinery and facilities are all created and ready. Every means and instrumentality is waiting, waiting for orders and direction to move; could be started today, tomorrow, or the next day; ready to start the money back through the same channels through which it was withdrawn from circulation. The laws are on the statute books providing four means to be exercised in the alternate—the remonetization of silver, the revaluation of gold, resort to the Federal Reserve notes, the resort to United States currency notes—all waiting for administration and enforcement to restore the money back into circulation.

There is one reason, and only one reason, why the money is not restored to circulation. The international financiers and bankers who held the secret bankers' meeting in Washington, D.C., May 18, 1920, and conspired behind closed doors and drawn curtains to withdraw the people's money from circulation, are opposing, delaying, postponing, and maneuvering to prevent action taken. The restoration of the money back in circulation would reverse the order and transfer of value. The fifty billion of values which were taken and transferred from farm commodities and property to money and bonds by the contraction and withdrawal of money from circulation would leave their money and bonds and go back into farm commodities and property, and the conspiring, manipulating bankers and financiers would lose a part of their ill-gotten gains.

All business and industry are dependent upon farming and agriculture; all industry and enterprise must wait until prosperity comes back to agriculture, until earnings and income are restored to the farmers. The manufacturer must wait in his office for orders to start factory, mill, and workshop. The merchant must wait for customers to buy and take his goods and wares. The banker must wait at his wicket window for payment of his overdue interest and notes. The laboring man must wait and, waiting, must stand idle. He cannot secure another day's labor, nor collect another dollar of wages or pay until there is a restoration of the farmers' buying and consuming power, a restoration of the farmers' power to buy and take the products of industry and industrial labor.

All men must wait upon farming and agriculture, because all wealth and prosperity must first come from the ground, from the bosom of Mother Earth, from the fountainhead and source of which all men are fed, clothed, and sheltered, and from which every vital necessary to sustain life and every comfort and convenience comes, and from which every joy and pleasure flows, and all the charities that soothe, heal, and bless spring, all from the bosom of Mother Earth. Agriculture came as the first business. Farmers came as the first business men, as the workers in partnership with nature, the attendants upon the great fountain source from which flow all comforts and blessings and upon which to administer and from which to dispense all sustenance of life and existence. [Applause.]

Every dollar paid out to stimulate industry or to revive industrial employment before restoring the farmers' buying and consuming power is an expedient for temporary relief, a form of dole and public charity, with administration costs and interest added, paid from taxes and borrowed money, piling still higher taxes and the tax burden, only with conditions to relapse when payments stop.

Prosperity must first come to the farmers.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, we have had a delightful day, a nonpartisan day, and we have heard discussed a great variety of subjects. We have had much information, all facts clearly and well stated, every speaker ready and willing to extend the courtesy of making a reply to questions and giving the other fellow a chance to make a speech. We have talked about everything except the subject for which this day has been set aside, or rather this week. I understand that this is supposed to be District of Columbia week. I presume the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON], Chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, is very much in the position that I was in when I was Chairman of the District of Columbia Committee. We made ample preparations for this eventful day; but by some legerdemain—I will not say black art, but let us say some mysticism of legislative procedure—the day for passage of bills for the District of Columbia rarely came about. I have never yet found out why it was, nor how it could happen that under the regular order of things and rules to which I submitted from time to time, they could pass by major legislation needed by the District of Columbia, but it always seemed they did.

I want to say something before I really touch the subject I came here to discuss for a few minutes. So much has been said about the older States of New York and Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, and about the methods they have in the legislatures of those States of strangling bills. We have a method of submerging bills in Pennsylvania, or rather we did, called the "Pickling Committee." You have a different characterization of it here. I note that Members on both sides are very free in their criticism of the other side, and that no one resists the implication and the challenge that both sides are guilty of doing things they should not do. I really believe that any party that is in the majority ought to have that majority well enough in hand so that it will not be afraid to bring out on the floor of the House any measure that appears to have behind it sentiment sufficiently crystalized to get 100 or 145 or 150 signatures to a petition for its consideration. It should not be necessary on either side of the House to pickle bills. I have said at least twice, since my return to Congress, and particularly in this session, that I have looked over this body and have seen here in active work on the floor much keen mentality in operation.

I say you could pick out of this House a proportionate number from either side, give them 10 years of development on the floor of the House, and you would have the greatest legislative body of the world has ever seen, and who would quickly solve all problems. [Applause.] You would not then have to smother or chloroform bills. But good men are too often defeated. There is intelligence enough on this Democratic side to lead your majority straight through to a vote and to a conclusion without having to cast this reflection upon all Congressmen, compelling us all to go through a lot of trouble explaining why you pickle bills and do not give the sovereign will of the people free flow of expression here through the Membership. I sign most of these petitions as a compliment and as an accommodation to the gentlemen who ask me, not for the reason that I am going to vote for any of the bills when they are called up. Some of them I may vote for and others I may not; but in any event I think you are expressing your own weakness when you pickle bills instead of bringing them out and laying them on the table and carrying them through to a conclusion and to a vote. The Republicans have often done the same thing when they had the power to do it. This is my criticism of the method of legislating.

What I wish to speak about today has its relationship to District day or District week. We well know that it is impossible here under the circumstances, while we have been voting untold millions and billions, ostensibly, at least for the relief of humanity, not to be so; but for 18 years we have overlooked another forgotten man and forgotten woman. It may be some heroic man who missed getting a pension yet one who did some great service to his country. Or it may be a woman who wove and spun during war time; still we would see her taken across the hill to the poorhouse. I once stopped long enough to investigate, and I found that it is a good deal cheaper to keep old people at home or with their relatives than it is to take them across the hill to the poorhouse and make their home amongst beggars, tramps, and people of immoral tendencies, and a place where usually a lot of graft enters into its management—the county poorhouse.

We have come to the point, Mr. Chairman, where the States have told us what to do. Nearly 30 States, or in other words, a good majority of the States of this great Nation, now make provision for the aged when they are no longer capable of earning their sustenance; the States take care of them but do not take them to the poorhouse. Neither should the District of Columbia.

An old soldier once talked to me up at the soldiers' home at Erie, Pa. I said, "Is not this a wonderful place?"

"Oh, yes;" he said, "these are wonderful places. We have theatrical performances, we have people come and visit us whom we do not know; at Washington the veterans walk around the wonderful park General Scott provided when he came home from Mexico with a little excess money that was given him for use in that campaign" "But," the old soldier continued, "we do not have the old friends around us; we do not have the charm and joy of the environment of youth and young manhood; we do not have contact with old friends and companions. I meet old soldiers up here, but they are not the friends of my boyhood days. I prefer by far to be taken to a humbler place, to the cottage by the little brookside, than to be taken to a palace in Washington, at Erie, at Hampton, or somewhere else."

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FOCHT. On Friday, September 8, 1916, after a talk with one of the greatest men who ever sat in this House, a Democrat, a scholar, a general, a real man—General Sherwood, of Ohio—a man who could drive a team of prancing horses through the traffic of Washington unafraid at 85 years of age, who could offer criticism—had, withal, a heart, my friends. He talked to me about the subject of old-age pensions, and I quoted him in a speech I delivered on this floor in 1916. He said when he left Congress:

> Young man, pursue that; that is the just and the righteous thing to do; help the weak and the unfortunate, the lonely and the desolate. Try to blot out the misery and woe of life; and the most of it is in the evening of life, when the shadows no longer fall toward the west, when the limbs become trembly and the hand unsteady. They talk about sending them over the hill to the poorhouse; do not do it; help them, young man.

And from that day on I have dedicated myself in some way to try to be of assistance in this matter.

Mr. Chairman, our land is dotted with almshouses, poorhouses, and jails in which men and women no longer able to earn a living for themselves pass a miserable existence, awaiting the day that will bring them surcease from want and suffering. If we enact a law such as I propose, or one on similar lines—for I am not wedded to a particular form—we shall have done much in the direction of obviating the need of such institutions as I have named. There will always be, of course, many who by native indolence or vicious habits will qualify themselves for becoming inmates of the poorhouse, but I am happy in the belief that these constitute a comparatively small percentage of the men and women who by stress of circumstances beyond their control have to find refuge there. It should be our earnest desire to provide a remedy. The man or the woman who has during a lifetime labored honestly should not be compelled in old age or when incapacitated by illness or disease to face the fate of a pauper.

Considered from a purely economic standpoint, legislation of this character is to be advocated because of the enormous savings which through it will come to every municipality and State by the lessened cost in the maintenance of almshouses and poorhouses. What the business man calls his overhead charges would be in this instance reduced to a minimum.

There is probably no one cause more strongly accentuating the frequent antagonisms between capital and labor than the constantly recurring want of the wage earners in their old age. Under the most favorable conditions the average wage earner is unable to lay aside any considerable amount against the day when his strength to labor leaves him and his earnings cease. It is my opinion that the disturbing elements between employer and employee may largely be traced to this one fact. Happy, therefore, will be the day when that fear need no longer be constantly in the mind of the wage earners of our country; when they can look forward with assurance to the time in their lives when, even though their strength fail them or illness disable them, they will be given the means with which to make their declining days measurably comfortable. Moreover, such action on the part of the Government would unquestionably arouse in the mind of every worker a sentiment of gratitude which would find expression in a deeper patriotism. No tenable objection can be urged against a policy which in every way makes for betterment, but everything speaks in its favor.

The outcry of State socialism which may be raised against the proposed legislation need deter no one. As a matter of fact, there is, I venture to say, no government of any civilized country, ours included, that has not to a greater or less extent embarked upon the policy of State socialism. In the United States, it is true, it is still in its infancy; and yet we have done some things that are in their essentials of the nature of State socialism. I will only cite the rural-credit banking law; the Government employees' compensation law, and similar enactments which indicate a realization, on the part of the Government, of its obligations to contribute from the resources of the Government to the improvement of the social and economic conditions of certain classes of the population.

The reason I am talking about this subject today instead of at a later time is because I am going away. I am going up to Lewistown, Pa., to help dedicate a Legion post home. In part it will be a memorial home dedicated to two great soldiers, General Hulings, who was the first to reach Washington and sleep with his troops, the Logan Guards, under the dome of the Capitol; and Gen. John Taylor, who fought 60 battles in the Civil War, who camped across the Potomac in Virginia, who protected a Confederate family with whom later on he became close friends and who visited him in Pennsylvania. For two of the Confederate ladies whom he protected at that time he secured positions, and, for all I know, they are still here in the Treasury Department.

I want to be associated with and attached to this noble thing; everybody will be for it; all the States are for it; the President is for it; humanity cries out for it. [Applause.]

(From the speech of Hon. WILLIAM I. SIROVICH, of New York, Dec. 20, 1928)

How many old men and women have we? The statistics which were gathered through the State of Massachusetts Old Age Pension Commission show that there were 1,250,000 old fathers and mothers prior to the year 1915 in the United States, all of whom were dependent in part or in whole on public or private charity. And that the Nation's annual cost of our dependent population amounted to over $200,000,000.

Later estimates of 1927 by Dr. A. Epstein showed almost 2,000,000 dependents maintained in public and private institutions at a total cost of over $500,000,000.

There are today over five and a half million people past 65 years of age in the United States. Two millions are between the age of 65 and 70, a million and a half between the ages of 70 and 75, and a million between 75 and 80, and there are three quarters of a million people 80 and over, until life finally terminates. The number of old people in our country is now greater than the original population of the entire 13 colonies. In a study made by the United States Department of Labor in 1925 that investigated 2,183 of these almshouses of the United States, which represent 93 percent of the total, it was found that in those almshouses there were 85,889 old fathers and mothers who were past the age of 65. The total cost of these almshouses, so far as the land, the buildings, and equipment and the furniture was concerned represented an investment of $200,000,000.

The total maintenance cost of all these institutions amounted to $28,740,535, which represented a per capita investment of $1,752.09 and a food maintenance of $439.76 for each inmate. Of the 2,183 almshouses studied 1,909, or 87 percent of them, had less than 100 inmates. To determine how this money was spent study disclosed that 32 percent went as administrative expense, 38 percent for operation of the plant, while 30 percent went for inmates' maintenance. In other words, out of every dollar contributed to the almshouse 70 cents went for administrative and operative expense, the so-called "overhead", while 30 cents went directly for the old fathers and mothers.

Every State of the Union, with the exception of New Mexico, has almshouses for the poor. In 40 of our States the almshouses are county institutions. Here in these almshouse are huddled together the feebleminded and the epileptic, the cripple and the maimed, the idiot and the imbecile, the abandoned child of the prostitute, the broken-down criminal, the chronic drunkard, the victim of loathsome and contagious diseases and venereal infections, and last but not least the superannuated toilers of labor and industry, our fathers and mothers. Veterans of dissipation and veterans of peace and industry living together under one roof. Is it fair? Is it just? Is it humane?

THE TRAGEDY OF OLD AGE

The chairman of the Pennsylvania Old Age Pension Commission made a visit to the Berkshire County poor farm and walking up the lane he met two old people, husband and wife. These two old people and the chairman reached the almshouse at the same time. The superintendent asked the old folk, "What do you wish?" They answered, "We have a permit to enter the poor farm."

The superintendent asked, "What is your name?"

"My name is John."

"And your name?"

"My name is Mary."

"John," said the superintendent, "you go to the building over there, and Mary, you go to that building over there."

"What!" cried John. "After living together under the same roof for 50 years are we now going to be separated?"

"Yes," replied the superintendent. "Those are the rules. We cannot mix up the sexes in these institutions."

"Three days after John entered that door," said Senator DAVIS, of Pennsylvania, who tells this story, "he died of a broken heart, and a few days later Mary also passed away. The amount of money that it took to keep those people apart in the poorhouse is not a cent more than it would have taken to keep them together under their own roof."

WHY OLD WORKERS ARE "SCRAPPED"

In the industrial establishments of the present day, where men must work often ceaselessly and at capacity to supply the demands of modern society, the swift-moving, power-driven machinery permits very few to play any part after the age of 60. The requirements of keen eyesight, skilled hand, and steady nerve are imperative. Furthermore, the constant strain from working with delicate, swift machinery tends to enfeeble these necessary faculties prematurely. To aggravate the situation, the cheaper production by machinery makes it impossible for the discharged elderly men to compete in any line of work.

The consequence is that with the progress of civilization the number of unemployed beyond a certain age is constantly increasing. This is shown by census statistics. In 1890 the unemployed above 55 years of age were 15 percent; in 1900 they were 19 percent. Of men over 65 the unemployed were 25 percent in 1890 and 32 percent in 1900. By analogy, at the present time the percentage of the unemployed among those over 65 years of age would be not less than 47 percent under normal conditions. In other words, fully half of workmen over 65 years of age are scrapped.

The investigations of the different State commissions warrant the conclusion that 1 in every 5 persons past the age of 65 is classed as a pauper, and that 1 in every 3 is dependent either on public or private charity or on relatives or friends. Two out of every five passing their fiftieth year have no property or income other than their daily earnings. By the age of 60 their earning power disappears, and they must, if without relatives or near friends to aid them, fall back upon public charity.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, passed April 12, 1934. The State senate is Democratic and the lower house is Republican. This resolution went through without a dissenting vote, and is a nonpartisan expression of opinion. It is as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN SENATE,
Albany, April 11, 1934.

By Mr. H. L. O'Brien

Whereas it is the judgment of eminent economists and practical business executives that business recovery is retarded by the inability of manufacturing and commercial establishments throughout the country to obtain operating capital, thereby unnecessarily continuing and aggravating the deplorable unemployment situation which has brought so much suffering and deprivation to millions of workers and their families; and

Whereas it is generally conceded that manufacturing and commercial executives have, in the main, cooperated sincerely with the National Government in the effort to relieve suffering and bring business back to a stable and economically sound normalcy; and

Whereas it is now generally conceded that the operation of the Federal Securities Act of 1933 has interfered with the orderly recovery of business: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the Congress of the United States be and the same hereby is respectfully memorialized to amend the Securities Act of 1933 by eliminating all of its civil liability provisions to the end that business, by being permitted to finance itself, may thereby be in a position to finance employment when the ability of the Government so to do is exhausted; and be it further

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of the United States Senate, and to each Member of Congress elected from the State of New York.

By order of the senate.

MARGUERITE O'CONNELL, Clerk.

In assembly April 12, 1934. Concurred in without amendment. By order of the assembly.

FRED W. HAMMOND, Clerk.

I concur in the general purpose of this resolution and believe that the Congress should direct its attention to an amendment and modification of the Securities Act. I am thoroughly in accord with the general purpose and theory of the Securities Act. I believe that investors should be protected by a National Securities Act, but I believe that the act we have passed during the special session is so drastic that it has dried up the long-time capital market. The banks are filled with money awaiting investment. The channel, however, to bring these large sums of money into the trade and commerce of the United States has been dammed up by the unnecessary drastic provisions of the Securities Act. I believe that we should modify this act in order to fully protect the investor on the one hand and on the other make it possible to free this long-time capital market so that millions can flow into industry and business. More money would thus be engaged in putting men back to work than can possibly be spent by the Federal Government. I believe that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce ought to seriously restudy this situation.

A bill has been introduced in the Senate by Senator HASTINGS to remedy this situation. This bill amending and modifying the Securities Act fully protects the investor, but at the same time does not freeze private capital and the private savings of the people, which under normal times flows into private trade and industry. More millions would be spent in putting people back to work by a reasonable modification of the Securities Act than could possibly be spent by the Federal Government for public works.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. ADAMS. Is the gentleman in accord with that part of the resolution of the State of New York which refers to the elimination of all of the civil liability provisions of the Securities Act?

Mr. BACON. I used the resolution simply as a text. I am not endorsing the resolution in detail, but simply in principle and using it as a text to suggest the restudy of the whole question, with a view of freeing the long-time capital market which is now frozen, so that money may flow back into commerce and industry in order that the commerce and industry of this country may obtain what they need most, and that is long-time capital rather than short-time bank credits. The reasonable modification of the Securities Act is one of the vitally necessary steps that must be taken if recovery is to be speeded and not retarded.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN].

Mr. MCGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, the farmers of America are within the clutches of an Agricultural Department composed of men, some of whom are far more in sympathy with the non-profit system of Russia than they are with the profit system of American business, and some others of whom are mere dreamers, theorists, and experimentalists with no practical knowledge of farming. With the farmers of America held within the clutches of such an organization of men there is little hope of recovery either for agriculture or for the country.

So far as agriculture is concerned, there is no hope of recovery so long as the destinies of the farmers are being molded by such men. So far as the country is concerned, there is no chance for recovery unless agriculture can recover and be on a profit basis. One of the greatest contributing causes of our present economic and social dilemma is to be found in the fact that there has been economic discrimination against the American farmer since 1920. Throughout this period of time the farmer has been on a nonprofit basis. It has been utterly impossible for him to take the proceeds from his products and pay the increased price of things which he buys, increased transportation charges, and increased taxes.

So far as Congress and the country are concerned, it was fully understood that the very purpose of the Agricultural Adjustment Act was to place agriculture on a profit basis. The farmers accepted Mr. Roosevelt in the last election upon his promises and pledges in his pre-election speeches, particularly in his Topeka speech. From those pledges the farmers had every right to believe that Mr. Roosevelt would have a program which would provide profits for agriculture. The message which the President sent to Congress when he requested the Agricultural Adjustment Act was in keeping with his pre-election statements. The Congress accepted that message and enacted the Agricultural Adjustment Act, believing that it would be administered so as to produce profits for agriculture. It was in that spirit that I voted for the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Those in the Agriculture Department who are administering the Agricultural Adjustment Act are brazenly repudiating the pre-election statements of the President on agriculture. For instance, in his Topeka speech he criticized the Hoover administration for advocating a program of reduced production. He referred to the Hoover program that there be a reduction in cotton and wheat production and a reduction in the number of dairy cows as the invention of a cruel joke and as a mere alibi to cover up failure, yet in the face of his pre-election statement those in control of the Agriculture Department are carrying on a reduction program far in excess of any plan ever suggested by the Hoover administration.

In his Topeka speech Mr. Roosevelt made the sacred pledge that the program which he would offer would be voluntary and that there would be no coercion. The program which is being inaugurated by those in control of the Agriculture Department is ruthless and insidious coercion of the worst kind. Mr. George Farrell, in charge of the wheat allotment, in a speech at Pratt, Kans., was reported in the Hutchinson (Kans.) News of March 31 as follows:

> Our delicate task is to steer the price of wheat so that the man outside of the allotment makes no money and the man inside does.

In this statement Mr. Farrell makes bold the statement that the Agriculture Department is so determined to coerce the farmers that it will use the power of government to manipulate the wheat market and to rig the price of wheat so as to impoverish the farmer who does not voluntarily enter into the "voluntary" allotment plan. This program makes hypocritical mockery of the President's pre-election statement that his plan would be voluntary and that there would be no coercion.

Among those in the Agriculture Department who are opposed to profit in business are Rexford Tugwell, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, and Jerome Frank, General Counsel of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

There runs throughout all of Mr. Tugwell's writings his opposition to the profit system and to business operating its industries. He is determined that our business structure shall be so changed that business will have to disappear. His theory is not a recovery of business but rather a destruction of business. In his speech before the American Economic Association at its forty-fourth annual meeting he said:

> The next series of changes will have to do with industry itself. It has already been suggested that business will logically be required to disappear. This is not an overstatement for the sake of emphasis; it is literally meant.

We are told that the present program of agriculture is based upon a planned economy. Mr. Tugwell has no respect for a planned economy consistent with the individual operating his own business. He believes in a planned economy which destroys our present constitutional and statutory structure of government and our present form of business based upon profit. In this same speech before the American Economic Association, Professor Tugwell said:

> It is, in other words, a logical impossibility to have a planned economy and to have business operating its industries just as it is also impossible to have one with our present constitutional and statutory structure. Modifications in both, so serious as to mean destruction and rebeginning, are required.

As to Mr. Frank and his views pertaining to profit for agriculture or business generally, I shall quote from a statement recently published by the Cooperative Dairy Defense Committee:

> A.A.A. has refused to accept the counsel or to heed the plans suggested by practical leaders in the dairy industry. Had such plans been followed the dairy industry would now be well on its way to stabilization.
> Of course, this stabilization implies that a profit motive may be considered by both producers and distributors.
> Mr. Frank, however, states that such profit motive is only one of our "current folkways."

Now, what hope is there for a farmer to obtain a profit from an agricultural program when one of the principal administrators speaks so disparagingly of profit as to refer to the profit motive as only one of our "current folkways"?

Profit cannot be taken out of business without going to the communistic system of production. The very heart of communism is that profits are denied to the producer. It is always difficult to force a tiller of the soil to give up the honest profits which are due him. The Russian Soviets found that out, yet they were determined to take profits away from the kulaks, the most substantial Russian farmers. The Soviet took profits away from them through the process of tyranny and persecution. The Russian farmers, whose only crime was that they insisted upon a profit from their honest toil, were disfranchised, imprisoned, and banished.

So far as men like Frank and Tugwell are concerned, such bonuses as the farmers are now receiving are not being given for the purpose of making profit for the farmer but as bait to lure him into a trap where he in the operation of his land will be under the complete domination of the Government. Professor Tugwell, in his Philadelphia speech of December 29, made plain that the present agriculture program was merely being used to control the entire utilization of all agricultural land. In that speech he said:

> We are now engaged in a drastic program of controlling agricultural products for the emergency. This in itself means that we are trying to control the entire utilization of all agricultural land.

In the closing words of his Philadelphia speech Professor Tugwell said:

> Private control has failed to use wisely its control of land. * * * For the first time the Government is thinking of the land as a whole. For the first time we are preparing to build a land program which will control the use of that greatest of all natural resources, not merely for the benefit of those who happen to hold title to it, but for the greater welfare of all the citizens of the country.

There has been no legislation enacted by Congress which gives the Government any direct control over the land. There is no possible way that the Government can now be building a land program as Mr. Tugwell said that it is doing, except that the agriculture act be so perverted, jockeyed, and used as to gain control of the land.

The individual farmer in receiving his temporary bonus may think that he is receiving something for his benefit. This is not Mr. Tugwell's intentions. In this speech he makes bold the statement that this control of the land is not merely for the benefit of the one who happens to hold title to it, yet the American farmer is insidiously being led to believe that this Government program which is controlling his land is for the benefit of him who holds title to it, but such is not the case. This control of the land is for the benefit of what Mr. Tugwell and those of his kind say would be for the benefit of all the citizens of the country rather than for the benefit of the individual who happens to hold title. That is identical with the program of the Russian Soviet. The soviets were determined that the control of the Russian land would not be for the benefit of the kulaks who owned the land and produced the farm products, but for what the Soviets regarded the benefit of the people as a whole. The thrifty kulak who thought otherwise was disfranchised, imprisoned, and banished, and the strong arm of the Russian Government stole away from him the products of his toil.

Mr. Brookhart is another in the Agriculture Department who regards the Russian system as better than the American system. Recently he made a speech expressing such views at a dinner held in Washington. I shall not go to the trouble of quoting his speech. This is not necessary. I take it that Congress and the country will take judicial notice that Mr. Brookhart thinks more of the Russian system than the American system. The farmers of Iowa took such notice in the last primary election when they defeated Mr. Brookhart for renomination to the United States Senate.

Coming now to those in the Agriculture Department who are mere theorists and who are experimenting on the American farmer, I shall quote a few paragraphs from the recently published statement of the Cooperative Dairy Defense Committee:

Graphically portrayed within is the incredible fact that milk policies of A.A.A. are being chartered by book- and law-trained men appallingly devoid of practical experience in either large or small operations in farming or merchandising.

These men have demonstrated their failure to realize that the Congress in enacting A.A.A. charted a course in practical economics far beyond ordinary studies for Government regulation. Technique of government may be discovered from books in which may be reviewed the accumulations of experiments and experiences through the centuries since the early Greek democracies. But the "know-how" of producing and merchandising agricultural commodities must be predicated upon knowledge to be had only from practical operations.

The group of present dictators of the A.A.A. milk policies are not so qualified.

Mr. Jerome Frank, general counsel of A.A.A., in his press release of December 30 complacently speaks of this group as "experimentalists." Properly and bitterly named as far as the dairy industry is concerned. Ten months of their experimentalism, of their vacillations, delays, and changes in policy have brought the dairy industry into a condition more desperate than it was a year ago.

As to Secretary Wallace, the most charitable appraisement that can be made of him is that he is merely a visionary experimentalist or that he is a helpless victim of the Tugwell influence in the Agriculture Department. It is only by extending to him this charity that he can possibly be excused for the inconsistencies evidenced by his previous opposition to the reduction program in the former administration, while the very keystone of the present agriculture program of his Department is based upon reduction of farm production. In one of the recent issues of a business letter published in one of the national business reports, which is wholly nonpartisan and comments on governmental activities in their true and actual light, the following was reported:

A.A.A.: It's in a mess, but the sober realistic Chester Davis is on the point of pulling it out. He's hampered somewhat by the philosophic Wallace, who is so nobly long-visioned that he bumps his nose against rough trees as he walks, peering, philosophizing.

The dominant and masterful personality in the Agriculture Department is the Assistant Secretary, Rexford G. Tugwell. The majority of the remainder of the men in the Agriculture Department are largely so much putty in the hands of Mr. Tugwell to be molded as he chooses to fashion them. Professor Tugwell is highly intelligent and knows full well where he wants to carry this program. He is determined to keep profit out of agriculture. He knows that the way to do this is to keep the farmer in sufficient despair that he will be willing to submit to any and all forms of governmental domination in order that he may receive a little cash bonus here and there, and now and then. Professor Tugwell knows that these experimentalists, who are wholly incompetent to meet the realities of the situation, serve his purpose just as well as someone who would ally himself with Mr. Tugwell whole-heartedly in a program which would so modify the farmers operating their own agricultural industry under our present constitutional and statutory structure as to mean destruction and rebeginning.

Remember, he said in his address before the American Economic Association, the following:

It is, in other words, a logical impossiblity to have a planned economy and to have business operating its industries just as it is also impossible to have one with our present constitutional and statutory structure. Modifications in both, so serious as to mean destruction and rebeginning, are required.

Professor Tugwell makes it clear in his address to the American Economic Society that the program of planning requires three wholesale changes in American life, namely:

First, break-down in present statutes and the Constitution of the Government.

Second, destroying of private business.

Third, destroying the sovereignty of the States.

Professor Tugwell in his speech even goes so far as to say that we shall be obliged to recognize that often the Federal area will not be large enough. This obviously means that he prefers to make internationalism an ultimate goal. I shall quote the exact words of Professor Tugwell on these three requirements:

First:

We have a century and more of development to undo. * * * The first series of changes will have to do with statutes, with constitutions, and with government. The intention of eighteenth and nineteenth century law was to install and protect the principle of conflict; this, if we begin to plan, we shall be changing once for all, and it will require the laying of rough, unholy hands on many a sacred precedent, doubtless calling on an enlarged and nationalized police power for enforcement. * * *

Second:

There is no private business, if by that we mean one of no consequence to anyone but its proprietors; and so none exempt from compulsion to serve a planned public interest.

Third:

Furthermore, we shall have to progress sufficiently far in elementary realism to recognize that only the Federal area, and often not even that, is large enough to be coextensive with modern industry; and that consequently the States are wholly ineffective instruments for control.

In conclusion in commenting upon these three requirements, Professor Tugwell, in this speech, says:

All three of these wholesale changes are required by even a limited acceptance of the planning idea.

As a Representative of a farm district, I protest against Frederick Howe's being consumers' counsel of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. Contracts in which the financial welfare of the American farmer is involved are being made by the Agriculture Department. These contracts pertain to marketing and other conditions and are passed upon by these men, Howe and Frank. Remember, Frank is the attorney for the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and Howe is the attorney representing the consumers in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. Frank does not believe in profits. Here is the record of Howe: He was commissioner of immigration of Ellis Island during the Wilson administration. As commissioner it was his duty to deport anarchists. Let us see how well he performed that duty.

At that time Mr. LaGuardia, now mayor of New York City, was a Member of the House of Representatives. Here is what Mr. LaGuardia said of Mr. Howe on June 21, 1919, on page 1522, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, first session Sixty-sixth Congress:

We have fixed laws in this country on the question of immigration, and whether Mr. Howe believes in the laws or not, it is his sworn duty to enforce them.

We are able to take care of the anarchists in New York City, by our municipal police, but after we get these anarchists and turn them over to the immigration office at Ellis Island, we find that the immigration commissioner, instead of deporting them according to law, acts as their counsel.

Such was the opinion Mr. LaGuardia had of Mr. Howe. A greater liberal, a more intellectually honest man, and a greater patriot never sat in the Congress of the United States than Mr. LaGuardia.

Mr. Siegel, a Representative at that time from the State of New York, on page 1523 of the same CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, had the following to say of Mr. Howe:

We are appropriating $600,000 for the deportation of anarchists. We appropriated $500,000 to help the Attorney General find these men who are opposed to our form of government and our laws. It is useless to have a commissioner of immigration at New York away from his post of duty. He presided as chairman over what proved to be the largest Russian meeting held in Madison Square Garden a few weeks ago.

Now these anarchists and others who do not believe in our form of government are gathered up, for instance, at Seattle and sent to Ellis Island, and then, lo and behold, at Ellis Island they are given better treatment than is given to honest, worthy immigrants when they arrive here and pay their increased head tax.

It must be remembered that when Mr. Siegel spoke of appropriating $500,000 of the taxpayers' money to assist the Attorney General in rounding up anarchists he was speaking of the Attorney General of the Wilson administration. Mr. Siegel made it clear that the taxpayers were paying their hard-earned money to make it possible for the Department of Justice of the Wilson administration to round up these enemies of the Government and yet when they were captured and taken to Ellis Island, which was under the control of Mr. Howe, they were treated as guests—even better than worthy, honest immigrants.

Shortly after these statements were made in the House of Representatives by Mr. LaGuardia and Mr. Siegel, Mr. Howe quit his post as commissioner of immigration at Ellis Island. I do not criticize the Wilson administration for having him in this position in the first instance. My criticism is of Mr. Howe because conduct such as outlined by Mr. LaGuardia and Mr. Siegel was a betrayal of the Wilson administration by a man who has been intrusted with public office by that administration. Today we find this same man, Howe, back in this administration in a position where he has great power over the American farmers. I resent the condition which now exists with the destiny of the millions of thrifty, hard-working, honest American farmers in the hands of men with the ideas of Tugwell and Frank and with the record of Howe.

I am perfectly willing to assume and believe that President Roosevelt was in good faith when he made his preelection speech at Topeka and when he sent his message to the Congress. I am perfectly willing to assume and believe that today he is in good faith and has a sincere desire for agriculture to be returned to a profitable basis. I am perfectly willing to assume and believe that he has been betrayed by those of the Tugwell and Frank school of thought in the Agricultural Department the same as I believe that the farmers of America are being betrayed by Tugwell, Frank, and those of their kind who are dominating the Agriculture Department. However, from this day on, the responsibility is upon the President to deliver the American farmer from the clutches of the Tugwell school of thought. Congress and the farmers are helpless. They cannot remove Mr. Tugwell from the Agriculture Department. They cannot place the Agriculture Department in the control of capable and practical men who have a sincere and honest desire to carry on an agricultural program in keeping with the President's preelection speech and his message to Congress and in keeping with traditional American business and statutory government within the Constitution. Only the President can correct this situation. He and he alone has the power to purge the Agriculture Department of Tugwell, Frank, Brookhart, and others whose desire is to nationalize agriculture and to make the farmers of America mere vassals of the Government rather than to bring about recovery for agriculture, a recovery in keeping with the American system of private operation of business at a profit and in keeping with constitutional government.

These remarks are not partisan in the sense of being pro-Republican or anti-Democratic. I am perfectly willing for the Agriculture Department and every other executive department of this Government to be filled with true Democrats during this Democratic administration. I am not criticizing the Democrats. I am only criticizing those in the executive departments of the Government who are neither Democrats nor Republicans but, irrespective of the political label they may profess, are in fact disciples of a political, governmental, and economic philosophy which is foreign to American ideas. I want them put out of power and I am perfectly willing for them to be replaced by Democrats who are loyal to the Democratic principles of Jefferson, Jackson, and Cleveland, which are the same principles cherished and possessed by the overwhelming majority of Democrats today in and out of Congress.

For example, I regard Postmaster General Farley as unduly partisan. As a Republican, I should like, as a result of a constitutional election, to see him one day replaced by a Republican, but none of my criticism in these remarks is leveled against Postmaster General Farley and other true Democrats in executive offices. I hope the subject which I am discussing today may never become a partisan issue between the Republicans and the Democrats. It will not be so far as I am concerned unless it becomes evident that as a last resort the only available means of driving men such as Tugwell, Howe, and Frank from appointed power is the election of a Republican Congress and President. For the good of the people, Republicans and Democrats alike, I hope that happy day is not postponed until after some future election. I much prefer that President Roosevelt quickly clean his administration of men of the Tugwellian school of collectivism, which is contrary to constitutional Americanism. If ever men of this school are to govern this country, I want it to be after the people, in an open election, have deliberately chosen such men as their leaders. As yet, the people have not done that. In fact, in the last election, they refused to do it when they refused to elect Norman Thomas as President. I truly believe that only by driving these men from power can President Roosevelt keep the faith with his preelection speeches and the Democratic platform. This is especially true in the matter of administering the President's agricultural policy.

Agriculture is dear to me. It is the basic occupation of free men. It is the ancient and honorable occupation of my fathers. I was born and reared in that occupation, and it gave to me the sustenance of my youth and such education as I would acquire. So far as I am concerned, agriculture in America must forever remain the occupation of free men and never be the occupation of vassals of a bureaucratic government. With American agriculture being betrayed as it is by the Tugwell domination in the Agriculture Department, I could not choose to remain here silent even if by doing so I might be insured of a long tenure in office.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, a large part of the time in general debate has been taken up with subjects other than the bill itself. As a member of the committee, I feel that I should bring to the attention of the committee the points of objection to the bill which, in my opinion, provide a reasonable basis for support of the gentlemen from both sides of the aisle. This is not a partisanship matter, but is a matter that should receive the consideration of the Democrats as well as the Republicans. I believe that the District of Columbia, committed as it is under the law to the Congress for its care, is definitely a charge upon us. I believe that so far as the municipal operations are concerned it should be as much a matter of our concern as those things that are peculiarly matters of interest to the several districts which we represent. But only too often, from what I have been able to learn, most men have been anxious about those matters that concern their own districts and are entirely unmindful of the matters that concern the District of Columbia and its people.

I feel I should say a word of commendation to the Chairman and the members of the majority side for their kindness, their courtesy, and the energy with which they approached this problem. That I am not in accord with them, that I do not accept the bill in the way in which it is framed, is in no sense to be construed as a reflection upon them. I think that the bill is a misnomer. I believe that instead of calling this the District of Columbia appropriation bill it should be called the District of Columbia tax bill. I believe that the motive which prompted the majority group in studying and in preparing the measure was primarily the matter of reduction of taxes for the District of Columbia.

I do not know whether any of the Members on the majority side made commitments back home about reduction in taxes and were not able to fulfill them so far as their own districts were concerned and felt that they might carry out that promise or obligation by reducing the taxes so far as the District of Columbia is concerned, but I do feel that instead of approaching the measure looking toward an appropriation for the municipal operations of the District the majority group approached it primarily with the purpose of reducing the taxes from $1.50 to $1.20. That might be a commendable thing to do, provided that in the program there would be no curtailment of the operations that in my judgment should receive the financial support to which they are entitled.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. May I tell the gentleman what happened last year? The committee proposed on behalf of the home owners of Washington, the poor people who bought small homes here and who are trying to pay for them, that we would reduce the taxes from $1.70 to $1.50 by effecting some sane retrenchment in existing waste and extravagance.

The Commissioners and newspapers, who always want a lot of money spent, went up in the air about it and said it could not be done, but instead of their position being right, we reduced the assessed value of property in the District last year $80,000,000 and at the same time reduced the tax rate from $1.70 to $1.50, and then had a cash surplus left over of more than $5,000,000.

This is a most remarkable situation when District Commissioners and newspapers do not want a reduction of taxes in behalf of the people they represent.

Mr. DITTER. Now, my good friend, are you willing to take time out of your own time——

Mr. BLANTON. I should not have done this, but we will meet our friend at Armageddon.

Mr. DITTER. The observations of the gentleman from Texas have much merit. I acknowledge that I am a new Member of the House, I acknowledge that I am a new member of the committee, but I believe my friend from Texas will concede that I was attentive during the hearings, and I will boast that I tried to follow through those hearings to determine whether the purpose of the hearings was to inquire into the worthwhileness of the municipal operations that are in force in the District, and I contend that a large part of the 750 pages of hearings is devoted to matters other than a direct inquiry into the worthwhileness of the municipal operations of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. Certainly.

Mr. CULKIN. Although the gentleman is a new Member, he refuses to be bulldozed from any source or to be a rubber stamp.

Mr. DITTER. Let us take that out of the RECORD. My friend and I are friendly. We may differ, but I prefer that such a statement do not appear in the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. I may tell the gentleman that if he knew our friend DITTER like we know him he would know that the bulldozing would come in the other way. [Laughter].

Mr. DITTER. After this interruption, let me get back to the District of Columbia bill.

I contend that economy, whether it is in municipal operations or county operations or in Federal operations, is a worthwhile objective, provided the economy can be practiced and we get a dollar's worth of value for a dollar spent for a worthwhile operation of Government; but if the economy comprehends a curtailment of necessary and worthwhile municipal operations, then to my mind it is false economy.

I believe the city of Washington should be an ideal city. I believe it should be the pride of every man who visits here. I believe when our constituents come here we should be able to show them the city and take a pride in it.

Let me point out to the men on this side just a few of the slashes that have been made in this appropriation bill—and, mark you, the Budget Director has gone over and helped prepare the Budget providing for these expenditures.

We have just been through a wet-and-dry fight. We have just been through a program as to the kind of legislation we should have here in the District to provide the means to buy a drink for those who want to get a drink. We set up the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, and on the basis of the Budget as it was made, $50,900 was provided for the operation of this Board. But the committee, with no rime or reason, with absolutely no statement and no hearings to justify it, politely take $22,000 of the $50,000 out of the Alcoholic Beverage Board's appropriation and cut it down to $28,000, or practically 50 percent. Why did they do it? Are these men who are sponsoring an appropriation of this kind motivated by the idea they do not want enforcement?

Let us look at the Public Utilities Commission. I am not here to defend the Commission, and I want my friend from Texas to know that definitely. I hold no brief for the Commission. I do not know the members of it. I do know something of the things they have tried to do, and I contend that the Public Utilities Commission should be, and I believe can be, a protecting agency for the consumer public, for the group that uses electricity and gas and the telephone and the street railway. But for the operation of this organization, founded and created primarily for the purpose of the protection of the consumer public, 43 percent of the amount provided in the Budget has been deducted. From an estimate of the Budget of $86,000, a reduction was made of $32,000, simply taking the Public Utilities Commission and casting it aside as an ineffective instrument of government. I contend here, subject to such correction as the gentleman from Texas may subsequently care to bring in, that in my opinion from the study of the facts as I have made them, I believe the Public Utilities Commission has tried to do an honest and a worth-while job for the people who live here in the District.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DITTER. I shall be happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GLOVER. The gentleman suggests that the bill proposes to reduce the rate of taxation from $1.50 to $1.20, and it is the lowest now of any I know in the United States. I know of no State that has anything comparable with it and I should like to know if there is any suggestion or provision in this bill whereby the amount that the Federal Government is annually contributing for the support of this city is to be reduced in the same proportion as the taxes are to be reduced.

Mr. DITTER. At the present time the amount of the allotment from the Federal Treasury is to be the same as it has been in the past; but, answering the gentleman's observation, may I say I fear this condition: If we consume by the lowering of the tax rate the surplus which presently is in the hands of the Commissioner group, if an untoward or unusual demand should come, we would thereby invite the possibility of an increased amount of allotment from the Federal Treasury. This is my observation.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I shall be glad to.

Mr. BLANTON. There is a provision in this bill to use the accumulated cash surplus they have now to reduce the tax to $1.20. That is 30 cents per $100 more than it was when I came here, when the property value was much less. That is, of course, subject to a point of order if the gentleman makes it. Did the gentleman make it in our subcommittee? He could have knocked it out there if he had made the point of order against it.

Mr. DITTER. I am fair to the gentleman from Texas; I have not been personal. I did not make it in committee, but I gave expression to my objection. I have not in any way been guilty of laches, and I have not given up my right at the proper time to exercise it.

Mr. BLANTON. When we went into the full committee of 35 members, did the gentleman make the point of order there and knock it out? No! He could have done it there before it was introduced in the House. Did he do it there?

Mr. DITTER. No; but a member of the committee made objection, not as a point of order, but it should have been notice to the subcommittee sponsoring the reduction that they would be faced with a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. DITTER. For one more question.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman, by making a point of order, would make the taxes 30 cents more than is proposed in the bill, which would raise $4,000,000. If the gentleman makes the point of order, will he then take $4,000,000 off the Federal contribution in the bill? If he will agree to do that, I will go along with him.

Mr. DITTER. No. I still think that would be a hazardous thing to do. There are certain municipal operations that I believe demand proper attention. There is $598,661 that has been sliced off of the estimate of the Budget. May I point out that of that sum almost 50 percent of it is represented by public-welfare projects.

You heard the lady from New Jersey make an eloquent plea for the tuberculosis hospital in the District. I want to point out to you that in addition to the observation she made, the bill would take $10,000 from the children's tuberculosis sanitarium. And may I point out that it will take $3,744 from the small allotment made for the tuberculosis hospital?

Permit me to direct your attention to the matter of street lighting of the city. Personally, I think the more street lighting we have, the more possibility we have of getting hold of the problem of crime. Criminals lurk in the darkness and shadows. I believe we ought to have street lights to compare favorably with other municipalities throughout the country. But still the bill would take $137,600 from that item.

I say that is not warranted. I personally believe that $137,000 should be included in the bill.

Consider, if you will, the plea, as it was presented to the committee by the fire department. Those in charge of the fire-fighting apparatus in the city came to us and told us they had equipment that was 15 years old and more. They advised us that some of that equipment should be replaced, that they should have new equipment, that they should have that kind of equipment which will enable them in time of need to answer the call as it may come to them. They need $30,000 for new equipment. I believe the $30,000 is warranted and necessary. Still the committee, motivated, as I say, with but this one idea of the reduction of taxes from $1.50 to $1.20, say that $30,000 worth of new fire-fighting equipment in the District of Columbia cannot be had.

I believe all of you men are interested in public schools. My own observation is that the public-school system is the thing that contributes more definitely to the stability and strength of American manhood and womanhood than any other one single factor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I shall take 5 minutes additional.

Still the committee would take from the public schools in the matter of fuel and light $25,000, and the only possible justification for that reduction is the observation of one of the members of the committee that he thought coal would be cheaper next year than it has been in the past, whereas, as I personally believe—and I believe I have the support of most of the Members here—my opinion is that it is going to be more expensive than in the past, and instead of requiring less money for coal we will require more.

Like every other city we have a real problem here in Washington with regard to the juveniles. The children, those who either because of their own mistakes or because of a lack of proper environment or because of circumstances beyond their control, have made a misstep here or a misstep there. In many instances they come into the juvenile court, and that court hands them over to an agency for care and development in the hope that the child, the ward of the juvenile court, can be made into a useful member of society. To my mind that is a trust, that is an obligation, that is a commitment definitely placed into your hands and my hands which we cannot evade.

Those children have a right to look to you and to me with the hope that we will aid them to become better men and better women. But the committee says that $40,000 shall be taken from the amount provided for the care of these children, these wards, many of them, most of them, of the juvenile court, so that these wards of the court, these charges of the city, cannot be properly aided in working out their salvation.

I have not touched upon the matter of the library. The library has been reduced. The court has been reduced. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] made the observation a moment ago that taxes were higher now than they were when he came here. I make this observation: I believe there are greater agencies and instrumentalities of municipal government at work today than there were in the days when the gentleman from Texas first came here. If our purpose is to limit, to curtail, to take away those things that have gone for the fullness and the enjoyment of life, if we are to rid the municipal organism of that which will help us to have a more abundant and complete life, then probably this effort of slashing and reducing and denuding is in order. But I do not believe it, and I shall not subscribe to it. I believe that there comes to us a larger degree of social responsibility today than has come to us in the past, and if we are true to the obligations that are ours, we are going to answer that by providing for the municipality here the instrumentalities and organisms needed for the discharge of those obligations.

When the time comes I ask at the hands of the Democrats, as well as at the hands of the Republicans, if you feel that a welfare program, a public-school program, a library program, and these other programs going to make a full, rounded life in the municipality are worth while, to give me support in the amendments I purpose offering. [Applause.]

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a statement showing the cost of operation of the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX].

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be nonpolitical and nonpartisan. We have heard a great deal of discussion recently about the discharge rule. We have heard a lot of debate about officials heading up the Department of Agriculture and the A.A.A.

I can say to some of these gentlemen, without going into personalities in those departments, that they are not entirely erroneous. But what I am interested in and the only problem of American agriculture in which I am interested is the obtaining immediately of higher prices for farm products, lower interest charges, and quicker refinancing of our farm mortgages. Let me call to your attention the fact that the Farm Credit Administration, after more than 1 year of operation, has loaned slightly more than $600,000 out of the $2,000,000,000 Congress made available. At this rate, at this speed—and we have no reason to believe that it will be faster in the future—it will take nearly 4 years to negotiate all the loans for which Congress has provided money. During this time tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of farmers will have lost their farms through foreclosure.

I care not, Mr. Chairman, for the preachment or the propaganda of sidewalk farmers from the city of Chicago and the city of New York. I think what we need most in the Department of Agriculture and in the A.A.A. is some real dirt farmers who know from actual experience, who know from actual contact with the soil, from actual contact with the hard labor of farming, who know from the long training and experience not only of themselves but of their forebears for generations back what it is to earn a dollar and to keep a dollar on these great American farms.

As to the matter of petitions to discharge committees, simply because there are Members of the House who do not believe that this rule should exist today, that it should be modified to require a majority instead of 145 signatures to discharge the committee is no reason why I should disagree with them in other legislative matters or why they should disagree with me in other legislative matters. I respect their views and hope they respect mine. With a House membership of 435 representing 120,000,000 people, it is fair to say that 145 Members represent at least 40,000,000 people. I say that whenever 40,000,000 of our people, through their Representatives in Congress, request that a committee be discharged from further consideration of a certain bill that the bill may be considered and voted upon in the House, then such a bill should be acted upon at the earliest possible time.

Necessity is the mother of invention, Mr. Chairman. Through maladministration of the Farm Loan Act by this same Cabinet official, who is now opposing all inflationary legislation, who is opposing silver legislation, who is opposing the McLeod bill to pay off depositors in closed banks, and who is opposing other measures for the benefit of the common people, who is responsible for the creation, for the set-up, and for the present administration of the farm credit organization—and I refer to the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Henry Morgenthau—our farmers have not been given relief. Then we advocated enactment of the Frazier bill and advocate it now.

In my State of Ohio the administration of the Farm Credit Act has been a farce and a ghastly joke. Had that act been administered as has the Home Loan Bank Act by Democrats or Roosevelt Republicans, then our farmers would not be complaining and protesting today, nor would we need such legislation as we propose to enact in the Frazier bill if given an opportunity. It matters not, Mr. Chairman, what interest rate the farmers have to pay, unless they are given higher prices for their products they simply cannot survive but must eventually drop into that peonage and peasantry of foreign countries. But if you enact the Frazier bill they can hang on until better times arrive.

The proof of the pudding is in the eating thereof. Regardless of what anyone says I want to make a brief comparison of two great branches of the Government—the N.R.A. and the A.A.A. Press dispatches today state: Steel output gained 3 points. This is a news item from the morning's paper. Steel hit 51 percent of normal production. In my own State of Ohio we find that Youngstown steel plants are operating at 59 percent of capacity. We find that in the city of Cleveland steel production is up to 69 percent. We find that steel production is up to 69 percent, and the paper states that steel makers see ahead a period of steadily mounting operations. Some steel plants stopped taking contracts last week due to the effective dates for new prices, fearing a shortage of skilled labor before July 1. We find that the public utilities are mounting, that sales of their securities are advancing. The paper states:

> Public utilities appeared to be in somewhat better demand. American Telephone closed up 2 full points after showing a larger gain at the peak. Its report showed $1.53 a share net for the first quarter. Consolidated Gas was up one half point.
> Steels and motors closed up fractions. The rails were also slightly higher, though Atchison gained more than a full point. Pennsylvania reported the first 2 months this year resulted in a net of 11 cents a share on its stock compared with a deficit the same period a year ago.

We find that there has been a great increase in the employment of labor. The gentleman who mentioned the price of coal a few moments ago is right; coal is higher now than it was a year ago, and coal will be higher 1 year from now than it is at present. Who will be the beneficiaries? Both the mine operators and the miners whose wages have increased in my State from 20 cents an hour a year ago to 40 and 50 cents an hour today.

The N.R.A. is a success for the industrialist, whom it was designed to serve; it is a success for the wage-earner, whom it was designed to serve. It has not been a success for the farmer, because it was not designed to serve the farmer. It has worked a hardship upon the farmers because today they have to pay higher prices for every commodity they buy through increases in the prices of industrial products made possible through the N.R.A. We are not kicking. We want the same relief for our own industry.

What about agriculture today? Two hundred and twenty-seven thousand persons moved to cities from farms in 1933. The number of persons who moved from cities to farms and from villages to farms last year was 951,000, whereas 1,178,000 moved from farms to cities and towns. Practically all of these and a couple of hundred thousand more have gone back to the cities because they want to get higher wages and decent standards of living—the same conditions and standards of living enjoyed by their more fortunate city brethren.

What do we find in the market reports today regardless of what anyone may say or write about this great improvement in the agricultural sections of the country? I cite, for instance, the livestock market in Pittsburgh. Hogs sold yesterday for $4.15 a hundredweight on an average. In the Chicago livestock market they sold for $3.70 a hundredweight on an average. In the New York livestock market, which is the highest in the country, they sold at $4.70 a hundredweight on an average. We find that fat cattle sold in all of these markets from $5 to $6 a hundred.

That means that the farmer back in the Corn Belt in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Nebraska gets around 4 or 5 cents for his fat cattle. He gets from 2 cents to 3½ cents for his hogs. We find this same situation all down the list. Take poultry products. Farmers are selling poultry back in my State for 7, 8, and 9 cents a pound. The farmers are selling eggs for 8, 9, 10, and 12 cents a dozen. Those are the conditions that exist today.

I want someone on this floor to produce a remedy, a corrective measure, a cure, and not debate with idle gestures and fulsome words as to what this will do or what that will do or what has been done, when we know from actual experience and from our actual contact with the soil and the daily market reports that the farmers are infinitely worse off than they were a year ago. [Applause.]

In the recital of current agricultural prices that I have just given, there is practically only one exception. That exception is cotton. In the past year the price of cotton has more than doubled through legislation that this Congress passed in the first session. We placed the capsheaf on this legislation just yesterday, when we voted in favor of the conference report on the Bankhead cotton bill, which, in my judgment, will maintain the price level at a minimum of 10 cents a pound, and we hope 15 or 20 cents a pound.

This legislation was sponsored and supported largely by cotton growers, or at least such Representatives and Senators, who through a lifetime environment with southern soil and its chief product, cotton, recognized what all the experts, crystal gazers, and crackpots in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration refuse or decline to recognize, namely, that the amount of the surplus that moves to market is subject to control and regulation, and refuses to recognize the fallacious doctrine of these addlepated farm doctors that production can be controlled and regulated by reducing acreage and plowing under every third or fourth row.

I might make another exception of tobacco, wherein the prices have nearly doubled, and should mention also that in the case of corn, the price has been doubled, largely, however, through artificial stimulation, by lending the corn grower 45 cents a bushel on the corn that he has locked up and sealed in his cribs. As proof that this system is artificial, I quote yesterday's market, when May corn closed in Chicago at 42½ cents per bushel. In all fairness, however, I must say that the drastic decline of March 16 and 17 was due largely to press dispatches that Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau was opposed to the enactment of silver legislation by this Congress.

But here again we note the disparity between industry and agriculture. A press dispatch from New York, April 17, states:

> Another spasm of weakness in grain markets failed again today to disrupt securities prices. When wheat and other farm staples showed continuation of the acute declines of the previous day, the securities markets were inclined to ignore the development.

In plain English, this means that industrialists have had their businesses so reorganized, so refinanced, cost of production guaranteed, plus a reasonable profit, by N.R.A., that they are not afraid of the big bad wolf of ruinous prices for farm cereals.

This has ever been the case. There is nothing new about it. Since the dawn of history there has been an eternal conflict between agriculture, the basic industry, and manufacturing and commerce, the super industries, and in the end agriculture has always gone down. Hence we ask you to pass the Frazier bill, not to make us a profit but to save our farms, to hold them for us until such time as we shall secure, and we eventually will, price fixing for our farm commodities the same as industry now has.

My own plan contemplates fixing of minimum prices for all basic commodities on a plan similar to that in which prices are fixed for industry. We should fix that price on the basis of an 8-hour day, 5-day week plan for the farmer. He should receive 40 or 50 cents an hour for his labor. Then the price should be fixed upon that basis.

Do not misunderstand me. You and I know that if the farmer actually could be organized and committed to a universal agreement calling for only 8 hours a day, 5 days a week, at 50 cents an hour, the problem would be solved. Surpluses would be an unknown quantity. The movement from the farm to the city would cease. The farmer would not only receive cost of production—he would receive a handsome profit. Why? Merely because in the very nature of his business, his set-up, his equipment, his price levels, he is compelled to toil from sunup till twilight, to put in about 16 hours a day, 8 months out of 12, 7 days a week, with the possible scaling down of 6 to 7 hours on Sunday to do the chores and feed and care for the livestock.

As always, the farmer, the most patriotic citizen of all, the heaviest-burdened taxpayer of all, the man with his nose to the grindstone, is the goat of returning prosperity, and the man who stands under the slit in the umbrella of protection and special privilege for others. He must be content with the paper profits that have been calculated for him by the mild-eyed Wallaces, Tugwells, and Ezekiels, whom some of our Republican friends on the opposite side of the aisle in desperate need for political issues to use against the other great accomplishments of President Roosevelt, choose to class as Communists and plotters who seek to bring about a bloody revolution and replace this form of Government with the Russian form.

In my humble judgment, none of these sophisticated literati, who daily write and speak about social reform, not economic reforms, and who preach and prattle about religion, modern and antique, with the loquacity of a Dr. Cadman, a Dr. Poling, or a Billy Sunday, would not possess the courage to tackle a resentful young sow proudly nursing her first born, much less to start a he-man, two-fisted, submachine-gun revolution.

Just let these fellows alone. They will come out of it in time, and if they fail to regain consciousness, that great President, Franklin D. Roosevelt will snap them out of it. Mr. Roosevelt may be fooled for awhile, but not for long, and when he realizes how the farmers of this country are being duped by a false prosperity that exists only in the minds and utterances of a mistaken and misled Secretary of Agriculture, he will crack down upon these misguided young gentlemen the same as he cracked down on the financial wolves and buzzards who reside on Wall Street, U.S.A.

In the meantime, however, during this transition period, during the interim, farmers are being sacrificed daily by the thousands. They are losing their farms. They are losing their homes. They are losing the hope and ambition that was kindled in their hearts and their minds following the political revolution of 1932. That is why we ask for the Frazier bill. That is why we need the Frazier bill.

The record of the Farm Credit Administration proves in itself that it cannot, or will not, relieve the terrible distress, the gruesome punishment that is meted out to the tillers of the soil by the voracious money lenders and Shylocks. According to reports issued by the Department of Agriculture, the national farm income has been increased 50 percent in the past year. In God's name where is it? I challenge them to prove their assertions. To believe their fantastic statements and grotesque assertions, one would think the farmer was wallowing in clover up to his knees, that he was again gaily bestriding his high-priced tractor, by International Harvester Trust, or by Ford, the money king, attired like unto Solomon in all his glory.

The American farmer may be a sovereign de jure, but he is a slave de facto. As Humpty-Dumpty fell from the wall and could not be replaced with all the king's men and all the king's horses, the American farmer has fallen from his once high position of being an independent citizen, a country gentleman, a member of the landed aristocracy, and a true knight of nature's nobility, and all the pet illusions, the crack-brained theories, the prolific and inspired writings—brilliant metaphor, matchless eloquence, expert juggling of figures and statistics—will not restore him to prosperity, wealth, affluence, and influence in his community.

The only means of restoration that ever can or ever will be found is to refinance every farm mortgage now at 1½ percent interest, 1½ percent paid on the principle to amortize the loan; straight price fixing for all agricultural commodities, including a minimum of $1.25 for wheat, 75 cents for corn, $1 for rye, $1 for barley, 8 cents a pound for hogs, 10 cents for cattle, 25 cents a pound for butter fat, 25 cents a dozen for eggs, and all other commodities in like proportion.

Give us the Frazier bill. Give us the guaranteed prices heretofore mentioned. Give us a code if necessary. Control and regulate the surplus that moves to the terminal markets, the same as you are now doing in cotton. And your great agricultural problem will in the future be only an unpleasant dream, a hideous nightmare, a gaunt specter of the long-forgotten past. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, would it be out of order to call attention to the fact that our old friend, the "LaGuardia of Wisconsin", John Schafer, is back on the floor just now making us a visit? [Applause.]

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I want to talk about a few items in the District of Columbia bill, and I hope that in the consideration of this bill under the 5-minute rule, when amendments are going to be offered to increase certain appropriations which are very vital to the welfare of the District of Columbia, the committee will have in mind that this bill differs from an ordinary appropriation bill in that the money we are going to appropriate comes not out of the Treasury of the United States but out of the taxes paid by the residents of the District of Columbia. There are two or three items in this bill that really ought to be increased, and substantially increased. I wish I had the time to discuss all of them, but I have not.

I call particular attention to the appropriation provided in this bill for the operation, maintenance, and improvement of the reformatory and the workhouse at Lorton, Va., which is situated in my district. The appropriation for the maintenance of that institution has been very drastically cut in many particulars.

I call attention to the fact that this is a very remarkable institution. I do not know of another one like it in all the country. I venture to say there is not another one like it in the country. It is a penitentiary where are confined all the felons convicted in the District of Columbia and serving sentences from 1 year up to life, including murderers, robbers, and burglars, and every kind of desperate felon. The remarkable part about this institution is that these people are confined there without walls and without cells. In the face of that remarkable fact the Appropriations Committee proposes this year to reduce so drastically the appropriation for the confinement of these desperate criminals in my district that it will be necessary to discharge 20 percent of the already inadequate force of guards employed there at this time.

Mr. Chairman, it must be conceded that there is no logic in that, there is no saving, and why this should be attempted at this time is something I am at a loss to understand. I venture to say that if that criminal institution was located in the district of some Members of this House in its present inadequately guarded condition and it was proposed to reduce further the safeguards around those prisoners and the safety of the people living in the community where they are confined, there would be a howl that could be heard all the way from Washington to the Rio Grande.

At the proper time I shall offer an amendment to restore the figures that have been cut by the Appropriations Committee so that this place may have at least the number of guards that are there now, and, in this connection, may I point out some facts about the population of the institution? In 1928 there was a total of 1,001 prisoners. In 1934, after 6 years, the population had increased to 1,940, or practically doubled. It is estimated that for 1935 it will be 2,100. I ask leave in the extension of my remarks to insert a table showing the population there and the increase in population.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The table is as follows:

Daily average population and average maintenance cost

	Reformatory	Workhouse	Total	Increase	Per capita cost per annum Actual:
1927	304	534	838	0
1928	335	666	1,001	163
1929	440	685	1,125	124	$218.50
1930	580	684	1,264	139	206.90
1931	752	689	1,441	177	202.63
1932	853	725	1,578	137	186.29
1933	1,044	785	1,830	252	166.29
Estimated:
1934	1,140	800	1,940	110	180.00

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Not only does the condition in reference to the inadequacy of guards at this prison exist but there is also another condition which exists, and may I say that I have been before the Appropriations Committee and I have been before the Budget Committee, and on both occasions I had with me the chairman of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia who joined me in each instance in pointing out the very dangerous condition that exists at Lorton by reason of the inadequacy of guards and the inadequate means for confining the prisoners.

In past appropriation bills money has been provided for the commencement and construction of a wall which will enclose about 8 acres of this property wherein may be confined 400 of the most dangerous prisoners that are there and who at any moment may effect their liberty and scatter themselves all over Virginia and the District of Columbia. The construction of this wall has been begun and has proceeded to a very considerable extent. This year the authorities of the institution and the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia asked this Congress to appropriate $360,000 of the money of the people of the District of Columbia in order that this wall and enclosure might be completed and that the necessary buildings to confine these desperate criminals might be completed within the wall.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. GOSS. I should like to find out why it is necessary for the Federal Government to spend its money in Virginia for a penitentiary to house criminals from the District of Columbia? Why do we not build a suitable penitentiary in the District of Columbia instead of in the gentleman's district?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I do not know. It was there before I came to Congress.

Mr. GOSS. The gentleman does not want it there?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I do not want it there unless a fence can be put around it.

This wall has been partly completed, and the Commissioners and I have been before the committee and before the Budget Commission asking for the remainder of this appropriation, which is $360,000, to have the project completed. I will offer an amendment at the proper time to include such figure in this bill.

We have heard a good deal of talk this evening on the subject of reduction of taxes in the District of Columbia. I do not see why there should be any discussion of it in general debate. Last year the committee offered a legislative rider fixing the tax rate at $1.70.

I made a point of order against it at that time and it went out, quite properly, and I have no doubt a point of order is going to be made against this legislative rider on this bill, and it will go out. So it is not a proper subject of debate, but when it does go out there will then be an additional revenue of something like three and a half million dollars which may properly and economically be expended for these things in the District of Columbia which are so vitally necessary.

There is one other item I would like to talk about for just a moment in connection with the maintenance of these prisoners at Lorton. The appropriation for the feeding and clothing of these prisoners has been drastically reduced. Of course, we all know that the cost of food this year is going to be higher than the cost of food last year, and this bill contains a provision which will prevent the transfer of funds from one department of the District of Columbia to take care of deficiencies in another department, and unless an adequate amount is provided for the feeding and clothing of these prisoners I do not know where they are going to get the necessary money.

I was rather amused to notice in the report on this bill that the committee recognized the fact that the cost of food is higher than it was last year, and put a provision in the bill that for the feeding of monkeys at the Zoo there shall be an increased appropriation, but for the feeding of prisoners at the Lorton Reformatory there is a reduction in the appropriation. I respectfully submit that if it will cost more to feed monkeys next year than it has cost to feed them this last year, it is also going to cost more to feed the prisoners than it cost last year.

There are two or three other items I should have liked to have time to talk about, but I was unable to secure the necessary time.

There is a Farmers' Market in the District of Columbia for which this Congress appropriated $300,000 for the purchase of land and buildings. Most of it was used in the purchase of the land. The idea of this market is just what a great many of us Members have been trying to get at for a good many years, and that is to arrange it so that the farmer who raises produce may bring it to the city himself and sell it direct to the consumer without the intervention of the middleman, who takes all the profit.

This is a very fine theory and is a very fine thing to do, but what happened in the District of Columbia was that after the appropriation was made and the land purchased, for several years now it has been in such a position that adequate use cannot be made of it because of lack of proper buildings on the site. I went to the Budget Director and to the Appropriations Committee about this matter, and had with me there the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who recognized the desirability of this appropriation, and all we asked for this project was $22,000 so that we could build a roof over the heads of these farmers who come here to sell their produce, and the housewives of the District of Columbia who come to buy. The situation there at the present time is that this ground is in such condition that these men have to hold an umbrella over their heads and the site is covered with mud, and their produce cannot be properly marketed or properly displayed.

I am going to ask the House to appropriate in this bill the sum of $22,000, so that this $300,000 which you have already invested may be made useful. I am sure the Members of the House who, like myself, believe that one of the solutions of our great economic problem with respect to the farmer is that he may get his produce direct to the consumer without the intervention of a middleman, will agree with me that this mere pittance of $22,000, to be paid by the taxpayers of the District of Columbia, may quite properly be included in this bill.

I want to call the attention of the Committee to an appropriation which also has the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, which they have asked for, and which we have asked the Budget Director to send down, an appropriation of $10,000 to make the preliminary surveys for the much-needed construction of a new Chain Bridge at Great Falls.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein certain tables referred to by me.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY].

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise my remarks and include therein a letter from Mr. John P. Scully, State relief administrator of Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, I believe that shortly the President will ask for an appropriation for the continuation of the C.C.C. camps in the United States—at least for another year. I feel that this will meet with little or no opposition, because Members of Congress, as well as countless thousands throughout our Nation, have now come to the realization of the very beneficial influence of these camps upon the youth of our Nation. This social undertaking has been tried and tested, and I believe it is now a matter of almost universal agreement that it is one of the brightest chapters of the recovery program.

Perhaps the most terrible effects of the depression have been felt by the youth of this Nation. Those young men who had not yet reached or had just passed the age of full maturity suffered, as helpless victims, the most severe ravages of this collapse of our economic structure. Countless thousands of these young men saw their expectations of a proper schooling and education brought to a premature and untimely end. Countless other thousands, who had just left behind them the shelter of their alma maters, found themselves thrust into a hostile and unkind world. Fresh from the classroom and the athletic field, they found themselves hopelessly handicapped in the quest of employment. For of what avail was the education they had gained against the training, experience, and maturer years of others in quest of employment?

Shut off entirely from welfare aid—in most instances entirely shut out of even the possibility of employment by the fact that first preferences for the all too few opportunities of employment was quite properly given to married men—it was indeed a situation to demoralize even men of more mature years and less plastic and impressionable minds. Where there should have been the faith, hope, and enthusiasm of youth there was only bitterness and discouragement, and the minds of the future citizens of our Nation were being set in a cast of utter demoralization and cynicism.

This was surely a sorry and direful condition, fraught with the possibilities of grave and most serious consequences, not alone to the future of these many thousands of young men but also to the future of our Nation itself. Faced with this devastating scourge, our great humanitarian President conceived this plan whereby many of these young men might not only engage in gainful and useful occupations but also might continue their educations and contribute to the support of their needy families. This Congress, although there were many rumblings of impedist criticism, passed with an overwhelming vote this far-visioned plan of the President.

Today the brilliant success of this plan is almost universally conceded. However, because it has operated so effectively and successfully it has operated quietly, and has, to a great degree, escaped the commendatory notice it so rightfully deserves. If there are no objections, I shall insert into the RECORD this letter recently received from Mr. John T. Scully, State Relief Administrator of Massachusetts, quoting from a letter sent to the President by his very capable assistant, Mrs. Lauretta C. Bresnahan. This letter sets forth more eloquently than I could the wonderful results brought about by the Civilian Conservation Corps.

FEDERAL EMERGENCY RELIEF ADMINISTRATION OF MASSACHUSETTS,
Boston, March 8, 1934.

Hon. ARTHUR D. HEALEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN HEALEY: It has been my good fortune to have had the experience of placing 5,200 boys in Civilian Conservation Corps camps since October 1, 1933, and I have seen and talked with a number of these boys who have returned from camp.

The happiness of the parents of these boys and the financial assistance given to them, together with the physical improvement of the boys, is the greatest argument I know of for the continuance and extension of this C.C.C. work.

The lady who assisted me admirably in this work of enrollment, Mrs. Lauretta C. Bresnahan, wrote to the President on December 21, 1933, and I have asked her to let me use a part of her letter, because I think it expresses my views better than I could do so myself.

"I wonder if you realize the wonderful thing you have done for the youth of our country. Imagine these thousands of young boys, many of them just out of high school, with plans made to enter college or secure some position to make a living for themselves, and then to have this terrible depression come on us, and nothing for them to do but hang around. No wonder the mothers were frantic with worry and fear for their boys and the terrible temptations they were exposed to. No one but a mother or father can really realize the danger of idle hands and too much leisure. It needs no stretch of the imagination to realize what great joy you have brought into the homes of these boys when you established these camps. Then, again, there is the financial help they were able to give their parents. Many of the boys' checks have gone for the rent, for doctors' bills for the mother or father, for coal, and even in some cases I have known of some of the families who have kept off the welfare by the money these boys earn. The beauty of the whole scheme is that these boys are really earning the money, for I am given to understand that they are doing work as well as any man, and work that will be of lasting benefit to the country.

"Day after day I receive messages from the parents of how the boys like the camp, what wonderful letters they are writing home, how they are gaining weight, how they like the work, etc.

"I wonder if you know that a goodly number of young fellows and girls were getting married so that they would be eligible for the welfare aid. This seems terrible to me. Imagine starting married life under those conditions. What a calamity. The C.C.C. camps aided in putting a stop to all that.

"I have been intending to visit one of the camps in Massachusetts for the last 2 months, but I did not get an opportunity to do so until a week ago last Sunday, and I certainly picked a cold day. It was zero weather, but I felt I would like to see one of the camps before I wrote you. I was delighted with the camp. The commanding officer took me all through. In the recreation room one of the boys was tuning in on the radio, another group were around the piano, several boys were at the billiard table, others were reading, and they were so nice and warm and comfortable that you would never suspect that the wind was howling around the barracks.

"In the sleeping quarters some of the boys were resting, others just sitting around. In the mess hall the tables were all set for supper. They had a lovely supper ready. It looked so tempting I was sorry I could not accept their pressing invitation to stay and join them. The boys told me they could not have better meals at home. Everything was nice and clean. The cook took me into the kitchen and the storeroom.

"Next I visited the infirmary. Two of the boys were in bed with a cold, and another chap was getting his leg rubbed.

"I have discovered that the whole secret of the success of the camps lies with the commanding officers. Some I know have caught the spirit of your idea in establishing these camps, others have not, and therefore the boys in their camps are probably not so contented.

"I have had many of the boys who left camp ask if they could not possibly get back. Boys who have deserted. I have found from my observations that many of the boys left shortly after entering the camps and I can understand what was the matter. These boys were inoculated three times, and it made many of them feel sick and they felt so mean and homesick that no matter what happened they must get home. Since coming home they realize what they have missed and are anxious to go back. I hope we will be able to return them some day.

"As for what the camps are doing for the boys themselves, that is to me the most wonderful thing. The boys come in to enroll looking pale and discouraged and with that terrible look on their young faces which plainly says, 'Oh, what's the use?' A few weeks later these same boys drop into the office accompanied by a number of their pals, who, after hearing of the glories of the camp life, are anxious to see if they can enroll. What a change in the boys—bright of eye, happy looking, warmly clothed, and full of stories of the camp life, and, of course, I have to see the muscle they have developed. They will not be afraid of work when they finish at the camps. Some of them already feel they will be able to go out and get jobs at the work they are now doing. What a joy to the mothers to see this change in their boys.

"So much for the boys who were lucky enough to get into the camps; but what are we going to do for the hundreds of boys who are coming in here day after day or going to their town officials asking to be enrolled? I have on hand hundreds of names of boys who have come into the office or whose parents have written us asking for an opportunity to go to camp. Then I daily receive letters from the various cities and towns asking if there will be any further openings for the boys. You see, there are so many married men out of work that the C.W.A. seems to have no place for the younger men, and the C.C.C. camps are their only hope. I do hope that you will open more camps the first of the year so we can place these young fellows.

"There is another group of men who seem to be rather forgotten, and they feel it, too. The man who is over 25 and unmarried. He also seems to have great difficulty in getting work. Would it be possible to have a camp where these men could go and work?"

If the opportunity presents itself, I hope that you will look with favor upon any measure to extend the work of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Respectfully yours,

JOHN T. SCULLY,
Director Federal Emergency Relief Administration.

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

AN ANALYSIS OF THE FRAZIER BILL

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, the bill introduced by Senator FRAZIER (S. 457) and the companion bill introduced in the House (H.R. 2855) have received much publicity throughout the country and particularly among farmers whom the bill is designed to assist.

I was born and reared on a farm and lived there until I was grown. I have owned much farm land all of my life. I make this statement in order to qualify my interest and sympathy for the farmers of my country. Since I came to Congress I have joined in every sound effort which I thought would be for the benefit of the farmers of the country.

In 1916 I cooperated with those charged with the responsibility of preparing and reporting the first good-roads bill. While this bill was of great benefit to everyone, whether they lived in the city or the country, it was of first importance to the farmers throughout the country, because it connected up every rural community with a marketing center and reduced the cost of marketing farm products.

One of the first speeches I made in Congress was in support of extension of rural mail service so as to give the farmers the same facilities as are enjoyed by those living in cities and towns. As a result of the joint efforts of those interested in the extension of this service, the appropriations for rural mail have been more than doubled in the past 20 years, and the amount carried in the present Post Office appropriation bill for that purpose for the next fiscal year amounts to $82,902,500.

During my first term in Congress I had the privilege of serving on the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, and shared the responsibility of preparing, reporting, and enacting the first rural credit bill approved July 17, 1916. Under this bill the Federal land banks were created and loans authorized to be made to the farmers of the country at low rates of interest, payable upon the amortization plan. I have always insisted that if section 15 of this act were amended so as to authorize loans to be made direct to farmers rather than their making application through local loan associations, it was one of the most constructive pieces of legislation for the benefit of farmers ever enacted by Congress. Amendments have been made from time to time, and authority under certain contingencies has been granted to make these loans direct through legislation enacted by the present Congress.

Under this act 12 Federal land banks have been established and loans aggregating $2,383,369,267.03 have been made to farmers up to April 16, 1934. Under legislation enacted during the last Congress the interest on Federal farm land bank bonds was guaranteed and under more recent legislation during the present Congress the principal to the amount of $2,000,000,000, as well as the interest, has been authorized to be guaranteed by the Government, which will result in reducing the rate of interest which Federal farm land bank bonds will bear, and the rate of interest which farmers will have to pay upon their loans. Authority is granted to exchange these bonds for outstanding mortgages and 3¼ percent guaranteed Federal land bank bonds are being readily accepted in exchange for outstanding farm mortgages.

The Farm Credit Administration reports that approximately $1,100,000,000 was loaned by all institutions under the Farm Credit Administration from May 1, 1933, through April 13, 1934. This includes all loans through the Federal land banks and other agencies authorized to extend credit to farmers, which aggregated more than $640,000,000. In connection with the making of loans by the Federal land banks, Congress authorized an emergency appropriation of $200,000,000 to take care of distressed or foreclosed mortgages or where the mortgages were in process of foreclosure.

In addition credits are being extended through agricultural short term and intermediate associations which includes livestock. It will thus be seen that every form of credit is being extended to the farmers of the country both upon real estate and on livestock and agricultural products.

Recently Congress enacted legislation to extend crop-production loans to farmers authorizing the sum of $40,000,000 to be made available for that purpose. This was for the purpose of aiding the farmers who are in such distressed condition financially that they are unable to finance themselves through the present crop year. Other legislation, including other forms of credit, have been authorized to be extended to farmers and I make this review of this legislation for the purpose of showing that the farmers of the country are under active consideration and are not discriminated against by the present administration.

In this connection I might add that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was created during the last session of Congress and at the present session, as in the case of bonds of the Federal land banks, the principal of the bonds, to the extent of $2,000,000,000, as well as the interest, of Home Owners' Loan Corporation bonds is guaranteed by the Government, which makes them readily exchangeable for real-estate mortgages held against those who live in cities and towns.

With this review of legislation enacted for the benefit of the farmers I come to an analysis of the so-called "Frazier bill" (S. 457) to liquidate and refinance agricultural indebtedness of the farmers. The bill in substance authorizes the refinancing and liquidation of mortgages at 1½ percent interest and 1½ percent paid annually upon the amortization plan applied to the reduction of the principal, and 3 percent interest on livestock.

Section 3 authorizes the Farm Loan Board to make farm loans secured by first mortgages on farms to an amount equal to the fair value of the farms and 50 percent of the value of insurable buildings and improvements thereon through the Federal land banks and national farm-loan associations and to make all necessary rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of the act. The Farm Loan Board is authorized to refinance and take up chattel mortgages at the rate of 3 percent per annum to an amount equal to 65 percent of the market value thereof, and such loans are to be made for 1 year and are renewable from year to year.

The funds with which to liquidate and refinance these mortgages, both upon real-estate and chattel mortgages, is provided by issuing farm-loan bonds bearing interest at the rate of 1½ percent where secured by mortgages on farms and 3 percent when secured by chattel mortgages on livestock. Authority is granted the Farm Loan Board to sell these bonds at par to any individual or corporation or to any State, national, or Federal Reserve bank, or to the Treasurer of the United States. Finally, it is made the duty of the Federal Reserve banks to invest their available surplus and net profits in such farm-loan bonds.

In the event farm-loan bonds are not readily purchased the Farm Loan Board is directed to present the remainder to the Federal Reserve Board, and the Board is authorized to deliver to the Federal Farm Loan Board Federal Reserve notes to the amount equal to the par value of such bonds presented to it. Such farm-loan bonds are to be held by the Federal Reserve Board as security in lieu of any other security reserved.

The bill authorizes the creation of a Board of Agriculture consisting of one member from each State, elected by the mortgagee farmers of the State at a mass convention of the farmers called for that purpose. From this board an executive committee is to be appointed.

The bill contemplates the supervision and cooperation of the Board of Agriculture, consisting of one member from each State, acting through the executive committee in administering the provisions of the act including the appraisements of the property offered as security for loans. This would result in the making of loans from funds made available by the Government through representatives of the mortgagees themselves, which I am sure, upon reflection, no one with good business judgment would endorse as being fundamentally sound.

As I have already stated, no one is in deeper sympathy with legislation for the benefit of the farmers. This bill has not been considered or reported by any committee. It is new and far-reaching and not only the bill, but its details, should receive the most careful consideration of a committee. Legislation of this character, as everyone with experience in Congress knows, cannot be perfected on the floor. As I have already stated, there has been a vast amount of legislation enacted for the benefit of the farmers, and amendments may be offered on the floor which are in conflict with and would nullify the legislation previously enacted.

The following criticisms have been made against the bill. First it is urged that the rate of interest—1½ percent per annum and 1½ percent per annum applied to the reduction of the principal—should be increased to the amount that the Government is required to pay on its outstanding obligations and now averages around 3¼ percent per annum. In the event the farmers of the country are given the same credit advantages as industry or other classes of citizens, without discrimination, I feel sure they will be content.

The second criticism, which is very serious, is that loans are authorized to be made to the full amount of the fair value of the land and 50 percent of the value of the insurable buildings and improvements. It is urged that in the event this bill is enacted immediately all marginal lands throughout the entire United States, through the mortgage process, will be sold to the Government. Everybody appreciates, of course, that no individual, insurance company, or mortgage company would hazard loans on farm lands up to the full face value. They would be in receiverships within a short time. This is one of the reasons why a bill of this character should receive the earnest detailed consideration of the Committee on Agriculture. Information should be secured from the Department of Agriculture as to the extent of farm loans, estimated now to be around $9,000,000,000 secured by real-estate mortgages, and in addition to approximately $4,000,000,000 of other indebtedness.

Every Member of Congress knows that the Frazier bill has no chance to be enacted during the present session of Congress. The President has indicated that he is unalterably opposed to it, and if it passes the House it does not stand any chance of enactment in the Senate. If it has a chance of being enacted in the Senate, why has not the Agricultural Committee of the Senate reported the bill and why has the bill not been considered? It was first introduced March 13, 1933, more than a year ago. Everyone knows, therefore, that an effort to secure consideration of the bill at this time is an idle gesture.

For the reasons I have given and for the additional reason that the consideration of this bill by the House might endanger consideration of other legislation in behalf of the farmers, I think that we should go as far as we can by amending the present Federal Farm Loan Act so as to make loans up to the amount of 66⅔ percent of the appraised value of the land and up to 40 percent of the value of the permanent insured improvements. I think the interest rate should then be reduced, as the law provides, so that the farmers may have to pay no more than the Government has to pay for the money, which rate fluctuates, as everyone knows, and may be as low as 3 percent.

I favor making it entirely optional as to how applications for loans may be made. I have always contended that local loan associations serve no useful purpose, and that loans should be permitted, as is now the case under certain conditions, to be made direct. If local loan associations were abolished, and all loans made direct, action would be expedited, which would increase the volume of business of the land banks, and proportionately reduce the expense of making these loans. I favor perfecting the present legislation in every way, but I feel sure there is no chance of passing the Frazier bill which would reduce the interest rate to 1½ percent and loan up to the full value of the farm lands. No one in my State would make such a loan. If he did, he would be bankrupt in 6 months. The Government should not be asked to do more than an individual would do. The Government should lend its credit at the lowest rate of interest it can borrow the money for, but, I repeat, if this bill were passed it would result in every farmer who owns marginal and other low-class lands making a mortgage to the Government, and through such a mortgage sell his land to the Government.

No man in Congress has more consistently voted for sound legislation for the farmers than I have. I do not want, for political purposes, to vote an idle gesture which I know will merit a veto and which will endanger the enactment of other legislation beneficial to the farmers.

I do not fear inflation of the currency through the issuance of Federal Reserve notes, as provided in the bill. The additional money issued would be beneficial. However, the Government cannot borrow, except temporarily, at 1½-percent interest. There is no man in the country who can successfully defend the three propositions in the Frazier bill:

First, the making of farm loans at 1½-percent interest, when the Government cannot borrow money on long-term obligations for less than 3¼-percent interest;

Second, the loaning up to the full fair value of the farm lands, which would result in all the low-grade lands being sold to the Government through the mortgage route; and

Third, the creation of a board which is to exercise control over the administration of the bill to the extent of providing for the amount of the appraisals of the lands.

No man of experience who analyzes the bill, for the reasons above given, will endorse it without it being considered and perfected through committee amendments, and believing that it endangers the consideration of other legislation in the interest of the farmers, I prefer to make every effort to secure more liberal legislation for the farmers, within our reach, rather than to make an idle gesture and fight a sham battle which I know will be of no benefit to them.

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE].

THE HOUSE SHOULD CONCUR IN THE SENATE AMENDMENTS TO THE INTERNAL REVENUE TAX BILL

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call to the attention of the House at this time some of the amendments placed on the revenue bill recently passed by the House. I am in hearty accord with each of the amendments placed on this bill by the Senate and feel that each amendment greatly improves this measure from the standpoint of the rights of the masses of the people.

CONSOLIDATED RETURNS

The Revenue Act of 1918, as passed by the House, prohibits the filing of consolidated returns. As amended in the Senate this bill provided for filing consolidated returns. However, section 240 of the law required all corporations having Government contracts to file separate returns and to pay taxes upon said contract. The law requiring the filing of separate returns upon a Government contract was omitted from the 1921 Revenue Act and all subsequent revenue bills. The revenue bill of 1928, as passed by the House, denied the right to file consolidated returns but this provision was eliminated in the Senate during the consideration of this revenue bill of 1932. A compromise was effected resulting in the levying of additional tax of three fourths of 1 percent on the consolidated net income. This additional tax was increased to 1 percent by the National Industrial Recovery Act.

The subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee this session in studying this question said:

> Your subcommittee recommends that this permission be withdrawn.

There is no denying that the right to file consolidated returns by the large holding companies gives them many great advantages over their small independent competitors. Practically all tax experts agree that this advantage will amount to anywhere from $50,000,000 to $300,000,000 during a year. This places the small corporation and independent merchants at a great disadvantage in trying to compete with their large chain-store competitors. Under this law the losses incurred by the large chain stores through their subsidiaries in localities where competition is very keen may be offset through the filing of consolidated returns. Most of these large chain stores which head up through holding corporations are chartered in Delaware and other States permitting very liberal or wide-open provisions in carrying on their business, and under this law we find the following provision:

> In the case of a corporation the amount received as dividends from a domestic corporation is subject to taxation under this title. * * *

Under this provision these corporations are exempt from paying taxes on income derived from dividends upon all stock held in other corporations and in this way millions of dollars are distributed by these concerns and escape taxation. The small tax of 1 percent placed by this bill upon those corporations filing consolidated returns is nothing like a sufficient amount to require of them as compensation for the rights given. According to the experts this tax could be raised to 4 percent and still the advantages would be so great in favor of the holding companies that the ruthless mergers and consolidations being forced by them will continue in increasing numbers and the independents would continue to be put out of business. The right to file consolidated returns is especially felt in depression years for the effect is to allow the loss of one corporation to reduce the net income and tax of another, and during a depression more losses occur.

Another result is to postpone the payment of the tax. This is because there is no profit recognized for tax purposes on intercompany transactions, and profits on a product on the consolidated group passing through the hands of different members of the group are not taxed until the produce is disposed of to persons outside of the group.

Prior to the amendments last year a corporation could carry forward a net loss from year to year, thus the consolidated group would not have this advantage; however, since this right has been repealed, the advantage of filing consolidated returns is now much greater on a comparative basis. I insert at this point some information furnished me by experts, as follows:

> The following data have been compiled from the statistics of income prepared by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, Treasury Department, and show the relationship in income and other pertinent information of consolidated groups in comparison with that of separate corporations:

[1] Net loss.

The foregoing statistics disclose some very interesting phases of the operations of consolidated corporations. While approximately 6 percent of all the corporations of the country are in the consolidated group, more than one half of the business transacted by all the corporations of the country was done by consolidated corporations. The percentage of profit made upon gross sales is also very interesting. It is to be noted that the percentage of gross profit made by consolidated corporations upon their gross sales is between 2 percent and 2½ percent in excess of the gross profit made by separate corporations. While Bureau statistics of income do not afford sufficient data to permit of a computation of the net profit from operations, it is a well-known fact that many industries realize a net income from operations of only 2 to 3 percent of their gross sales. It can thus be seen that the margin of advantage enjoyed by the consolidated group is sufficient to put its competitors (single corporations) out of business. The excess percentages of gross profit realized by the consolidated group is also reflected in a like result in their statutory net income.

For example, the percentage of gross profit of the consolidated group for 1928 was 23.67 percent, and of separate corporations, 21.55 percent, or an advantage of 2.12 percent. While the percentage of statutory net income of the consolidated groups was 6.54 percent, separate corporations realized only 4.29 percent, thus giving the consolidated group an advantage of 2.25 percent. The percentages of advantage enjoyed by the consolidated groups for 1929 and 1930 were as follows: Gross profit (1929), 2.36 percent, (1930), 2.51 percent; statutory net income (1929), 3.33 percent, (1930), 3.29 percent.

The advantages enjoyed by the consolidated groups are translated into totals by comparison of the total net profit and the total sales of consolidated groups with similar figures for separate corporations. While consolidated corporations for 1930 transacted less than 40 percent of the business of all corporations, the statutory net income of this group was 54.61 percent. For the year 1929 the total business was 42.81 percent of the business done by all corporations, yet the statutory net income was 59.68 percent of the total statutory net income of all corporations. For 1930 it should be noted that separate corporations sustained a total statutory net loss of $307,107,855, whereas consolidated corporations realized a statutory net income of $1,858,325,711.

There are those who will contend that the excess margin of profit realized by consolidated groups is due to unity of control and management, thereby resulting in elimination of waste and inefficiency. There are other factors, however, which enable them to realize greater profits than separate corporations. Many of the consolidated groups constitute practically a monopoly in their trade territory, and are therefore able to demand much higher prices for their products. Other groups by reason of the larger resources at their command are liable to undersell their competitors, thus bringing about a condition that enables them to purchase the small competitive concerns at bankrupt prices after which the purchaser raises his product to normal levels.

Thus it may be seen from the above information some of the tremendous advantages gained through the filing of consolidated returns by these large holding corporations. By a vote of 58 to 19 another body refused to reconsider the question of striking out the right to file consolidated returns.

On April 9 I called the attention of the House to the results of the study I have made of the income-tax returns of the different aircraft concerns selling the Government supplies, and I found that five of these holding corporations have deprived the Government of $2,046,967.28 because of this law permitting these large holding corporations to file consolidated returns, as follows:

You will note that the above chart does not include complete information on these different companies for the years covered, which indicates that these concerns have saved much more than indicated in the above chart. In the interest of fairness to all taxpayers alike, we should go on record in favor of instructing the conferees of the House to concur in this Senate amendment.

PUBLICITY FOR TAX RETURNS

This question of publicity of income-tax returns has been debated at great length during the past several sessions. It has been called to our attention that in many instances employees and chiefs of bureaus in the Department of Internal Revenue have made rules as to one particular corporation which they refuse to apply to another corporation or other corporations and have in this way shown favoritism, which certainly merits the most serious consideration of this Congress, and publicity should be given to the mode and manner of filing and passing upon all income-tax returns and all transactions concerning them. There is no doubt but what publicity for income-tax returns would cause the payment of millions of dollars additional taxes into the Treasury because of fraud, collusion, and the covering up now being practiced in the filing of such returns. In Texas, as well as all other States I know of, all tax renditions are public, and I am sure that the people would rise up in their might and demand that they be continued to be open to the public should anyone try to keep such information secret.

For the past several sessions another body has repeatedly voted to require publicity for income-tax returns, and the House has modified these amendments, in effect eliminating this provision.

Rules and regulations could easily be drawn by the Secretary of the Treasury permitting the examination of income-tax returns, and the House should concur in the Senate amendment bringing about this result. [Applause.]

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SEARS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H.R. 9061, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

RICHARD A. CHAVIS

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the bill H.R. 2032 (Rept. No. 1274), for the relief of Richard A. Chavis, for printing under the rule.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed without amendment to a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H.Con.Res. 36. Rescinding the action of the Vice President and the Speaker of the House in signing the enrolled bill H.R. 3521, and amending same.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 828) to authorize boxing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2084) granting and confirming to the East Bay Municipal Utility District, a municipal utility district of the State of California and a body corporate and politic of said State, and a political subdivision thereof, certain lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

NATIONAL OLD AGE PENSION ASSOCIATION

Mr. PATMAN. February 10, 1934, I made a speech in the House in which I disclosed that the man, J. E. Pope, the head of the National Old Age Pension Association has spent a lifetime in the business of defrauding innocent people who were in distress. He started out in Houston, Tex., in 1904 with a scheme to defraud distressed home owners; then in 1917–18, unemployed; then in 1922–24, innocent widows in an oil fraud scheme and from that to others as recent as 1929. The Committee on Labor has been investigating his activities but has not made a report. I testified before that committee and showed that during the last 30 years this man who signs his name as "Dr. J. E. Pope" is not a doctor; that he has been convicted of about 15 counts in 30 years for using the mails to defraud; that the scheme he is now using is not in the interest of old-age pensions but in the interest of Pope, just another fraudulent scheme.

FRAUD ORDER CITATION ISSUED

In this recent scheme of his, which I exposed in February, he has been taking in from $600 to $900 a day. Since the Committee on Labor had not made a report and nothing further was being done to stop him, I requested the Solicitor General of the Postoffice Department to issue a fraud order against him and prohibit him from using the mails. The Solicitor General agreed to issue a citation to him to show cause why a fraud order should not issue, provided I would furnish the evidence at the hearing, which I agreed to do. The citation was issued April 6, 1934, to show cause on April 18, 1934, why the fraud order should not be issued. I was ready, today, the 18th, to furnish the proof, but Pope filed with the Solicitor General the following affidavit:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

The undersigned, J. E. Pope, being first duly sworn, says:

That he is the organizer and responsible head of the National Old Age Pension Association and Dr. J. E. Pope, national chairman, of Washington, D.C., which concern and party were called upon on April 6, 1934, by the Solicitor of the Post Office Department to show cause on April 19, 1934, why a fraud order should not be issued against those names, and that affiant has full authority to bind the said concern by this stipulation;

That in order to preclude the necessity for the said Solicitor to give further consideration at this time to the question of the issuance of a fraud order, affiant hereby voluntarily stipulates that the said National Old Age Pension Association, its successors and assigns, and/or J. E. Pope will not hereafter send out or cause to be sent out, either at Washington or elsewhere, by any means whatsoever, any solicitations or requests for fees or for "membership dues", and will immediately destroy all blanks now on hand containing solicitations for fees or "membership dues"; and further that affiant will promptly write each person who hereafter communicates with affiant respecting said National Old Age Pension Association or respecting fees or "membership dues" therein, instructing all such persons that they shall not seek additional members in said National Old Age Pension Association and that they shall not accept or send to said National Old Age Pension

Association or to affiant any "membership dues", fees, or moneys of any kind whatsoever, advising all such persons that the membership plan of said National Old Age Pension Association, involving the sending in of a dime or of any other sum of money whatsoever, has been absolutely discontinued and abandoned, and that such person shall advise all persons interested not to send any more money whatsoever to the National Old Age Pension Association, to affiant, or to their successors or assigns;

That affiant further voluntarily stipulates that he will not hereafter use the mails in furtherance of any enterprise similar to that heretofore operated by him under the name National Old Age Pension Association;

And affiant further voluntarily stipulates that in the event there should come to the attention of the Post Office Department any evidence showing that he has violated the terms of this stipulation by continuing to solicit fees, "membership dues", or moneys of any kind in furtherance of the said National Old Age Pension Association, its successors, or assigns, the Post Office Department may issue a fraud order against the names so employed without further notice to affiant, the National Old Age Pension Association, or their successors or assigns;

Affiant understands that the filing of this affidavit with the Solicitor of the Post Office Department in no way relieves him of responsibility for any violation of 18 United States Code 338 or 88 that may have been involved in the operation through the mails of the aforesaid National Old Age Pension Association enterprise, but the filing of this affidavit shall not be construed as an admission that said statutes have been violated;

And further affiant saith not.

J. E. POPE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me a notary public in and for the district aforesaid, this 18th day of April 1934.

[SEAL] NEENAH LAUB, Notary Public.

My commission expires September 14, 1938.

STOPPED FROM USING MAILS

This will stop him from using the mails; but what about the money he has collected from old, poor, innocent people all over this Nation in violation of the law? He should be sent to the penitentiary for life. He is a habitual criminal. The Department of Justice should give this case immediate attention and cause his arrest and trial at an early date.

COMMITTEE GAVE CAREFUL CONSIDERATION

The Committee on Labor gave this matter careful consideration; the members of that committee have been very busy and have not had the time to prepare a report. I hope the report is finished at an early date in order that law-enforcement officers may be aided in bringing this man to justice.

NOT A DOCTOR

Every ex-convict in Oklahoma can become a doctor tomorrow morning the same way Pope got to be a doctor. He is what you would call a "self-confessed" foot doctor or toe-nail manicurist. Many of his poor victims believed he was a rich retired physician who wanted to do the old people a favor by advocating legislation in their interest.

SOLICITOR COMMENDED

I want to commend Mr. Karl Crowley, Solicitor of the Post Office Department, for his splendid cooperation in this case. He has performed his duty fairly and impartially, which has resulted in stopping the fraudulent activities of this man.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Is this the same person who has been writing us threatening letters?

Mr. PATMAN. He is the same man. I ask unanimous consent to put this affidavit in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CORRECTION ON A VOTE

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to correct the RECORD and the Journal. In the RECORD of April 16, 1934, on roll call 127, a quorum call, my name does not appear as among those not answering to their names, and on roll call 128 I am recorded as voting "yea", when, as a matter of fact, I was not present. I ask that the RECORD and the Journal be corrected accordingly.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the RECORD and the Journal will be corrected in accordance with the statement of the gentleman from Connecticut.

There was no objection.

VETERAN LEGISLATION—VETOED BY THE PRESIDENT—PASSED OVER THE VETO—WHAT IT IS AND WHAT IT IS NOT

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the question of veterans' legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, it has now been nearly a month since we passed over the President's veto the veteran legislation which was the subject of so much debate here and so much discussion throughout the country.

One would think, after all this debate and discussion, that the people generally would know just what this legislation is about. The fact is, however, that newspaper editorials, correspondence with our constituents, and even news articles which we have been receiving for 3 weeks, indicate that the people have been just as much misinformed about this legislation as they were about the Economy Act at the special session.

The legislation on which the President's veto was overridden has been referred to in some of this correspondence, and in these articles and editorials, as everything from the bonus to the restoration of the non-service-connected cases, and it may not be out of place to state again, for the benefit of some of our constituents, just what this legislation is.

The Senate amendments provided for full restoration of service-connected World War disability cases, both those whose service connection appeared on the face of the veteran's war record and those whose service connection had been established by law by competent proof outside the record. The latter were the so-called "presumptive cases." The Senate amendments also provided for the reinstatement of the pension status of veterans of the Spanish War and the restoration of their pensions to the extent of 90 percent of what they were receiving prior to the passage of the Economy Act. The Senate amendments proposed to restore the right of hospitalization to those veterans who were financially unable to pay for their own hospitalization. Restoration of the disability allowance of a limited class of World War emergency officers was also proposed. It provided for reinstatement of the pension rights of widows and children of disabled veterans who have died since the passage of the Economy Act and who would have been entitled to such pensions except for the Economy Act.

The Senate original amendments were not adopted as a whole, but only in part. By a margin of 1 vote, the Taber amendment was substituted, and, after the Senate receded from its original amendments and adopted the Taber amendment, the House concurred.

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE SENATE AMENDMENTS AND THE TABER AMENDMENT

The difference between the original Senate amendments and the Taber amendment thereto is principally a difference in the amount of restoration. The Taber amendment contained nothing contrary in principle to the original Senate amendments.

The Taber amendment, which is now the law, provides full restoration of service-connected World War disability cases (where the connection is shown by the record), 75 percent restoration for presumptive cases (where the service connection has been established by law as it existed prior to the passage of the Economy Act), and 75 percent restoration of Spanish War veteran pensions. It contains practically the same provisions as to death compensation to widows and dependents and precisely the same provisions as to hospitalization as the original Senate amendments.

No nonservice cases were involved in any of this legislation. In fact there has never been any legislation introduced in Congress for that purpose. And, of course, the payment of the bonus was not involved, either.

The inaccurate statements that have been made in regard to this legislation have not been made through ignorance. They have been made deliberately, for the purpose of misinforming the people, and they are a part of the original propaganda of the National Economy League. The ridiculous statements as to the cost of this legislation are also propaganda. The total additional cost, according to the official statement of the Veterans' Administration, will be $83,000,000, and not any of the fanciful figures that have been variously stated in newspaper stories and editorials. These imaginary figures have run all the way from $125,000,000 to $250,000,000, and have been repeated continuously and deliberately in the face of the Veterans' Administration's official statement.

Altogether it has been a great victory, a just victory, and a humane victory. It will redound to the benefit not only of the sick, the disabled, and the aged veterans, but to the benefit of their States and their communities and to everyone with whom they come in daily contact. And it will not ruin the country.

The comparatively small increase made necessary by this legislation is not borne by the taxpayers of the several States, as would have been the case had we failed to pass this legislation and had left the States and municipalities to bear the burden of taking care of the sick and disabled who had been cut off and left destitute by the Economy Act.

The expense of all this legislation is borne by the Federal taxpayer alone—those who are prosperous and fortunate enough to be able to pay a Federal income tax and who can afford the luxury of purchasing articles on which import and excise duties are charged.

All Federal expense is paid out of Federal revenue, and all Federal revenue is raised by Federal income, estate, import, and excise taxes, and by nothing else.

In my own State of Oregon the total Federal income tax paid in 1932 was less than $2,500,000. The Federal revenue received by Oregon that year in World War disability compensation and in pensions to Spanish War and Civil War veterans resident in the State of Oregon was more than $5,000,000—and this figure did not include any compensation to non-service World War cases. The economy act cut that revenue down 54 percent, resulting in a loss of approximately $3,000,000. In addition to that, it injured our two great veteran hospitals at Portland and Roseburg by curtailing their staffs and throwing out hundreds of worthy sick and disabled veterans.

The legislation we have passed since the date of the economy act, including the legislation recently passed over the President's veto, restores about 75 percent of this lost Federal revenue to Oregon, and, from a purely economic viewpoint, it benefits every taxpayer in my State, whether he is a veteran or not.

Not one person in one hundred in this country pays a Federal income tax. Not one farmer in one thousand pays such a tax. None of the burden of this legislation rests upon the poor. It is all upon the shoulders of that comparatively small portion of our people who can afford to pay it, and they should consider their contribution to this just cause rather in the nature of a privilege than a burden.

MEMORIAL OF CITIZENS OF LEXINGTON, MASS.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, at the request of Representative EDITH NOURSE ROGERS, of Massachusetts, and a committee of citizens of Lexington, I present a memorial of 1,200 representative citizens of Lexington, Mass., adopted at a meeting in that town, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A declaration by citizens of Lexington, Mass., April 19, 1934.

To the honorable Senators and Members of Congress from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts:

When a free people choose duly elected representatives, they invest them with the responsibility for preserving their constitutional rights to own property and to exercise freedom of individual enterprise.

When a free people feel that their rights are being trespassed upon and that the guidance of Government is being unduly influenced by advisers not chosen by the people, it is a duty as well as a right of the people to express determined disapproval.

Such disapproval must be voiced decisively when legislation is enacted giving into Federal control the right to regulate individual and national activity for ends which the people feel are open to grave question.

Now, therefore, we citizens of Lexington, Mass., on this 19th day of April, the anniversary of the first battle for American liberty, reviving an historical practice, submit to the Congress of the United States through the Senators and Representatives from this Commonwealth, the following protest:

We protest against Federal interference in business under the guise of promoting social reform and economic recovery.

We protest against the indefinite extension of legislation originally designed solely for emergency purposes.

We protest against the passage of legislation without more careful consideration by Congress.

We protest against the increase of bureaus, boards, and commissions, and the delegation of arbitrary powers to such governmental agencies.

We protest extravagant and wasteful expenditures of public funds on unneeded and unproductive projects, thereby creating a constantly mounting national debt.

We are resolved that the individual's rights of private enterprise and its rewards must continue, free from unreasonable interference by the Federal Government, and we demand their preservation at your hands.

THE ISSUE TODAY—ARTICLE BY WALTER LIPPMANN

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an article by Mr. Walter Lippmann on The Issue Today.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune, Apr. 18, 1934]

THE ISSUE TODAY

Observers differ as to just how strong is the sentiment in Congress for another and stronger dose of inflation. But all are agreed that Congress would pass a silver bill with great enthusiasm if the President would merely indicate that he did not seriously object. This is highly significant. It cannot be explained by insinuating that Congress is in the grip of silver speculators or of silver producers. The potential majority for silver is much too large to be ascribed to the influence of the special silver interests as such. It must be explained, it seems to me, by recognizing that Congress is interested in silver, not because it is silver, but because it might be used to raise prices and to promote recovery.

There would be no such sentiment for silver today if in the opinion of the Members of Congress who face reelection in the autumn, recovery was adequate and assured. Congress is a most faitbful reflector of active public opinion, and the present strength of the silver bloc may be taken as a sure sign that there is dissatisfaction back home over the pace of recovery.

This dissatisfaction is, I believe, rapidly crystallizing into two main convictions. The first is that the restrictive measures under A.A.A. and N.R.A. have not worked effectively. The A.A.A., when it was pumping out money to farmers, helped them, of course; but the A.A.A. as a measure to reduce crops and raise prices has thus far been a virtual failure. The N.R.A., by raising costs and therefore prices ahead of new production, produced a temporary flurry among the few workers who received higher wages and some speculative buying of merchandise in anticipation of higher prices; but once the flurry was over, the net result has been to make it harder to sell goods and, therefore, harder to reemploy labor. Thus these measures of economic restriction and regimentation are rapidly losing public support.

The second conviction now forming in the public mind is that the reform measures, the Securities Act, certain portions of the banking bill, and the original stock exchange bill were far too rigid and far too drastic; that in attempting to prohibit manifest and admitted evils they seriously threaten to prohibit enterprise and new investment. Since it is through the banks, the issuing of new securities, and the stock market that idle money and new money must find its way into business, laws which terrorize the financial community are obviously a serious handicap to recovery. As the measures are written, and perhaps even more as they are interpreted by and to the financial community, they are not unlike laws to prevent railroad accidents by stopping the trains.

The common character of all this legislation—from A.A.A. to the stock market bill—is that it constricts enterprise. Some of it is designed to meet economic difficulties, as in the case of unsalable surpluses. Some of it is designed to cure moral evils, as in the Securities Act. But the net effect of it all is to discourage enterprise at a time when the relief of unemployment and of insolvency depends primarily upon the revival of enterprise.

The conviction that recovery is being held back is the basis of the outcry against the "brain trust", and the reason why, in spite of the collapse of Dr. Wirt's charges, the "brain trust" is increasingly unpopular. It is also the cause of the inflationist sentiment in Congress. That sentiment expresses the view that the depression is due primarily to a derangement of money, which has destroyed prices and profits, and not, as A.A.A. and N.R.A. imply, to a lack of "planning" and control in the economic structure.

The administration has been acting on both theories. It has a monetary policy which tends to raise general prices; to restore profits, and to stimulate enterprise. It has a policy of regimentation, which raises prices here and there but in no intelligent relation to other prices, which obstructs profits and discourages enterprise. The two policies are now grinding one against the other.

This conflict has to be re-solved. It is the main business before the country, before Congress, and before the administration. There are three possible ways in which it can be resolved. The regimentation could be redoubled and reinforced and the attempt made to run agriculture and industry under Government control. This is the direction indicated by the Bankhead cotton bill. To take this road is, however, impossible. Congress would not permit it. The country would not tolerate it. The administration does not desire it. The second way is the one that Congress is threatening to use. It consists in imposing upon the banking system an inflation of sufficient power to overcome the inertia of all the restrictive measures. This is a dangerous and disorderly way to reach a sound objective. The third way is for the administration itself to release enterprise by abandoning some of the measures that constrict it and by revising others. This is the way of common sense.

For the monetary policy as now set up, supplemented as occasion demands by the use of the powers the President already possesses, is a most powerful engine for recovery if only it is permitted to operate. It can create immense supplies of new money provided channels are opened through which new money can flow into industry. It would be the height of folly not to use it when, by using it intelligently, as the British are doing with a similar monetary engine, it is almost certainly possible to bring back to the people work, security, and peace of mind.

To do this is in no sense to abandon the hopes of the new deal. For, as the President himself has frequently said, all the particular devices of the past year are purely experimental and should be modified when they do not work. Experience has now shown that some of them thwart enterprise and retard recovery. Those devices ought without the slightest compunction to be revised so that they will not thwart enterprise and retard recovery.

POLITICAL CONDITIONS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR CLARK

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] before the State banquet of the Young Democrats of North Carolina at Raleigh, N.C., Saturday, March 31, 1934.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I consider it a very distinguished honor to be permitted to be here tonight to participate in this gathering of the Young Democrats of North Carolina. It is always a privilege for me to address any meeting of Democrats. It is a particular gratification to address an audience of Young Democrats. It is a gratification for me to address the fighting Democracy of the old North State, the State which produced the grand old Roman, Nathaniel Macon, the State in which was born possibly the greatest Democrat who ever sat in the White House, Andrew Jackson, the State of the nativity of the most underrated and one of the greatest Presidents, Andrew Johnson, the State which knew the leadership of the great Zeb Vance, the State of that magnetic leader and matchless debater, Claude Kitchin. It has been my good fortune since the time of my boyhood to enjoy the friendship of many distinguished North Carolinians. My memory goes back with deep affection to youthful friendship with such great congressional leaders as Claude and Will Kitchin, Bob Page, and Senator Overman, as well as to those stalwart figures who remain today to head the two greatest committees in the House of Representatives, Bob Doughton and Ed Pou. I now prize most highly the friendship of such men as Will Bailey, Max Gardner, Josephus Daniels, and Bob Reynolds.

I had the pleasure of soldiering with many gallant sons of North Carolina during the World War, and I took especial pleasure and pride in the splendid record as national commander of the American Legion made by my friend, Henry Stevens, one of the finest commanders that the Legion has produced. And so you will understand, my friends, that my expression of gratification at being here tonight is no formal lip service and empty pleasantry but an expression of very real feeling.

We in Missouri owe much to North Carolina. The backbone of our splendid pioneer stock came from Virginia and North Carolina, either direct or through Kentucky and Tennessee. From you we claim descent of many of our institutions and characteristics. That old lion of Missouri democracy—one of the greatest Democrats who ever lived, Thomas Hart Benton—was born and grew to manhood in this State. And so tonight I take pride in the fact that from Missouri I bring word to the fine democracy of North Carolina that in Missouri the democracy long rent by factions and dissensions long suffering under Republican misrule is once more united, triumphant, and militant, looking with complete confidence to the future.

It is well at this time, after a little more than a year in complete control of the National Government in this time of stress, for Democrats to take stock of the present and estimate the future.

The United States has from the earliest time been the bulwark of liberty throughout the world. We set the example of republicanism to the nations of the earth. Our Government was created and stands as a monument to the principle that men are fit to govern themselves. Twenty years ago it seemed that the principles upon which our Government was founded were to encompass the earth, for nearly 30 nations had followed our example in setting up constitutional governments. And now, in this time of crisis, when as a result of the brutal bestiality of war, of the lowering of standards, the destruction of morale which accompanied and followed that awful conflict, liberty is prostrate throughout the world, with brutal dictatorship in the ascendant in nearly every land, the United States still affords the last refuge to the oppressed and liberty-loving people of the world.

We ourselves have been passing through the fiery furnaces of the aftermath of war. We are just emerging from a crisis more serious than any in the history of the United States, with the possible exception of the period of the Revolution and the period of the War between the States. The survival of our institutions and of our whole economic fabric has been tested to the uttermost. But under the leadership of the President of the United States there is evidence of recovery on every hand.

It is not necessary to agree with every item of the enactments of the last year to rejoice in the spiritual and material improvement which has taken place in this country in the last year. That gallant figure, with his high courage, with his indomitable will, which has enabled him to rise far above the limitations of mere physical misfortune, with his magnificent ability, with his unswerving devotion to the interest of the body of the people—to the "forgotten man", as he once denominated him—is leading the American people out of the slough of despond. The very buoyancy of his courage and optimism has had a tremendous and inspiring effect on the hearts and minds of our people in ending the depression. He has done more in 1 year to rout the long-entrenched forces of special privilege than has been accomplished in any similar period of our history since Andrew Jackson sat in the White House.

I do not desire to make invidious comparisons and I would on no account wish to seem abusive of the Republican Party. "De mortuis nil nisi bonum"—concerning the dead speak nothing but good. But in discussing the state of the Nation, it is proper, I believe, to briefly mention the condition in which the President found the country when he entered upon office. During the war there was an enormous waste of blood and treasure throughout the world. Bankruptcy or its equivalent, utter lack of financial stability in international relations, suspicion, jealousy, rancorous hates, breaking down of morale were on every hand.

The United States, as the leading creditor nation of the world, deliberately pursued the part of aggressor in an economic war with all the world. Through retaliation by other nations, international trade was practically ended. We cornered the gold supply of the world, and, while demanding payment of international obligations owed us by other nations, we set up tariff walls and embargoes to prevent them from paying us in the only medium in which they could pay—in goods and commodities.

In our own country, with the advent of the Harding administration, we entered upon a period of riotous extravagance, of uncontrolled inflation and speculation. Special privilege exercised absolute control of Government, of business, and of the lives and well-being of our people with unprecedented arrogance, not troubling to mask its ugly face. Corruption stalked the land, involving some of the highest officials in the Nation, and men who sat at the President's Cabinet table were guilty of crimes against the Nation as damnable as the treason of Benedict Arnold.

And for 12 long years we continued the march toward calamity; Harding died, Daugherty and Fall were driven from office in disgrace, but the forces of organized plunder retained control of the Government with more personable and subtler agents, Mellon remained as the virtual dictator of the fiscal policies of the Nation.

The most serious economic maladjustments were not only permitted to continue but created by the Government itself. Agriculture, the basic and fundamental industry of the Nation, was prostrated shortly after the war by the sudden and arbitrary deflation of agricultural credits forced by the arbitrary action of the Federal Reserve Board and that depression continued and grew worse throughout the administrations of Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover. In the fake, pseudoprosperity of the Coolidge and Hoover administrations which after all was only a stock-market prosperity—American agriculture had no part. To the wiping out of the buying power of the American farmer, a major part of the ultimate disaster must be traced.

To the heads of these administrations the panic of 1929 and the miseries which ensued for millions of Americans are directly chargeable. They deliberately encouraged inflation. They studiously abetted the delusion that an era had arrived in our national affairs in which depression or panic could not recur. They permitted the prostitution of the Nation's credit, through a system set up by a Democratic administration for the use of legitimate business, into the power of Wall Street for purposes of speculation. High Government officials, great financial experts constantly prated to the effect that a permanently high plateau of prosperity had been reached, that inflation of values was entirely justifiable, that there could never be another depression in the United States. And so the mad orgy of inflation and speculation went on.

And then when the inevitable day of reckoning came and the market crashed, when the country stood in need of encouragement and reassurance, the very men who had stimulated and led the talk of a permanently high level of prosperity—of "a radio in every home, a chicken in every pot, and two cars in every garage", as Hoover once promised the American people—these very same men raised a cry of alarm. Instead of saying frankly to the people that a bubble of inflation had burst, that a few rich plungers had lost fortunes, and that most unfortunately a multitude of small investors or small speculators, as the case might be, had been ruined, but that the basic wealth of the Nation was still intact, that we still had as vast resources, as rich agricultural lands, as great mineral stores, as much machinery, as adequate transportation facilities, as many skilled workmen, as honest, industrious, God-fearing a people as ever lived on this earth, and that what the country needed was for everyone to forget the stock market and go back to work, Mr. Hoover raised a shout of panic.

He summoned to Washington a crowd of capitalists—J. P. Morgan; Henry Ford; Charley Schwab, of Bethlehem Steel; Myron C. Taylor, of the Steel Trust; and fourscore others—and he told them in the most public manner that this country was in the most serious crisis of its fate and that unless they stood by the whole country was headed for destruction. And these industrial captains each and every one promised to carry on. And then, alarmed by the President's warning, they each and every one went home and trimmed the sails of his own little bark to weather a terrific storm.

The reaction of the public was immediate and inevitable. Public confidence was utterly destroyed. A stampede ensued; and without making any substantial effort to correct the basic economic maladjustments which had created the condition, the leaders of this school of thought gave way to counsels of despair. Trade was paralyzed, factories were shut down, workmen were thrown out of employment, credit which had been substituted during the inflation years for currency as a medium of exchange was suddenly and abnormally contracted and the price of agricultural products nose-dived because millions who would gladly have paid a decent price for the necessities of life had not the wherewithal with which to pay. A remarkable and unprecedented situation was created whereby millions of people were starving in the midst of plenty.

And then in the face of this situation of disaster, right on top of the collapse, a Republican Congress proceeded to pass and President Hoover proceeded to sign the most outrageous, the most indefensible, the most criminal tariff bill in the entire history of the world—one which made the historic and infamous "Tariff of Abominations"—which laid the foundation for the Civil War seem by comparison mild and equitable. In the face of the solemn written protest of nearly a thousand of the leading economists of the United States, in spite even of the urging of leading industrial captains who had heretofore been glad themselves to participate in the tariff loot that the limit had been reached, President Hoover signed the bill.

The result was immediate. Every civilized nation in the world proceeded to retaliate.

Our foreign trade fell away to nothing. Huge surpluses of the products of American industry and agriculture, the sale of which in foreign lands had made the prosperity of the United States, accumulated on our hands. The more food there was produced in the United States the more millions were hungry within our borders. The more gold we accumulated the more our financial structure was impaired. The more superficial remedies were applied without regard to the basic economic ailments the more aggravated became the constitutional disease. Yet no effort was made to adjust the basic economic condition which had brought about the collapse. Apparently it was not recognized that starvation in the midst of plenty constituted an indictment of our system which could not be blinked at, glossed over, or ignored.

And so, on the 4th of March 1933, Franklin D. Roosevelt was inaugurated into the Presidency to face a situation as desperate as any President had ever faced on his induction into office save possibly only Lincoln, in 1865. The Republican policy of pandering to special privilege had at last reached its full fruition. Agriculture, long suffering through the tariff policy, which compelled it to buy everything it had to buy in a protected market—paying a tariff tax on every item of consumption—and to sell everything it had to sell in a free market, was prostrate.

Industry, long profiting by unjust discrimination against agriculture through our system of prohibitive tariffs, had finally come upon destruction through the vicious excesses of that policy particularly as exemplified by the Hoover-Grundy Tariff Act of 1930, which had effectually closed the markets of the world to our products of every kind. Public confidence had been utterly destroyed. A bank with millions in its vaults, which could only exist by judicious lendings of its depositors' money, had been afraid to loan on even the best security for legitimate business. A depositor feared to leave his money in even the best of banks, because he feared that where so many had failed in no place might there be security. Disclosures of the extent to which Insull and Morgan and Wiggin and Mitchell and a host of others of the great captains of privilege had been allowed to plunder the American people—largely through the aid and protection granted them by Government—had led the American people to a state of despair which was closely akin to desperation. It is greatly to the credit of the American people that this situation and these disclosures did not bring us as close to the brink of revolution as the revelations of lesser governmental misconduct and to smaller speculations on the part of the French financial titans has recently brought the French Republic. Franklin D. Roosevelt, as a result of all these conditions, took office with every bank in the United States closed, every industry prostrated, every decent citizen apprehensive of the future of his country.

With superb courage, the President took the lead. He recognized that bold measures were needed to correct the situation. He realized and proclaimed that certain fundamental economic adjustments were necessary and that, in addition, certain emergency and temporary measures were necessary and desirable to restore the equilibrium. His courage and his masterful grasp of the spirit of his countrymen have been like the music of silver bugles sounding the charge to the people of the United States.

Some of the measures adopted by the President are purely temporary in their nature; some call for permanent readjustments in our economic structure, to as far as may be, remove the causes of the dreadful ordeal through which we have been passing. Some are frankly experiments, so recognized and denominated by the President himself, with the promise that if they shall prove unsuccessful he will recognize that fact and abandon them. Some of them, to my mind, have been extremely dangerous experiments, some of which have involved a grant of power by Congress or a usurpation of power by government, which I myself was unable to reconcile with my views of the Constitution of the United States.

I may say to you very frankly that I have not agreed with all these measures and that when I have not been able to reconcile my views on fundamental grounds with those of the President, I have differed with him with great regret but have voted my own convictions. I have no apology whatever to make for these votes. I hold it to be the duty of a Senator or Representative, sworn on his own oath to represent a sovereign people, to give most careful and respectful consideration to the recommendations of the Executive, to resolve all possible doubts in favor of his proposals, but if thoroughly convinced that they are wrong to vote against them.

Such, I conceive, to have been the theory of the Fathers of the Republic, and such will be my course as long as I remain in a position of responsibility under the Constitution. Such has been the course of your own great Senator BAILEY. I have not always agreed with him any more than I have always agreed with the President. Sometimes he has agreed with the President when I have disagreed with both, and sometimes I have agreed with the President when he has disagreed with both of us. But I am happy to have the opportunity to bear witness that he has always fearlessly voted his conscientious convictions and supported those convictions with cogent and powerful arguments. Such I believe to be the requirements of any man before he is fit to sit in either branch of the American Congress.

May I say in passing that from a lifelong study of American history and its background of English history, that I have no patience with the theory that man is the best friend or adviser of the executive, whether he be president or king, who fawns upon him and blindly agrees to his every recommendation. Such sycophants tend to destroy the efforts of the very man whom they pretend—and usually intend—to uphold. There is no essential difference between the hysterical cry which is occasionally raised in this country of "Stand by the President", and the old cry of absolutism since first the world began, "The king can do no wrong." My fellow Democrats, I say with all possible earnestness that it is neither necessary nor desirable to adopt any such attitude in order to revere the character and intellect of President Roosevelt and to glory in the sum total of his magnificent achievements since he took office.

Taking his program as a whole, the audacity, the power of decision, the gallantry of spirit of the President have been an inspiration to the people of the United States the like of which we have not seen since the immortal Jackson formed and led the hosts of democracy. Whatever may be the outcome of any particular measure of his program he has convinced the American people that he is literally and faithfully carrying out his pledge to drive the money changers from the temple. Whether he succeed or fail in any particular engagement in what must be a long war to finally redeem the Nation from the forces of reaction and depression, the whole country realizes that the whole force of Government is now being exerted to the uttermost in the interest of the masses of the people instead of the interest of special privilege. More than any President since Thomas Jefferson he has visioned a Government conducted exclusively in the interest of the whole people. More than any President since Andrew Jackson he has been the invincible and triumphant foe of entrenched special privilege. More than any President since Woodrow Wilson he has demonstrated that an honest, vigorous Executive can conduct an administration through the fiery ordeal of vast expenditures of public money and emerge without even the fumes of suspicion of corruption or veniality upon his garments. And yet, even in this time of stress, even in the midst of this vital struggle for recovery, even as we are toiling back from the depths, since we have this year under the Constitution a national election there are men, some formerly in high places and some still in high positions in our Government, who are willing for fancied partisan advantage to indulge in the practice of abusing the President and damning all his acts. Their viewpoint is set forth in the old doggerel: "I do not like thee, Dr. Fell, the reason why I cannot tell. But this I know and know full well, I do not like thee, Dr. Fell."

Old battle-scarred veterans of the army of privilege, men who unctuously defended every infamy of the Harding administration, men who cheerfully supported the Hoover-Grundy tariff bill, men who ballyhooed the stock-market inflation which led to our present deplorable state, men who even had the hardihood to defend Hoover as a great President who had fulfilled his extravagant campaign pledges and brought unparalleled prosperity to the United States, now have the effrontery to stand upon the floor of the American Congress, both in House and Senate, and in banquet halls throughout the country and abuse the President of the United States like a pickpocket for his every act and his every recommendation.

Even a proposition so logical and simple as that powers not one whit more extensive than those upon which Mr. Hoover insisted, which he forced through Congress, now be granted President Roosevelt for the purpose of enabling him to undo as much as possible of the mischief caused by our war of tariff aggression is assailed by charges of dictatorship and usurpation.

The whole proposal is as simple as A B C. By the most wanton economic aggression in all history, in a series of prohibitive tariff bills we placed ourselves in the situation of undertaking the unheard-of economic feat of forever selling everything and buying nothing; in short, of attempting to pull ourselves up by our own boot straps. The Hoover-Grundy bill was the last straw which brought swift retaliation from every nation in the world, shut the nations of the world in airtight compartments, and paralyzed world trade.

As the leading exporting nation of the world, a nation which produces huge exportable surpluses both of agricultural products and manufactured articles, we were the chief sufferers. We were "hoist on our own petard." By our own action in forcing every other nation into a system of tariffs and quotas, we have shut out American farm products and American manufactured goods from the markets of the world. The difference between being admitted to those markets and being excluded from them has meant the difference between prosperity and bankruptcy to the American farmer, the American manufacturer, and the American laboring man.

I wish that it were possible to cure this condition by a simple act of Congress, which could be signed by the President, reducing the extortionate tariff rates which lie at the root of much of our troubles. But having by our own stupendous folly deliberately created the present deplorable situation by provoking retaliation throughout the world, we now find ourselves powerless to correct it alone. A mere reduction of our tariff taxes—for a tariff rate is as much a tax as any excise or income tax ever imposed—will not reopen the markets of the world to our products unless it brings about a reduction of the tariff and quota restrictions set up against us in retaliation by foreign countries. And we cannot be certain of reciprocal concessions without negotiation. These negotiations, of course, cannot be conducted by the Congress and must of necessity be made by the Executive. Our treaty-making process is too cumbersome to permit of its use in trade negotiation. No nation in the world would be willing to deal with us on such terms. So that in the last analysis we are face to face with the proposition that if we desire to end the most destructive economic war in all history, if we desire to undo the evil results of our own folly, we have no option save to follow the proposal of the President by authorizing him to accomplish these results through the medium of reciprocal trade agreements.

Since I have served in the Senate of the United States I have opposed extraordinary grants of power by Congress to the Executive as being either unconstitutional or unnecessary. This grant, embodying not one whit more power than that now given the President for utterly futile purposes of retaliation in a war of retaliation, and which has been upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States, I believe to be both constitutional and vitally necessary to the welfare of the United States. Therefore, I shall take great pleasure in supporting the proposal with whatever vigor in me lies, and I make bold to predict that, outside of a few honest theorists who would turn back the hands of the clock in the vain hope that some more beneficent human nature will undo what our legislative folly has created, that in the bitter fight which impends in the Senate, the opposition to this proposal will come from the army of privilege; from those who want to go back to the old, bad logrolling device of the tariff barons from time immemorial; from those calloused souls who supported the infamous Fordney-McCumber and Hoover-Grundy tariff bills.

Time does not permit the discussion in detail of the various items of the President's recovery program. But taking it for all in all I am happy to report my profound belief that the crisis through which we have been passing is in process of ending; that the United States is, with courage and hope, coming out of the depths; that our Nation once more faces with confidence its great destiny, once more justifies the hopes and prayers of the founders of the Republic as the great agency of liberalism, liberty, and progress in the world.

LINDSAY DENISON

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD a very interesting article written about a very distinguished writer and great friend of mine, Lindsay Denison, by another distinguished author, Mr. Gene Buck, together with a tribute to Gene Buck.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Great Neck (N.Y.) News, Mar. 30, 1934]

MORE HONOR TO GENE BUCK

Not long ago Gene Buck was included in a group of 10 men who have contributed the most to the everyday language of people, an honor which surprised him more than anyone else.

He is a maker of fine phrases, in addition to being a master of colloquialisms which are really short cuts in language to define nuances of meaning in the fewest possible words.

"Wise cracking" is as far removed from Gene Buck's nature as is selfishness. He will laugh as whole-heartedly as anyone at wise cracks whose only excuse for being is their humor or their smartness; for himself they seem a waste of time unless their significance makes them important.

A few months ago Gene Buck said, "The old way was to get and forget; now it is to give and forgive." No one has expressed the idea of the new deal so forcefully, so completely, in a dictionary of words.

In last week's issue of the News, in which Gene Buck paid the beautiful tribute to Lindsay Denison, he called Sing Sing Prison "the steel filing cabinet of human mistakes", and in the whole tremendous literature of penology there is nothing as fine.

Gene Buck thinks deeply. He has a catholic charity, a broad understanding, and a genius for expressing his thoughts with a directness, a clarity, and an originality, whether he talks on his feet in his simple, earnest way, or writes.

It is a social loss that Great Neck's best-known citizen, measured by the number of his acquaintances, and one of its best loved, writes so seldom.

LINDSAY DENISON

By Gene Buck

Sunday evening, along about 9 o'clock, Ring Lardner, Frank O'Malley, "Tad" Dorgan, Bozeman Bulger, and a few others I knew well and who have gone into the "next room", greeted a sweet soul, an old friend and one of the greatest newspaper reporters America has ever produced—Lindsay Denison.

After 61 years his great heart, which "Tad" always referred to as "the ticker", which began beating in Salem, Mass., stopped in the Great Neck Hills, and this attractive town lost one of its finest citizens, and Ring, Frank, "Tad", Boze, and others will get a real report on what has been going on since they left.

When folks talk about reporters, and especially star reporters, Lindsay Denison was always mentioned first. He earned that distinction by his amazing power of observation, his ability to interpret the real facts, and his rare gift of writing them in such a manner that many of his newspaper stories were reprinted and used in textbooks as models for students of journalism.

Lindsay inspired confidence and respect by his work and personality in the leading players in the drama of life from Charles A. Dana to Al Capone.

His parents were deaf mutes.

He graduated from Yale in 1895 and chose journalism as a career.

He covered some of the great stories of our generation—the Windsor Hotel fire, the General Slocum disaster, the Thaw murder trial, the Rosenthal murder, Lefty Louis, Gyp the Blood, the Becker trial, the Hall-Mills murder case, numerous national and local political conventions, Theodore Roosevelt, William H. Taft, Woodrow Wilson, Charles F. Murphy, John W. Gates, Tammany Hall, Anthony Comstock, Abe Hummel, Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, Thomas A. Edison, Nat Goodwin, Caruso, Diamond Jim Brady, E. H. Harriman, Pete Daley, Lillian Russell, William Travers Jerome, Chauncey Depew, Gerald Chapman, Wilson Mizner, Nan Patterson, General Pershing, Foch, J. P. Morgan, John P. Mitchell, Rector's Jack's, Chinatown, and the Great War.

As a captain, he went to France and was in the Quartermaster Corps and also the Intelligence Department, and made a real record as a soldier. He worked under two of the most extraordinary figures on one paper in the history of journalism—the able and blind crusading Joseph Pulitzer, publisher and owner of the late lamented New York World, and Charles E. Chapin, his city editor, with a steel heart and genius for editing, who killed his wife and died in Sing Sing where he was the gardener of his own flower bed within the walls of that steel filing cabinet of human mistakes.

I have only mentioned a few of Lindsay's achievements and only a few of the characters in the drama he wrote about. They are countless in scenes and personalities. For many years he was the best reporter in this Nation, and so acknowledged by his own craft, which is the highest praise, as I believe the finest writers, the best historians, playwrights, novelists, and observers America has ever developed were originally newspaper reporters.

In recent years, in the evening of his life, Lindsay clung close to Great Neck. He loved his wife, his home, and this town. He got a great kick out of Jack Hazzard, the vigilant fire department. The Great Neck News office, where he spent many an hour, and it was a joy and privilege to be in his gentle presence and to learn something of the past from one who knew so well and had the precious gift of making it live again with all its color and glamour.

Those of us who knew him were blessed. Lindsay was one of the few great men I ever knew, and I have known many in my lifetime. I can see him now with his massive frame, his dark kindly eyes, and his large head with a small shabby, funny, gray old felt hat perched on top. I can hear his soft voice and feel his enthusiasm for life and the passing show.

To his wife and daughter our condolence and sympathy in a simple, genuine, old-fashioned way, God rest his soul.

Great Neck and the world have lost a real person and Ring and "Tad" and Frank and "Boze" get a "break" and a "scoop" in the mysterious tomorrow.

So long, Lindsay!

PERSECUTION OF JEWS IN GERMANY—ADDRESS BY HON. JAMES A. REED

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a speech delivered in Chicago April 8, by the former Senator James A. Reed on the subject of the Persecution of Jews in Germany.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PERSECUTION OF JEWS IN GERMANY

There never has been and never will be a benevolent despotism. When liberty ends, slavery begins. Slavery destroys every faculty of the mind—every aspiration of the soul. It renders death preferable to life. It reduces man to the level of the brute beasts. He who is willing to submit his body to the lash and the chains of a master is unfit to live.

WHAT IS LIBERTY

No man is free upon whose brain government can place a shackle. No man is free upon whose tongue government can place a bridle. No man is free who is restrained by government in the selection of his avocation. No man is free whose life, habits, or opportunities are restricted by government. With equal force let it be said: No man is free who is obliged to rely on government for guidance. And no man is free who is dependent on governmental bounty.

Paternalism in government is only possible when the liberty of the individual is limited or annihilated. Paternalism is of necessity favoritism, and favoritism to one class can only be accomplished by the despoliation of other classes.

Peter's property or opportunity must be given to Paul. Both are injured. Peter is robbed. Paul is debased. The most foolish of all animals is the man who, because of temporary adversity, would tear down the temple of liberty and out of its ruins erect a citadel of tyranny in the hope he therein find refuge. Certain it is that the citadel will soon become a prison where he will languish in chains.

All despotisms have certain attributes in common. They rise in a time of adversity. They pretend they have a complete cure for existing evils and misfortunes. They wear the mask of benevolence, speak in the soft notes of friendship, and wreath their faces in loving smiles, as they proclaim their evil doctrines. They assert their love for the people and their purpose to rescue them from peril. They declare they are moved by the loftiest motives and inspired by the holiest purposes. But they always affirm that the ordinary machinery of government is inefficient or corrupt, and that the people are incapable of remedying the wrongs. Back of that lies the philosophy that man is incapable of governing himself, or regulating his own conduct, hence that he must be the ward of the government, protected, cared for, guarded, and assisted.

Such is paternalism. And paternalism, itself despotic, soon discards its amiable pretenses and becomes a tyranny of cruelty, of plunder, of corruption, and of brutality. It matters not by what name this species of oppression is known or the particular mask it wears.

When man is deprived of the natural right to think his own thoughts, to utter his own sentiments, to select his avocation, to go from place to place without interference, to write and read the books of his own selection, to worship according to the dictates of his own conscience, to assemble with his neighbors and friends, to conduct his own business without interference or regulation, always with due regard for the rights of others, he is to the extent of such interference, enslaved.

Whenever any government goes beyond the protection of these fundamental rights and undertakes to control or interfere with their exercise, it is a government of tyranny, and the oppression is equally destructive and debasing, whether perpetrated by an Egyptian despot, a Roman emperor, a French Bourbon, an English Tudor, an Austrian Hapsburg, a Russian Romanoff or Stalin, a German kaiser, or an Austro-German Hitler, and is quite as obnoxious if committed in the name of a republic.

Names count for nothing. The sole question is: Has the hand of power been laid upon the throat of liberty? These crimes are committed in the name of government. But what, pray, is government, in its last analysis? It is the will of one man, or a small body of men, imposed upon the will and lives and aspirations of millions. If the small body of men constituting the government has been selected by the millions, if they have honestly kept within the limits of delegated authority, if they labor to protect the liberties of millions, then a just government can be said to exist.

But the instant they go beyond their just authority, these men are simply by brute force imposing their will upon their fellow men. Likewise, when the citizen requires or expects the government to go beyond the protection of his rights and to be the distributor of bounty, he thereby debases himself and surrenders to a policy which, in the end, makes the government his master and himself its slave.

Hitler has not only attacked the liberty of the Jew but he has also assassinated the German Republic. When he told the Jew, "You cannot sell to a German", he denied the German the right to buy from a Jew. When he told the Jewish physician he could not prescribe for a German, he denied the German the right to call a Jewish physician. When he told the Jewish people that they could not freely exercise their religion, he denied the principle of religious liberty and affirmed the right of government to control in the domain of conscience.

Thus out of the ashes of a war waged for the liberation of mankind appears again the Gorgon heads of a worse form of despotism than previously existed. The Russian peasant, liberated from serfdom by a proclamation of the Czar, finds his chains newly forged by a government that exists only by force of arms. The Italian people today suffer a greater interference with their daily life than that endured under the reign of the Caesars. The German people had more liberty under Bismarck and the Kaiser than they have under the name of a so-called "republic", the powers of which are concentrated in one man.

The flood-tide has not yet arrived, but the waves are beating upon the shores. Today it is the Jew who is the particular victim. But tomorrow and tomorrow and tomorrow, the waves may break higher and higher upon the shores, until they may engulf all lands and all peoples. Establish the right of government to persecute the Jew—and you concede the right of government to persecute the Gentile—you, in fact, concede the right of government to persecute all races and all religions.

Fasten this doctrine once upon the world, and we shall again retrace the path of history, when the world yielded to government by brute force—when monsters occupied thrones and places of power—when the rotting bodies of countless victims hung from gibbets on myriad hills. You usher in the day when the light of learning shall again be extinguished and the wailing of women and children shall take the place of happy laughter and of joyous song. We are not discussing today the fate of the Jews alone. We are discussing the dangers to humanity. We ask ourselves the question, Shall the twin stars of liberty and equality once more be obscured by clouds of ignorance, of prejudice, and of hate?

The Jew has been the object of persecution throughout the ages. But we had come to believe that, except in darkest Russia, the monstrous infamy had forever ceased. As one surveys the past, it is impossible to trace the persecution of the Jew unless one explore the caverns of ignorance, where lurk the coiled serpent of superstition and its pestilential offspring of bigotry, cruelty, and crime. Because the Jew has steadfastly refused to abandon the God of his fathers, he has been made the victim of the vilest fanaticism. For this, 3,000 years ago, he was enslaved in Egypt. For this were his cities burned, the walls of his capital razed, his temples destroyed, his altars desecrated, his people slaughtered; for this was he carried into captivity by Syrian and Babylonian despots, his land reduced to a desert sown with the bones of murdered millions. Yet, in spite of all, for 1,500 years the Jew clung to the horns of his altar, cherished his temple, and reverenced his God.

The Jew alone, during all that period of terror, vice, tyranny, and despair and loathsome idolatry, taught the doctrine of one supreme God. He alone followed a code of laws which embraced every principle essential to liberty, morality, and religion. His laws and his religion were to those of the other nations of the earth as stars of indescribable glory shining through the clouds of a storm-set sky upon a sea of blood. Then came the dawn of Christianity, but its glory fell first upon the land of the Jew. The God mother was a Jewess. The Twelve Disciples were Hebrew fishermen who spread their nets along the shores of the Sea of Galilee.

From this race we get our religion, from its sacred writings our morals. It preserved the greater part of our knowledge of ancient history. The most sublime examples of sacred poetry and the tenderest expressions of exalted devotion fell from the pens of inspired Jews. Obliterate the work of the Jew before the Christian era and you destroy the old Bible and the Ten Commandments. Strike out the work of the Jew of the Christian era and you obliterate the New Testament. Your religion, the fundamentals of your laws, your ideas of virtue, your precepts of morality—all these you get from the Jew.

From the lips of the son of a Jewess came the sublime command: "Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you." When Jewish valor, as heroic as was ever exhibited by man, at last was broken upon the sword of Roman power and Jerusalem fell, the Jew was exiled from his own land and became a wanderer over the face of the earth. But his idealism, his faith, his ambition, and his courage did not yield. It has never died in the face of adversity.

Once an exile from the land of the Nile he, centuries later, returned to become the dominant force in the government of the Pharaohs. Led captive into Babylon by Nebuchadrezzar, he broke his thraldom to sit in the councils of Cyrus. A wanderer in Spain, he became its intellectual and financial overlord. In envy his expulsion was decreed, and the decline of the Spanish Empire began, which has continued until Spain is an object of contempt in the family of nations. A sojourner in France, he rose to eminence in learning and dominance in business. Banished, the commanding value of his genius forced his speedy recall. A social outcast in England, he acquired property, won honors, and achieved distinction. Again persecution and exile were his fate. Yet again were his oppressors forced to reverse their proscriptive policies and grant to the Jew the right of British citizenship.

Thus has Jewish genius broken the shackles of prejudice and the chains of superstition. Thus has it triumphed over race hatred and religion. The treatment of the Jew by Hitler is the brand of shame upon the brow of Germany. Humanity cannot repress the hope that the public opinion of the world will demand that every act of oppression shall be reversed, and that once more, the Jew shall be permitted to stand erect—a man in law, as he has always been a man in fact—wearing the uniform of freedom in a republic from which shall have been driven the despotism of Hitlerism. That will be a bright day, not only for the Jew, but for the great German people.

Then, again, will the Jew be able to contribute, as he has in the past, to the sum total of human achievement. Wherever he has been given the slightest opportunity, the Jew has achieved preeminent distinction. Among the masterful statesmen of the last century must be included Disraeli, an English Jew. With the wisest judges of earth stood the Jew, Rufus Daniel Isaacs, Lord Chief Justice of England. Upon our own great Supreme Court sit two men of Jewish blood. In an exalted place, among the greatest lawyers our country has produced, must be inscribed the name of Judah Philip Benjamin, Attorney General of the Confederacy. If you were asked to name the foremost actress of recent times, your lips would instantly pronounce Sarah Bernhardt, a French Jewess. From the masters of music, you cannot omit Anton Rubenstein, the Polish Jew. I call no more the names. They are too numerous.

If you pursue the inquiry, you will be compelled to admit that in law, medicine, literature, philosophy, science, business, and art, the Jews have won and kept an honorable place. From their pens have fallen poems of marvelous beauty and exaltation—books of masterful learning and profound logic. Their artists have wrought masterpieces of canvas, marble, and bronze. In all lines of endeavor they have made their way unexcelled.

To the Christian in whose mind still rankles the prejudice of ignorance, let me quote the words of Joaquin Miller:

"Who taught you tender Bible tales
Of honey-lands, of milk and wine?
Of happy, peaceful Palestine?
Of Jordan's holy harvest vales?
Who gave the patient Christ? I say,
Who gave your Christian Creed? Yea, yea,
Who gave your very God to you?
Your Jew! Your Jew! Your hated Jew!"

May we not all hope that the clouds of today may soon vanish; that the fires of prejudice will die upon the altars of hate; that the combined genius of all peoples shall realize the dreams of those who have longed for a world of justice, virtue, and equality—a world where the strong shall not strike down the weak—the cunning shall not overcome the unwary—where opportunity shall be unbounded—and equity shall be the rule of the heart and the law of the state?

TARIFF ON LACES

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, there came to my office this morning a committee representing Pennsylvania lace workers. Their spokesman, Mr. James F. Boyle, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., informed me if the tariff act passed by the House of Representatives and now pending before the Senate is passed by the Senate, thousands of Pennsylvania lace workers will be out of work.

It seems to me that at this time it would be very unwise for us to repeal the tariff on lace. The eminent Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] delivered a very able address on this particular subject last week. He informed us there were $25,000,000 invested in the industry in the United States; that it provided in 6 States, Pennsylvania included, 8,000 operatives, actually employing 15,000 workers.

Why discontinue protection to this American industry, and close down our own plants to give work to French and English workers, with the hope—and that is all we can expect it to be—that the French and English workers will purchase some of our agricultural and manufactured products? The differential in cost is in wages only.

In these most difficult times I do not favor sharing the home market with those of foreign lands who are our competitors.

I ask unanimous consent to have an editorial on this subject, which appeared in the Wilkes-Barre Record under date of April 17, printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Wilkes-Barre (Pa.) Record, Apr. 17, 1934]

TARIFF THREAT TO LACE LABOR

Statements credited to certain of the advisers of President Roosevelt, including Secretary Wallace, that the lace-making industry as it is carried on in America is among the four or five inefficient industries which could be sacrificed on a lower tariff altar in the interest of increased agricultural exports, have aroused grave concern wherever there are American lace mills.

Wilkes-Barre has two large mills which employ, even today, 1,200 workers. These mills have pay rolls ranging from $9,000 to $15,000 a week. A committee which investigated the industrial situation in the United States, in connection with proposed changes in the tariff, reported that lacemaking was not indigent to this soil. Yet one of the Wilkes-Barre mills has been in operation 50 years, the other 43. They are more reeply rooted than hundreds of other industries which could be named and have come into being in the last 20 or 25 years.

The House of Representatives has passed a tariff bill giving the President broad power to change tariff rates at will in the execution of reciprocal or parallel trade agreements with other nations. The plain indications that he will be advised to admit foreign laces in return for assistance in moving the farm surplus into foreign lands has led leaders in the lace industry to organize a protest against granting such power to the President.

Employees of lace mills in this city will likely be asked to petition their two Senators from Pennsylvania to vote against the bill.

Employees of Chester Lace Mills were told by their management that laces are already earmarked to be cut to the limit and "if this is done our plants in this country will find it impossible to pay N.R.A. wages and operate N.R.A. hours in competition with the foreigner and thus the way is paved for the Department of State under Mr. Hull to admit foreign laces in return for the foreigner taking enlarged amounts of our agricultural products. Thus to help move the farm surplus, for example, the domestic lace industry is scrapped."

The Democrats when they sought in the past to lower tariffs moved on a broad front. This usually aroused concerted and, in the end, successful opposition. What the lace industry now fears is that the new tactics embrace a sniping campaign at single industries, or small groups, with a threat that if the others stir to the defense of the first to be sacrificed, those interfering will invite tariff attention to themselves.

At any rate, no theory of reciprocal tariffs with Britain or any other lacemaking nation is going to be a satisfactory substitute to Wyoming Valley for its lace mills. One arm of the Government, the anthracite committee of Miss Perkins, only last week made the sage recommendation that the anthracite region could relieve itself of surplus labor by attracting new manufacturing industries.

Let's hope another arm of the Government doesn't take from us one of the most important independent manufacturing industries we already possess.

Taking a national and not a sectional view of the matter it would be selfish to balance the welfare of 15,000 lace workers against prosperity for a vast host of farmers if a few millions of dollars in lace imports would result in the purchase abroad of hundreds of millions of dollars of our farm products and a return of prosperity to the farms. What reason is there to expect that economic miracle? If England sends us laces, it is idle to expect that she will turn her back on Canada and Australia to buy, for instance, her wheat from us.

If the lace mills are so unimportant to America why are they going to loom large in a trade barter?

INCLUSION OF SUGAR BEETS AND CANE AS BASIC COMMODITIES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8861) to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the first amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments reported by the committee may be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the amendments reported by the committee in their order.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 1, line 9, after the word "paragraph", to strike out "(4)" and insert "(5)", so as to read:

SEC. 2. Subsection (d) of section 9 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by adding after paragraph (5) thereof the following:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 23, to strike out:

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

"(G) The term 'raw value' means a standard unit of sugar testing 96 sugar degrees by the polariscope. All taxes shall be imposed and all quotas shall be established in terms of 'raw value' and for purposes of quota and tax measurements all sugar shall be translated into terms of 'raw value' according to regulations to be issued by the Secretary, except that in the case of direct-consumption sugar produced in continental United States from sugar beets the raw value of such sugar shall be one and seven one-hundredths times the weight thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 18, to strike out:

SEC. 3. Subsection (b) of section 9 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by striking out the period at the end of the first sentence and inserting a colon and the following: "Provided, however, That in the case of sugar beets and sugarcane, the processing tax shall be imposed upon the production of the products and/or byproducts resulting from the processing thereof, and the rate of the processing tax, as applied to each such product or byproduct, shall be in accordance with the total sugar content thereof as determined by, and under regulations prescribed by, the Secretary of Agriculture, but the rate of the processing tax so established in accordance with the requirements of this subsection shall in no event be in excess of the amount of the reduction by the President of the rates of duty on sugar in effect on January 1, 1934, under paragraph 501 of the Tariff Act of 1930."

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 3. (a) The first two sentences of subsection (b) of section 9 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, are amended to read as follows: "The processing tax shall be at such rate as equals the difference between the current average farm price for the commodity and the fair exchange value of the commodity; except that if the Secretary has reason to believe that the tax at such rate on the processing of the commodity generally or for any particular use or uses will cause such reduction in the quantity of the commodity or products thereof domestically consumed as to result in the accumulation of surplus stocks of the commodity or products thereof or in the depression of the farm price of the commodity, then he shall cause an appropriate investigation to be made and afford due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties. If thereupon the Secretary finds that any such result will occur, then the processing tax on the processing of the commodity generally, or for any designated use or uses, or as to any designated product or products thereof for any designated use or uses, shall be at such rate as will prevent such accumulation of surplus stocks and depression of the farm price of the commodity."

(b) Subsection (b) of section 9 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "In the case of sugar beets or sugarcane the rate of tax shall be applied to the direct-consumption sugar, resulting from the first domestic processing, translated into terms of pounds of raw value according to regulations to be issued by the Secretary of Agriculture, and the rate of tax to be so applied shall be the higher of the two following quotients: The difference between the current average farm price and the fair exchange value (1) of a ton of sugar beets and (2) of a ton of sugarcane, divided in the case of each commodity by the average extraction therefrom of sugar in terms of pounds of raw value (which average extraction shall be determined from available statistics of the Department of Agriculture); except that such rate shall not exceed the amount of the reduction by the President on a pound of sugar, raw value, of the rate of duty in effect on January 1, 1934, under paragraph 501 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as adjusted to the treaty of commercial reciprocity concluded between the United States and the Republic of Cuba on December 11, 1902, and/or the provisions of the act of December 17, 1903, chapter 1."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, it occurs to me that it might be advisable if subsection (b), which has just been read and which provides the method by which the processing tax is arrived at and the formulas therefor, should be explained.

I think it is somewhat intricate, and I should like to have the author give us a brief statement in explanation.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, perhaps it would be well to invite the attention of the Members of the Senate to the statement in the report of the Finance Committee on section 3, of which subsection (b) is a part. The report on the section, as amended, and particularly the first portion, reads as follows:

Section 3: This amendment rewrites subsection (b) of section 9 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. The amendment contains only two substantial changes. First, if the tax at the full rate, on the processing of a commodity for a particular use or uses, will cause an accumulation of surplus stocks of the commodity, or depression in the farm price thereof, upon investigation, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, the Secretary of Agriculture may reduce the rate of the processing tax upon the processing of the commodity, for such use or uses, or as to any designated product or products of the commodity.

The statement could hardly be more clearly made. It is conceivable, for example, in the case of sirups or molasses, that because no tariff reduction is to be made on molasses and sirups imported under section 502 of the Tariff Act of 1930, surpluses might result following and in a measure produced by the imposition of the full amount of the processing tax without accompanying tariff reduction, as in the case of sugars imported under section 501 of the Tariff Act of 1930. It is not expected that any reduction of the processing tax will be required in the case of sugar.

The second portion of the section to which my colleague has invited attention is also explained in the committee report, as follows:

Second, the amendment makes clear that the rate of tax cannot be in excess of the reduction of the rate of duty on a pound of sugar, raw value, in effect on January 1, 1934, under paragraph 501 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as adjusted to the treaty of commercial reciprocity between the United States and Cuba. In other words, the rate of tax, if the maximum rate of tax is imposed, will be less than it would be, if the maximum rate were to be determined by the amount of the reduction in the rate of duty on full-duty sugars.

The purpose of the subsection is to limit the application of the processing tax so as to equal any reduction in the effective tariff duty on sugar, namely, 2 cents per pound on 96° Cuban raw sugar. The tariff reduction is not to exceed one half cent per pound, and the processing tax is not to exceed the amount of the tariff reduction.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. COSTIGAN. With pleasure.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The effect of the committee change is to reduce somewhat the sum total of revenue obtained from the processing tax. Will the Senator from Colorado state whether, in his judgment, there will remain an adequate revenue to pay the contemplated benefits?

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is the judgment of all representatives of the Department of Agriculture with whom we have conferred. The amount expected to be raised is approximately $63,000,000 per annum, assuming imposition of a half-cent-per-pound processing tax. All calculations as to benefit payments which will give farmers pre-war parity, and as to the other possible obligations resting on the Secretary of Agriculture under the bill, are believed fully taken into account.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, suppose the Secretary of Agriculture under the first portion of this section should find it necessary to reduce the tax because of the fact that it was depressing the sale of the commodity, and suppose that as a result of thus reducing the tax it should happen that the total revenue did not suffice to pay the contemplated benefits; would it be the Senator's opinion that the benefits then would have to be reduced, or would the benefits continue to be paid on the basis of a deficit, to be reimbursed subsequently from some other source?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is only possible to say to the Senator from Michigan that, since the processing tax will be offset by tariff reduction, the first subsection apparently does not contemplate substantial changes in revenue, and that it is the expectation of all the experts who have considered the problem that there will be sufficient funds with which to make to the growers the benefit payments which the act has in view.

Mr. VANDENBERG. With great respect for the experts, I prefer to rely upon the Senator's judgment rather than upon the judgment of the experts. Is that also the Senator's opinion?

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is my opinion, so far as I have been able to investigate the probabilities.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I propound an inquiry to the able Senator from Colorado? On page 6, lines 15 to 16, the language is:

The difference between the current average farm price and the fair exchange value—

That was the measure in the Agricultural Adjustment Act which was called the parity price; but that was based on the period of 1909–14. Does this language contemplate the same period?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is my understanding that it does. There has been no change in the basic period.

Mr. McNARY. The language here differs from that in the Agricultural Adjustment Act, without any mention being made of the period which may be used for base purposes; but if that is the intention of the author of the bill, I shall make no objection.

I should like to have the Senator explain subdivision (2), commencing on line 17 of page 6.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The able Senator from Oregon will observe that the subsection to which he first directed attention is an amendment of subsection (b) of section 9 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and that in the Agricultural Adjustment Act in subdivision (1) of section 2 the Senator will find the controlling provision with regard to the base period.

Mr. McNARY. May I have an explanation from the Senator with regard to subdivision (2) on page 6, beginning at the middle of line 17? The language is:

The difference between the current average farm price and the fair exchange value (1) of a ton of sugar beets—

I understand that perfectly. I desire to know from the Senator what his interpretation is of the remainder of that sentence, commencing with (2) in line 17, page 6.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In answer to the Senator from Oregon, perhaps it will suffice to suggest that, in the case of sugar, the purpose of the amendments is to measure the processing tax by the sugar extracted from the basic commodities, which in this case happen to be sugar beets and sugarcane and to establish a uniform basis for such tax. That is the reason for the difference in the form of language employed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 14, before the word "forbid", to insert "(i)"; in line 17, after the word "receiving", to insert "in"; in line 18, after the name "United States", to insert a comma and "and/or from processing in any area to which the provisions of this title with respect to sugar beets and sugarcane may be made applicable, for consumption in continental United States"; in line 21, after the word "from", to strike out "the Territory of Hawaii"; in line 22, after the name "Virgin Islands", to strike out "Puerto Rico"; in line 25, after the word "quotas", to insert "fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture"; on page 8, line 1, after the word "average", to strike out "importations or receipts therefrom" and insert "quantities therefrom brought into or imported"; in line 8, after the word "adjusted", to insert "together with the quotas established pursuant to paragraph (ii)", so as to read:

SEC. 4. Section 8 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 8a. (1) Having due regard to the welfare of domestic producers and to the protection of domestic consumers and to a just relation between the prices received by domestic producers and the prices paid by domestic consumers, the Secretary of Agriculture may, in order to effectuate the declared policy of this act, from time to time, by orders or regulations—

"(A) (i) Forbid processors, handlers of sugar, and others from importing sugar into continental United States for consumption, or which shall be consumed therein, and/or from transporting to, receiving in, processing or marketing in, continental United States, and/or from processing in any area to which the provisions of this title with respect to sugar beets and sugarcane may be made applicable, for consumption in continental United States, sugar from the Virgin Islands, the Philippine Islands, the Canal Zone, American Samoa, the island of Guam, and from foreign countries, including Cuba, respectively, in excess of quotas fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture, for any calendar year, based on average quantities therefrom brought into or imported into continental United States for consumption, or which was actually consumed, therein, during such 3 years, respectively, in the years 1925–33, inclusive, as the Secretary of Agriculture may, from time to time, determine to be the most representative respective 3 years, adjusted, together with the quotas established pursuant to paragraph (ii) (in such manner as the Secretary shall determine), to the remainder of the total estimated consumption requirements of sugar for continental United States, determined pursuant to subsection (2) of this section, after deducting therefrom the quotas for continental United States, provided for by paragraph (B) of this subsection."

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, reverting to section 3, on page 5, the amendment of the committee has already been agreed to; but we are going so rapidly that it is very difficult to follow not only the reading but the action of the Senate. I know it is perfectly useless for me to do so because of the manner of thinking into which we have fallen, and the pressure caused by the weight of the emergency; but, nevertheless, I desire to call attention to the fact that it does not matter what the original Agricultural Adjustment Act was intended to do, for when we once start that sort of legislation it will not be limited to the specific articles mentioned in the law, and the list of articles will constantly be enlarged until it becomes all-comprehensive and includes all the products of agriculture.

When the Agricultural Adjustment Act was originally under consideration, I raised the question as to delegating to a Secretary of Agriculture the power to levy a tax, but no attention at all was paid to it.

I also raised the question as to taking tax money out of the Treasury even before it reaches the Treasury, but no attention was paid to that.

I also called attention to the uncertainty that exists where we give to the President or to the Secretary of Agriculture or to any other appointive officer power to fix what ought to be certain, whereas the only element here is uncertain.

For example, we are not only delegating to the Secretary of Agriculture power to levy a tax but we have already given him the power to utilize the proceeds of that tax without any additional authority such as is required under the Constitution when it provides that every dollar which comes out of the Treasury must come by virtue of an appropriation made by law. Here, however, we are fixing the price; and the virus is not only in the price fixing but there is so much uncertainty as to the basis upon which the price is to be fixed that it is all within the mind of the Secretary of Agriculture, an appointive officer.

The processing tax shall be at such rate as equals the difference between the current average farm price for the commodity and the fair exchange value of the commodity.

Attention was called to those indefinite terms when the original authority was given last June. What is the average farm price? Upon what does it depend? What is it today, and what will it be tomorrow? What was it yesterday? It is a variable quantity; and the quotient of that variable quantity is to be the fair exchange price.

What is the fair exchange price? Who is to determine what is the fair exchange price? It is all in the mentality of an appointive officer. There is a fear that if this product is to be burdened it will discourage consumption; and if consumption is to be discouraged, it will be due largely to the increase of price. In order to avoid the results of the increase of price which is the purpose of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, additional authority is given to the Secretary of Agriculture. If he believes that the legislation may lead to discourage the production of the article, he can change the price.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. No doubt the Senator from Ohio has in mind the definition of fair exchange value given in the original act, subsection (c) of section 9. May I read it for the purposes of the discussion?

Mr. FESS. I will say to the Senator that I recall that the price was the average from 1909 to 1914. For the sake of the RECORD I will yield to permit the Senator to read the provision.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Subsection (c) of section 9 reads:

For the purposes of part 2 of this title, the fair exchange value of a commodity shall be the price therefor that will give the commodity the same purchasing power, with respect to articles farmers buy, as such commodity had during the base period specified in section 2.

The Senator from Ohio has referred to that base period.

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Then follows this language:

And the current average farm price and the fair exchange value shall be ascertained by the Secretary of Agriculture from available statistics of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I was aware of the basis on which the fair price was established; but I am still asking, upon what basis are we undertaking to fix the enactment of law that is to be variable?

The price at one time will be one thing and at another time it will be a different thing; and we are giving the Secretary of Agriculture such authority that he can undo what we authorize him to do if he finds that the results are not as was anticipated when it was done.

What I am calling attention to is the phase of thinking that the country has gotten into. I can understand why last June we might have taken such a leap as this; but after almost a year of experience and of the obviously glaring failures of the various items in the program dealing with individual articles upon which the Agricultural Adjustment Act now operates, in the face of that we are enlarging upon it, and now we are not only dealing with surplus articles but we are dealing with an article which we must purchase from abroad in a certain degree in order to satisfy the consumer's needs at home.

The original basis of this unusual legislation, which is purely speculative, applied only to articles of surplus, such as wheat, corn, and so forth. Now we are extending it to an article which cannot be one of surplus, and we are carrying in this authority the same identical uncertainties that were carried in the original authority.

I am well aware that, as we are now thinking in connection with all these industrial problems, there is very little use in anyone taking any time to resist what is irresistible. The country is making an effort to get out of a depression which is growing more acute every day, and instead of our giving business a chance this is what we are doing.

I should like to read into the RECORD some of the communications which are coming to me relative to the burdens of legislation such as that we are now enacting. When the author of the bill suggests that the basis on which we are to operate is to have the buying power of the farmer determined by his selling power—that is, to secure some sort of a parity between the price of the thing he sells and the price of the thing he buys—the difficulty is that one agency deals with the thing he sells and another agency deals with the thing he buys, and both of those agencies are intended to increase the price. The difficulty is that the price of the thing he sells we are trying to elevate by a processing tax, which, if it can be passed on assuredly to the consumer, will raise the price, but if there is failure to pass it on and it is assessed to the producer, the price will not be increased, but, unfortunately, the loss to the farmer will be beyond what it was before the law was passed. That is the difficulty.

If we can make sure, through the Agricultural Adjustment Act, that the tax can always be passed on to the buyer, then we can assure the producer some degree of increase of price, but we know from experience that that has not been the result. In fact, the prices of commodities from the farm which are not under the Adjustment Act have increased far beyond the prices of some of the commodities which are treated under the Adjustment Act. On the other hand, it is easy to increase the price of the thing the farmer buys, because, as a rule, it is manufactured, and, as a rule, it is produced by a few units, and because of the small number of units, the price can easily be controlled, while when we undertake to control the prices of the products of 6,000,000 citizens, all in an open market, competing with one another, it is a very difficult thing to insure increased prices. But if we are dealing with a product that is made by 100,000 people, instead of by 6,000,000 people, it is easy to increase the price, and the danger is that the price will increase so much more rapidly than the price of the article produced by the farmer that the farmer will be the loser. In other words, in the effort to increase his price, while we might accomplish that result in certain cases, the increase in the price of the article he buys is so easy to accomplish that he finds the rate of increase in the price of the thing he sells is only a fraction of the increase in the price of the thing he buys. That being the case, it seems to me that we ought to go slowly in what we call emergency legislation, which is virtually building a house of cards that is bound to tumble in due time. While I do not wish to interfere with this program, and I do not intend to do so, there are some things to which the attention of the country should be called, in the consideration of this sort of legislation.

I call attention to section 3, which embodies a type of legislation which, in my judgment, should not find any sympathetic attitude in this body at all.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I may not be able to console the feelings of the able Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] as expressed in his observations, but I may say that on the floor of the Senate last May, when the A.A.A. bill was under consideration, I made remarks similar to those of the Senator this morning. The language used in section 3 of the bill now before us is identical with the language used in section 9, subdivision (a), of the bill we had before us at that time. I was unable to arouse any interest in the matter, probably because of the way in which it was presented. The Senator from Ohio has now discovered in the pending bill a weakness which I pointed out on the floor of the Senate in the original act. The attempt in the A.A.A. bill, as in the bill before us, to fix the value of the commodity named as a base commodity, by providing that the processing tax shall be equal to the difference between the current average price of the commodity and the fair exchange value, based upon the sale price of the commodity in the base period, between 1909 and 1914, was equivalent to the fixation of a determinable and certain price; at least the rule for price fixing was specified.

By Congressional action we provided that the Secretary of Agriculture should fix the processing tax according to some standards. Congress has attempted to provide a means for determining accurately what the processing tax shall be, so that everyone dealing in a basic product may have notice of the plan which regulates the price. In other words, our language led to certainty.

Now, as the Senator from Ohio has pointed out in the discussion, we provide also, after fixing the standard for determining the processing tax, that the Secretary of Agriculture may if he finds that, by reason of the processing tax, the consumption of the commodity is being decreased, fix any processing tax less than that prescribed as the fair exchange value.

The price uncertainty of that provision is manifest. Anyone dealing in commodities wants to know what the cost is going to be, whether he is dealing in a raw material or in a manufactured product. Hence, if we provide in this bill a 2-cent processing tax on sugar, and the Secretary finds that causes a diminution in the sale of sugar and results in piling up a surplus, the Secretary will have authority, under this measure, to reduce the tax to half a cent or to any other figure he chooses. In my opinion, that is one of the most vicious sections of the bill.

Mr. President, I did not intend to even mention this matter, but, in my judgment, this vital section in the original act was overlooked by the committee. I think some members of the committee agreed with the views I expressed at that time, and some Members of the Senate agreed with me when the matter was before us, but the counterpart of the section in the pending bill about which the Senator from Ohio complains is in the original act. Its viciousness, in the capacity it has to destroy trade and commerce in any basic agricultural commodity, should be pointed out.

As far as I am concerned, I have no particular interest in whether sugar is included as a basic agricultural commodity or not. It is my desire to do what I can for the sugar-beet and cane-sugar producers. But I think section 3, the provision which permits the Secretary of Agriculture to decrease the processing tax, thereby injecting an uncertainty as to the value of the commodity, should be stricken out.

I do not know whether or not we have passed on the section to which objection was entered by the able Senator from Ohio, who seemed to have discovered something he thought did not exist in the original act. I shall not at this time ask for a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment in that section was agreed to. It may be that I shall be able to work out an amendment which will cure this peculiar situation. If so, I shall ask unanimous consent later that the vote be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Oregon that the amendment in the section has been agreed to, and no motion to reconsider has been entered.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate that. I shall not enter a motion to reconsider at this time. Later in the day I may do so.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, in connection with the same amendment, I may possibly ask for a reconsideration, but the amendment having been agreed to, that can be done any time, I suppose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 16, after the word "of", to strike out "the Territory of Hawaii"; in the same line, after the name "Virgin Islands", to strike out "Puerto Rico"; and in line 19, after the word "respective", to strike out "importations or receipts of direct-consumption sugar therefrom" and insert "quantities of direct-consumption sugar therefrom brought into or imported", so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, however, That in such quotas there may be included, in the case of the Virgin Islands, the Philippine Islands, the Canal Zone, American Samoa, and the island of Guam, direct-consumption sugar up to an amount not exceeding the respective quantities of direct-consumption sugar therefrom brought into or imported into continental United States for consumption, or which was actually consumed, therein during the year 1931, 1932, or 1933, whichever is greater, and in the case of Cuba, direct-consumption sugar up to an amount not exceeding 22 percent of the quota established for Cuba.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have some amendments to offer, and while the one I have in mind at the moment does not relate directly to the amendment which we have now reached, my amendments generally are related to this amendment and also to the committee amendments which are found on pages 9 and 10. It would seem to me that perhaps we might as well have this little battle now. It has to come sometime.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator propose to offer an amendment to the committee amendment, or a separate amendment?

Mr. COPELAND. I have presented an amendment to the committee amendment further along. It is not, as I have said, an amendment to this particular amendment which we have now reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from New York that the Senate by unanimous-consent agreement has entered an order to the effect that the committee amendments to the bill shall first be considered.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. Let us go ahead.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the Senator from New York that if it is his desire to offer an amendment which might be related in any way to the committee amendments I am sure there will be no objection to reconsideration if the Senator should desire reconsideration at the time he offers his amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 8.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 8, after the word "regulations", to strike out "allot such quotas and readjust any such quota or allotment in any aforesaid production area and/or in continental United States" and insert "readjust any quota subject to the provisions of this section; and may allot (or appoint an officer, including the Governor of the Philippine Islands for that area, in his name to allot) any quota, and readjust any such allotment", so as to make the further proviso read:

And provided further, That any imported sugar, with respect to which a drawback of duty is allowed, under the provisions of section 313 of the Tariff Act of 1930, shall not be charged against the quota established by the Secretary of Agriculture hereunder for the country from which such sugar was imported, and the Secretary of Agriculture may, by orders or regulations, readjust any quota subject to the provisions of this section; and may allot (or appoint an officer, including the Governor General of the Philippine Islands for that area, in his name to allot) any quota, and readjust any such allotment, from time to time, among the processors, handlers of sugar, and others; and/or

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 15, to insert:

(ii) Forbid processors, handlers of sugar, and others from transporting to, receiving in, processing or marketing in, continental United States, and/or from processing in the Territory of Hawaii or Puerto Rico for consumption in continental United States, sugar from the Territory of Hawaii or Puerto Rico in excess of quotas fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture, for any calendar year, based on average quantities therefrom brought into continental United States for consumption, or which was actually consumed, therein during such 3 years, respectively, in the years 1925–33, inclusive, as the Secretary of Agriculture may, from time to time, determine to be the most representative respective 3 years, adjusted, together with the quotas established pursuant to paragraph (i), (in such manner as the Secretary shall determine) to the remainder of the total estimated consumption requirements of sugar for continental United States, determined pursuant to subsection (2) of this section, after deducting therefrom the quotas for continental United States provided for by paragraph (B) of this subsection: Provided, however, That in such quotas there may be included direct-consumption sugar up to an amount not exceeding the respective quantities of direct-consumption sugar therefrom brought into continental United States for consumption, or which was actually consumed, therein during the year 1931, 1932, or 1933, whichever is greater, and the Secretary of Agriculture may, by orders or regulations, allot such quotas and readjust any such allotment, from time to time, among the processors, handlers of sugar, and others; and/or.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask that this amendment be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi that the amendment on page 9, line 16, be passed over for the present?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, some of us are called upon to leave the city a little later this afternoon—I am one of them—and I am very much interested in this amendment. Can we not dispose of it now?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think it will take long to dispose of the other amendments, and we can return to this amendment immediately thereafter. This is one of the main amendments in the bill, I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator return immediately to this amendment after the unobjected amendments shall have been disposed of?

Mr. HARRISON. That is perfectly agreeable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent of the Senator from Mississippi that the amendment be passed over for the present? The Chair hears none.

The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 25, after the word "the", to strike out "State of Louisiana, the State of" and insert "States of Louisiana and"; and on page 11, in line 7, after the word "this", to strike out "section" and insert "subsection", so as to read.

(B) Forbid processors, handlers of sugar, and others from marketing in, or in the current of, or in competition with, or so as to burden, obstruct, or in any way affect interstate or foreign commerce, sugar manufactured from sugar beets and/or sugar cane, produced in the continental United States beet-sugar-producing area, the States of Louisiana and Florida, and any other State or States in excess of the following quotas, for any calendar year, except as provided for in subsection (2) of this section: United States beet-sugar area, 1,550,000 short tons raw value; the States of Louisiana and Florida, except as may be provided under paragraph (C) of this subsection, 260,000 short tons raw value; and the Secretary of Agriculture may, by orders or regulations, allot such quotas and readjust any such allotment, from time to time, among the processors, handlers of sugar, and others; and/or.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 12, after the word "quota", to insert "but not less than the quota provided in paragraph (B)", so as to read:

(C) For any calendar year, determine the quota, but not less than the quota provided in paragraph (B), for any area producing less than 250,000 long tons of sugar raw value during the next preceding calendar year; and/or.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 17, after the word "quotas", to strike out "for edible molasses and/or"; in line 19, after the name "United States", to insert "and/or for edible molasses, sirups, and sugar mixtures, as part of or"; and in line 21, after "(A)", to strike out "and (B)" and insert "to (C), inclusive", so as to read:

(D) Establish a separate quota or quotas for sirup of cane juice produced in continental United States and/or for edible molasses, sirups, and sugar mixtures, as part of or in addition to the quotas established pursuant to paragraphs (A) to (C), inclusive, of this subsection.

Mr. COSTIGAN. There is an amendment to be offered by some Member of the Senate to this section, and I think it would be wise to pass it over for the present. I ask uanimous consent that the amendment may be passed over for the present until we shall have acted on the remaining committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado ask unanimous consent to pass over subsection (D)?

Mr. BORAH. I should want the entire section passed over.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I should want the entire section passed over, to be returned to later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire section 4 to be passed over?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think the Senator meant subsection (D).

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the request is that subsection (D) be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that subsection (D) be passed over for the present. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask also that the next amendment on page 12, subsection (B), be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that subsection (B) on page 12 be passed over for the present. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 5, to strike out:

"(C) In the event that the consumption requirements of sugar for continental United States, for any calendar year, are less than the amount of consumption requirements determined for that year, or are less than the amount of the consumption requirements determined for the year next preceding, the amount of such deficiency may be proportionately deducted from the respective quotas determined by and pursuant to paragraph (A) of subsection (1) of this section.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

"(C) In the event that available statistics of the Department of Agriculture during the course of any calendar year indicate that the consumption requirements of sugar for continental United States for such year will be less than the amount of the consumption requirements determined for that year, the amount of such deficiency may be proportionately deducted from the respective quotas determined by and pursuant to paragraph (A) of subsection (1) of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The clerk will state the next amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 14, line 24, it is proposed to strike out the word "eliminate" and insert in lieu thereof "limit or regulate."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am sorry to be so slow, but I think that paragraph (C) on page 13 is affected by the question of the treatment of Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

Mr. HARRISON. If it is, and it is desired to reconsider the amendment, there will be no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment on page 13, line 14, subparagraph (C) was agreed to will be reconsidered, and the amendment will be passed over for the present.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania does not request that the amendment be passed over for the present.

Mr. REED. Perhaps that is the shipshape way to handle the matter.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well.

Mr. BONE. May I ask the chairman of the committee why it is deemed wise to strike out the word "eliminate" before "child labor" instead of limiting or regulating child labor?

Mr. HARRISON. There may be some discussion of that proposal, and I understand the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] desires that amendment to be passed over.

Mr. BONE. I should not want to vote for a section that permitted the working of children in the sugar industry or any other industry.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the amendments on page 14, lines 24 and 25, be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 14, after the word "than", to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$100", and also strike out "or by imprisonment for not more than 6 months", so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

"(6) The several district courts of the United States are hereby vested with jurisdiction specifically to enforce, and to prevent and restrain any person from violating, the provisions of this section, or of any order, regulation, agreement, or license heretofore or hereafter made or issued pursuant to this title, in any proceeding now pending or hereafter brought in said courts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 15, after the word "in", to insert a comma and "or pusuant to", so as to read:

"(7) Upon the request of the Secretary of Agriculture, it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the directions of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings to enforce the remedies and to collect the forfeitures provided for in, or pursuant to, this title.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 15, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 22, after "Sec. 8", to strike out "Subsection (e) of section 15 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by striking out the period at the end of the first sentence of such subsection and adding a colon and the following: 'Provided further, That the President, in his discretion, is authorized'" and insert "Section 15 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection", and on page 18, line 5, before the word "by", to insert "(f) The President, in his discretion, is authorized", so as to read:

agricultural products in such areas, respectively, as the Secretary of Agriculture, with the approval of the President, shall direct."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 11, before the word "of", to strike out the small letter "l" in parenthesis and insert the figure "1" in parenthesis.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 6, to strike out:

SEC. 12. Section 17 (a) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by striking out all of the first sentence from the word "with" in line 3 to the period in line 7, and by substituting in lieu thereof the following: "processed wholly or partly from a commodity with respect to which product or commodity a tax has been paid under this title, the exporter thereof shall be entitled at the time of exportation to a refund of the amount of tax due and paid with respect to such product. The term 'product' includes any product theretofore or hereafter exported as merchandise, or as a container for merchandise, or otherwise."

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

The refund shall be paid to the exporter or to the consignor named in the bill of lading under which the product is exported, as determined under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. In the case of sugar beets and sugar cane, this subsection shall be applicable to exports of products thereof to the Philippine Islands, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, the Canal Zone, and/or the island of Guam only if this title with respect to sugar beets and sugar cane is not made applicable thereto. SEC. 17. The Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by the addition of the following new section: no. "20."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments. The clerk will state the first committee amendment which was passed over by unanimous consent.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 9, after line 15, it is proposed by the committee to insert the following:

(ii) Forbid processors, handlers of sugar, and others from transporting to, receiving in, processing or marketing in, continental United States, and/or from processing in the Territory of Hawaii or Puerto Rico for consumption in continental United States, sugar from the Territory of Hawaii or Puerto Rico, in excess of quotas fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture, for any calendar year, based on average quantities therefrom brought into continental United States for consumption, or which was actually consumed, therein during such 3 years, respectively, in the years 1925–33, inclusive, as the Secretary of Agriculture may, from time to time, determine to be the most representative respective 3 years, adjusted, together with the quotas established pursuant to paragraph (1), (in such manner as the Secretary shall determine) to the remainder of the total estimated consumption requirements of sugar for continental United States, determined pursuant to subsection (2) of this section, after deducting therefrom the quotas for continental United States, provided for by paragraph (B) of this subsection: Provided, however, That in such quotas there may be included direct-consumption sugar up to an amount not exceeding the respective quantities of direct-consumption sugar therefrom brought into continental United States for consumption, or which was actually consumed, therein during the year 1931, 1932, or 1933, whichever is greater, and the Secretary of Agriculture may, by orders or regulations, allot such quotas and readjust any such allotment, from time to time, among the processors, handlers of sugar, and others; and/or.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to propose an amendment to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will send his amendment to the desk it will be stated.

Mr. METCALF rose.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, in order that we may have the question completely before us, I think it would be well for the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] to offer his amendment. I have an amendment on the table suggesting an amendment to line 12, after the word "exceeding", but I ask, in place of submitting that amendment at the moment, that the Senator from Rhode Island may offer his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. METCALF. I was waiting for the amendment of the Senator from New York to be offered, but I will offer my amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island offers an amendment to the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On line 16, page 10, after the word "greater", it is proposed to strike out the comma and to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That after December 31, 1934, there may be included, in the case of Puerto Rico, direct-consumption sugar up to an amount not exceeding 37 percent of the quota established for Puerto Rico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. COPELAND obtained the floor.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I understand that the amendment now offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] is intended to take care of the case of a new refinery being built on the island of Puerto Rico. That really is a subordinate question to the principle involved in the main question whether we are going to treat Hawaii like a part of the United States, which it is, or whether we are going to treat it like a subordinate possession or a foreign country. Would it not be better, I submit to the Senator from Rhode Island, to offer an amendment which will bring up the main question, and let us determine that, and, that having been determined, we will then be in a position to act more intelligently on the subordinate questions?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to which section does he refer?

Mr. REED. I am speaking of the section which begins on page 9, line 16, and extends down to line 19, on page 10. It is a totally new section, inserted by the committee for the purpose of saving the face of Hawaii and Puerto Rico without in any way changing the sense of the original text which lumped those two islands in with the Philippines and Cuba.

Hawaii, Mr. President, is as much a part of the United States as is the District of Columbia. It has paid enormous income taxes, far more than many of the States of the Union, far more than it has ever received in benefits. It is different from the States only in that it has not as yet been admitted to statehood, and has no one upon this floor to speak for it, but it is just as much an integral part of this country as is the District of Columbia. Its citizens are American citizens, and, taken by and large, its citizenship compares very favorably with that of most of the States of the Union. Its people are industrious; they pay high wages; they have developed the sugar industry because the lands of Hawaii and its climate are ideally suited for the cultivation of sugar; and here we propose to increase the quotas of continental United States to an amount far greater than their production in the last 3 years, while we propose to give to the Secretary of Agriculture power to cut the quota of the Territory of Hawaii 20 percent under the average production of the last 3 years.

We safeguard Louisiana and Florida by giving them a fixed quota much greater than their average production in recent years; we safeguard the beet-sugar fields by doing the same thing for those fields; and then we take Hawaii and treat it like a stepchild; put it in the category of Cuba and the Philippines and expose it to the unregulated discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture. We let him take a period of 8 years from which he may select any three in order to ascertain the average that he desires to use for his quota. Under the bill he may select any 3 years from 1925 to 1933. If he should take the last 3 years of that period, which would seem to be the fair way, the quota for Hawaii would be 998,000 tons. If he should take 3 picked years out of the 8 when the crop was the poorest, the quota for Hawaii would be only 750,000 tons.

I have not a particle of personal or political interest in this question, but I happen to have been in Hawaii more than once and know the difficulties under which the Hawaiians labor in securing any kind of recognition from the Congress. They have a delegate in the House of Representatives, but they have no one in this body to speak for them. So I am glad to be one of those to raise a voice in their behalf at this time, and I want to offer an amendment, if the Senator will permit me, which will directly bring up that question.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, does the Senator classify Puerto Rico along with Hawaii? Is there any difference in the case of the two?

Mr. REED. There is a slight difference. Every law that relates to the mainland practically applies also to Hawaii. That is not true of Puerto Rico. We do not tax the Puerto Ricans by our income-tax laws, for example, but naturally we treat the Hawaiian Islands just the same as we treat the citizens of continental United States.

I do not want to drag in extraneous subjects, but Hawaii, from the military standpoint, has an importance to us that it is impossible to exaggerate. The loyalty of the Hawaiians has never been challenged, it must not ever be, and it must not ever be jeopardized by treating them as if they were not Americans just as much as we are. For all those reasons—reasons of justice, reasons of self-interest for us—it seems to me that Hawaii ought to be treated on the same basis as continental United States.

What, then, the Congress may see fit to do with Puerto Rico is "something else again." Think of the difference in the situation! At present in Puerto Rico there is a very active independence party that wants to be free of the United States. With Hawaii it is just the opposite; they were independent under their own king, and of their own free will they applied for annexation to the United States. One is at least partially trying to get away from us, to secede; the other has never swerved in its loyalty. Nobody ever heard the suggestion that Hawaii wanted to be independent again; they are proud to be Americans, and it is up to us to treat them as Americans.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he proposes his amendment to that offered by the Senator from Rhode Island and what is the wording of the amendment of the Senator?

Mr. REED. I want to reach the object desired in the simplest possible way. It seems to me that instead of going back and rewriting a whole lot of technical amendments throughout the bill, we will get the correct practical result if we change the figures in line 1 on page 10. "1925–33" is the way it reads. If we change that to read "1931–33", it will give them a quota equal to the average of the last 3 years. It will not give them an increase, as in the case of continental United States and as in the case of the beet-sugar fields in continental United States, but it will merely restrict them to what they have done during the past 3 years.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. REED. I yield, if I have the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. That would hardly apply to Puerto Rico, however, in view of the hurricane which occurred during those years.

Mr. REED. We could make some exceptions in the case of Puerto Rico, although the figures of Puerto Rican production during the past 3 years would give them a very fair quota.

Mr. COPELAND. What would that quota be?

Mr. REED. Puerto Rico in 1931 produced 752,000 tons; in 1932 it produced 915,000 tons; and in 1933 produced 794,000 tons. The average for the 3 years would be 821,000, which seems to me to be fair.

Mr. COPELAND. That is not quite fair, because those were hurricane years. What was Hawaii's production?

Mr. REED. Hawaii produced 971,000 tons in 1931; 1,028,000 tons in 1932; 994,000 tons in 1933; an average of 998,000. Let me hasten to explain that of that amount of sugar 40,000 tons per year is consumed in the islands themselves, because there are great canneries there. We are all familiar with Hawaiian canned pineapple, and that requires a very large amount of sugar in the process of canning.

Mr. COPELAND. It would seem to me that we might better restrict the Philippines, Puerto Rico, and Hawaii so as to have nothing indefinite about it. My suggestion would be that Puerto Rico's quota be made 875,000 tons and Hawaii's quota 975,000 tons. I think those figures would be more fair.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I inquire if the Senator from Rhode Island has temporarily withdrawn his amendment?

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, the amendment I offered referred to Puerto Rico. I quite agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania in what he has said about the Hawaiian situation. The amendment the Senator from Pennsylvania has offered——

Mr. REED. But I have not as yet offered it. The Senator's amendment is technically pending. Will he let me offer my amendment first?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island withdraw his amendment?

Mr. METCALF. I withdraw it temporarily.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, what is the form of the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REED. For the purpose of raising the question, it seems to me that on page 10, line 1, we should change the numerals "1925" to read "1931." I offer that amendment. If that does not take care of Puerto Rico to the satisfaction of the Senator from New York, we can put Puerto Rico in a separate clause in the same section. What I want to do is to obtain an expression of the feeling of the Senate with regard to Hawaii. I am ready to go along with a further amendment giving a proper quota to Puerto Rico.

Mr. COPELAND. I think we should consider at this time the question as it affects both Hawaii and Puerto Rico, because, so far as I am concerned, I want to consider them at the same time. Therefore, it would seem to me much preferable if we definitely fix a quota for both those Territories.

Mr. REED. Let me invite the Senator's attention to the fact that there is no year we can fix back of 1931 that would tend to increase the Puerto Rican quota. As we go back prior to 1931 we find that they had very poor years. There is not a year back to 1924 in which they had a production as large as the quota which my amendment would give them. If the Senator will look at the figures he will see there were years of almost crop failure such as, for instance, 1929, when they produced only 460,000 tons. The Senator will not profit by going back and including that period.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me say to the Senator that in the message of the President he suggested certain quotas. For Hawaii he suggested 935,000 tons. The Senator does not think that is sufficient, does he?

Mr. REED. That does not include the sugar which is consumed within the islands. If that were added it would be 975,000 tons, and I would be willing to accept that amount.

Mr. COPELAND. Why not accept the same advance for Puerto Rico?

Mr. REED. But that is not an advance. The Senator in asking for 875,000 tons is asking too much. He is asking for a quota that never but once has been reached.

Mr. COPELAND. I hope the Senator and I will not split on this particular subject. So far as I am concerned, I am convinced that the quota which I am proposing, and which would give Puerto Rico 875,000 tons, or approximately that amount, is so small as compared to the total amount of sugar consumed in the United States that I feel the Senator ought to join with me.

Mr. REED. I am not inclined to combat the Senator. I am only calling attention to the fact that the amendment I am offering appeared to me to be generous to Puerto Rico.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is the Senator in his amendment linking Hawaii and Puerto Rico? It seems to me, as the Senator has very properly indicated, that Hawaii can be distinguished from Puerto Rico. There are reasons which it appears to me are well grounded why Hawaii should be kept in a somewhat different relation to the United States from that of Puerto Rico. I hope the Senator will modify his amendment so that it will apply only to Hawaii or to Puerto Rico, but not link the two together.

Mr. REED. I think perhaps I had better modify my amendment and word it in such way that it will not in any way prejudice Puerto Rico. Therefore I propose, on page 10, line 10, after the word "subsection" to insert the following:

Provided, however, That the quota per calendar year for Hawaii shall not be less than 935,000 tons, not including sugar consumed in Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania as modified to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I interrogate the Senator from Pennsylvania for information?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if the amendments being proposed by him are under the theory conceived by him that the bill discriminates against Hawaii?

Mr. REED. Yes, precisely; it does discriminate cruelly against Hawaii. It does not give Hawaii the same treatment that is accorded continental United States, but treats it rather in the way that Cuba and the Philippines are treated.

Mr. LEWIS. Am I to gather from the Senator's remarks that we are treating Hawaii on the basis that we treat foreign possessions and not as a part of the United States?

Mr. REED. Absolutely.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. BONE. I wonder if I understood the Senator correctly. I do not mean to interfere with the consideration of his amendment, but he referred to the average of importations into the United States from Hawaii in the past 3 years as being approximately 998,000 tons. I have what I think is the President's message or the figures from it, which indicate 1,009,000 tons. Perhaps the difference is in figuring long or short tons. But from those figures taken from the President's message it appears that Hawaii is the only one of the Territorial possessions of the United States or the only one outside of the United States involved in the sugar question that has its quota reduced. This shows a reduction of 74,000 tons against Hawaii, whereas there is an increase in the quota of the Philippine Islands, and an increase of 21,000 tons proposed for Cuba.

Mr. REED. Precisely.

Mr. BONE. I was principally interested in the figures which the Senator quoted about Hawaii. I wonder whether there is some misunderstanding here.

Mr. REED. There appears to be a difference of some 11,000 tons in the figures. I am using the figures submitted to the Finance Committee, which the Senator will find printed on page 6301 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday. The difference, after all, is not very considerable. I do not know where the President got the figures he put in his message; but assuming the lower figure, taking the strongest case against Hawaii, even the quota suggested by the President is a material reduction under the production of the past 3 years.

The quotas possible under the bill might be as low as 750,000 tons, which would almost wreck the sugar industry of Hawaii. Their overhead is heavy. They pay far higher wages than are paid on most of the farms of the United States. It is not a coolie country by any means, and their overhead is very considerable. If we cut down their production 20 percent or thereabouts, we shall pretty well wreck the industry for the sake of building up the industry in Cuba and the Philippines; and that, I say, would be a great mistake.

Another element of unfairness in this matter arises from the treatment in case of underconsumption. The quota of Hawaii, then, although it has been fixed by the Secretary, is subject to a reduction to meet the lessened requirements of consumption. The quotas of the continental United States are not subject to the same reduction. All the way through this bill there is evident the intention of treating Hawaii like a foreign country.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senate should adopt the amendment which the Senator from Pennsylvania first suggested, fixing the quota upon the 3-year average, Hawaii would be thoroughly well taken care of, would it not?

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator, of course, does not wish to discriminate in favor of Hawaii and against the American beet-sugar producers.

Mr. REED. No; of course not.

Mr. ADAMS. All the Senator is asking is equality of treatment.

Mr. REED. The statement is exactly correct.

Mr. ADAMS. In order to reach some of these figures, instead of taking a period of 9 years, as the bill does, and allowing the Secretary of Agriculture to pick out 3 representative years—a phrase of which I am fearful, as is the Senator—the Senator would limit it to the average for the past 3 years. My inquiry is, Would he be willing to base the quotas upon the past year; that is, the actual present development of the sugar industry in the various areas?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the result of that would be that the beet-sugar industry in the United States, which has averaged about 1,375,000 tons, would get a quota under this bill of 200,000 tons more than it ever produced in its entire history save during the present season. During the present season, for some reason—probably due to the depression in the cities—the beet-sugar production of this country has been about 1,750,000 tons, nearly 400,000 tons more than was ever produced in all its previous history whereas the production in Hawaii and Puerto Rico has been more constant. If we should take the past year, of course, it would be extremely favorable to the beet-sugar producers.

Mr. ADAMS. If we do not take it, we will force out of cultivation in the beet-sugar areas somewhere in the neighborhood of 175,000 acres which last year were devoted to sugar-beet growing.

Mr. REED. Yes; but which never before had been so employed.

Mr. ADAMS. True; but should the beet-sugar industry be set back? That is the inquiry. Should it be set back or should we start from the point of development which has now been reached and work out a fair quota on the basis of present-day production?

Mr. REED. The trouble is, the beet-sugar producers in the middle of the depression, and at a time of reduced requirements, have seen fit to expand their production immensely, and they have added mightly to the problem of those who would like to see sugar prices stabilized. This whole bill, however, is a process of denying Americans the right to work at a lawful occupation. This is about as un-American as any proposal which ever came before Congress. It denies a man privileges which were supposed to be guaranteed to him under the Bill of Rights of the Constitution, and under Magna Carta in Great Britain. It does things which 5 years ago every one of us would have said were utterly unthinkable.

I know that my old-fashioned school of economics is in the shadow at present. It is believed that we can suspend all economic laws by legislation. It will take us a little while yet to find out that we cannot do so; and after a year or two it is not going to require any argument from me, or from people who think as I do, to prove that this whole new-deal business is founded on fallacies that have been exploded many times before in the history of the world. Until that time comes, there is no use of my arguing against it.

I am taking the bill as it is. Certainly the new deal does not require us to take one group of loyal Americans and discriminate against them to help another group; and I know the Senator from Colorado would not want to do that.

Mr. ADAMS. That is just what I am protesting against, that we do take such a group. Here is a repression of the development of a nonsurplus crop; and, as applied to the beet industry, we are told that 175,000 acres of beet production should go out of cultivation. The Senator is asking that there be equality for the Hawaiians. My inquiry is, if we lay this premise of repression of production in America, why should not a proportionate repression be accepted in the other areas?

Mr. REED. Proportionate, yes. I should not complain of a proportionate reduction; but this is utterly disproportionate. Hawaii is reduced twice as much in percentage as are the beet fields, even on the Senator's own theory of taking last year's huge beet-sugar crop as the standard. Even adopting that as the standard alone, we are reducing the quota of the beet-sugar producers by only half as great a percentage as we are reducing the quota of Hawaii. The Senator will find that that is so when he comes to examine the matter.

Further, we are now getting used to bureaucrats in this country. We have watched them work. We pass an agricultural adjustment act that is intended to help cotton, and we discover to our amazement that under that act, on the pretext of helping cotton, some professor or other in the Department of Agriculture, without notice, without hearing, has clapped a processing tax on jute bags in order that the farmers of the far West shall use cotton bags in which to gather their potatoes.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. REED. I will yield in a minute. They have clapped a tax on paper napkins and on paper towels in order, forsooth, to help the cotton farmers of the South; and those interested in producing paper napkins never knew that such a thing was contemplated until it hit them on the chin.

That is the way in which we who rebelled from Great Britain on the theory of "no taxation without representation" have put ourselves in a position to be taxed; and now every little child who goes to the corner grocery to buy 5 cents' worth of lollypops is contributing to the tax on paper bags in order to help the cotton planters of the South. There is the situation in which we have gotten ourselves.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. REED. I beg the Senator to let me finish the thought, if it is a thought.

Now we are giving the same bureaucrat, the same official who has so abused the power of the processing tax, the power to pick any 3 out of 8 years as the basis for the calculation of his quota for the poor Territory of Hawaii. Based on his past performance, based on his public announcements, what can we expect in the way of just and considerate treatment when he comes to picking out the years on which to base that quota?

Mr. ADAMS. I shall be very glad to vote with the Senator to make the average for the past 3 years the basis for fixing the quota.

Mr. REED. I am happy to know that the Senator feels that way.

This is the same official, Mr. President, who recently has announced to a waiting world that the lace industry in this country is inefficient, and therefore he thinks that under the new tariff power which the President is asking the lace industry of this country should be exterminated, if you please; should be subject to competition from regions where there are no N.R.A. and no child-labor laws and no limitation on hours of labor, and people are paid barely enough to keep body and soul together. There are 20,000 lace workers in Pennsylvania who see in that the Washington Government reaching out to snatch their livelihood away from them in perpetuity.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator realizes that there are some other industries that are having difficulty to keep off the extermination list?

Mr. REED. I do, very well; but I am instancing this one because it comes right home to me and gives me a vivid example of what bureaucracy can do when it starts to play favorites.

I now yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to have printed in the RECORD at this point a telegram which I received yesterday from two constituents of mine. They are local administrators in their counties of some of the bureaucratic measures referred to by the Senator.

The telegram comes as a request to me to prevail upon the proper authorities here in Washington to permit the farmers in a certain county in Oklahoma to plant sweetpotatoes on their own land, on land which they have agreed not to plant to cotton. These free-born American citizens are coming to Washington and supplicating the authorities here to grant them the privilege of planting sweetpotatoes on their own land.

Mr. President, I do not know whether our farmers are becoming victims of voluntary servitude or involuntary servitude, but I wish to say now once and for all that I have always thought there is but one class of human beings on this globe who ought to be subjected to slavery. Those who desire slavery deserve slavery.

I will ask to have the telegram read into the RECORD. I withhold the names, because I would not care to subject the signers of the telegram to any punishment at the hands of their masters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

APRIL 16, 1934.

Senator THOMAS P. GORE,
Washington, D.C.:

On account farm acreage being rented to the Government on the cotton-reduction plan we are finding some difficulty in being able to rent land for garden and sweetpotato projects. A ruling from Director of Cooperative Extension Work in Oklahoma forbids use of lands so rented for cotton-acreage reduction. We need some of these lands for garden projects, and it occurs to us that with your influence we may be able to have this ruling reversed in this immediate instance. Won't you please see what you can do for us?

COUNTY ADMINISTRATOR.
COUNTY DIRECTOR.

Mr. GORE. "Won't you please see what you can do for us?"

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, has the Senator had any success in getting the ruling reversed?

Mr. GORE. The letter came to hand only yesterday. As I stated a moment ago, I do not know whether this servitude is voluntary or involuntary. It does not meet with my approval, and I do not know whether I shall have success in prevailing upon those in authority here to permit the people out in the short-grass country to plant a few sweetpotatoes on their own land.

Mr. President, there is one other quotation I should like to have read into the RECORD with relation to the beet-sugar industry. It is from page 110 of the book I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

France protected one of these industrial infants; that is, the beet-sugar culture. Dr. Wayland said of it in 1837: "The present protection costs £1,400,000 per annum. Suppose this to continue for 20 years, it will amount to no less than £28,000,000 sterling; the interest of which at 5 percent will bring, at 2½d. per pound, 126,000,000 pounds of sugar, or nearly the whole annual amount of sugar now consumed in France." In 1871 we can say that this child, born in the early part of the great Napoleon's career, has not yet become strong enough to walk alone or hardy enough to take the air. Supposing an equable annual consumption of any article, it requires but common-school arithmetic to show that a protection to the extent of 50 percent, continuing for 18 years, would amount to a sum which, at 6-percent interest, would furnish the nation in that article to the end of time, without ever paying anything more for it.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I merely wished to have that passage appear in the RECORD. It sheds rather lurid light on the history of the beet industry in France, which we have transplanted to this country. Is it else than a parasite? Perhaps never should have been introduced, but it is here now, and I presume sentiments of humanity require that it should be preserved.

I do not care to discuss the subject. I merely wish to express my approval of what has been said by the Senator from Pennsylvania. I do not think we ought to treat the people of Hawaii as bantlings. They are American citizens, and in my view all American citizens are entitled to equal treatment and to justice.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to make one more statement and then I shall have concluded.

The amendment now pending would give Hawaii exactly the quota which President Roosevelt recommended in his message. For once in my life I find myself standing by the President. I am asking only that quota which he has recommended to us, and I ask it as a matter of fairness to the people of Hawaii, who are our fellow citizens.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I know the Senator does not want to misquote the President in the RECORD. The President in his message stated 935,000 tons as the quota for Hawaii.

Mr. REED. That is what I have provided for.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the Senator's amendment made it 975,000 tons.

Mr. REED. It becomes 975,000 tons when we add to it the locally consumed sugar. But that is what the President recommended; there is no question about that.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has shifted his amendment so much it is hard to tell what he asks.

Mr. REED. I have shifted it in order to limit it to Hawaii, and I think it should be so limited.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in connection with the remarks made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, I may say that I have in my possession a letter written to the able Senator from Mississippi, the Chairman of the Committee on Finance, on the 9th day of April, concerning this subject matter, and if it is agreeable to the Senator from Mississippi, I should like to have the letter read by the clerk at this time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will not the Senator couple with that a request that the letter from the Secretary of Agriculture to the Secretary of the Interior dated April 10, be also read by the clerk?

Mr. McNARY. I do not have it in my possession.

Mr. REED. I have it, and will send it to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DIETERICH in the chair). Without objection, the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 9, 1934.

Hon. PAT HARRISON,
Chairman Committee on Finance,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR HARRISON: The bill to control sugar production (S. 3212), pending in your committee, carries a threat to Hawaii's basic industry that will bring financial difficulties to the islands that I should like to see avoided.

The measure as it now stands fixes the quotas for beet and continental cane areas at 1,550,000 tons and 260,000 tons per annum, respectively; whereas by applying the average provided in the bill to Hawaii, which is based on any 3 of the last 8 years, the quota could be fixed as low as 750,000 tons, which would represent a reduction of 300,000 tons from the last crop. This difference would destroy the balance between economical operation and the costly overhead expenses due to the intensive methods that have had to be developed in Hawaii for profitable production.

Further, if consumption increases, continental areas would be entitled to 30 percent of the increase, but Hawaii would not benefit; on the other hand, if consumption decreases, continental quotas would not be disturbed but the deficiencies would be taken from the other producing areas, including Hawaii.

If the sugar-growing areas in the States are given fixed quotas in the bill, I believe Hawaii should be included, and the same ratio of increase allowed. The minimum quota should be fixed at 975,000 short tons of sugar, raw value, taking into consideration the local consumption. The average annual deliveries from Hawaii for the past 3 years have been 1,009,000 tons.

Hawaii as a Territory occupies a different relationship to the Federal Government than the insular possessions with which it is classed in the bill. It is not only self-supporting but contributes materially to Federal revenues. Since its organization as a Territory in 1900 the United States has collected $124,859,686 in revenues, and in 1933 the collections amounted to $3,067,249, outranking many of the States in the volume of receipts. Sugarcane has been the principal industry of the Territory since 1876 and it has furnished employment to the largest number of its people. Almost one sixth of the population was gainfully employed in this industry last year.

I believe Hawaii is entitled to the same treatment in fixing sugar quotas as is accorded the States, because of the conditions under which it was organized as a Territory. I do not believe the Federal authority should invoke disaster on one group of citizens by restricting their market and at the same time extend the production of other groups on the continent. This, in fact, would be the result of classing Hawaii with Cuba and the insular possessions while fixing quotas for the beet industry and Louisiana and Florida.

My concern for the administration of the Territory prompts me to request special consideration of the effect of this legislation with a view to its modification. The Secretary of Agriculture concurs in the general recommendation, but feels that in order to prevent chaos and manifest injustice in the whole quota structure that the quota recommendations in the President's original message should be followed.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D.C., April 10, 1934.

The Honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have read the copy of your letter of April 9, addressed to Senator PAT HARRISON, in which the statement is made that the Secretary of Agriculture concurs in your general recommendation as to the treatment of Hawaii in the sugar bill. In discussing this with officials of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration the point was raised that this statement possibly needs further explanation.

At all times in discussing this matter with interested parties I have endeavored to make it clear that while I concurred in the general recommendation that Hawaii should be considered as having a status different from that of the insular possessions which are not territories I did not express approval of the specific quota proposed in the bill. As you state, my position from the first has been that the quotas set forth in the President's message should be the quotas set up in the bill. The Department recognizes that any change in the quota for one country or for one class of producers necessarily has effect upon other countries or producers.

Sincerely yours,

H. A. WALLACE, Secretary.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] a question as to his amendment. In listening to the letter of the Secretary of the Interior I caught two points in the letter. One was that we should have the quota for Hawaii fixed at 975,000 tons. The Senator's amendment does that?

Mr. REED. It fixes it at 975,000 tons, excluding the amount used locally, which is 40,000 tons.

Mr. FESS. At least, it fixes it.

Mr. REED. That is right.

Mr. FESS. It does not leave it uncertain. Then, as I understood, the other suggestion in the letter was that if there was an increase in consumption, the continental areas would share therein, to the exclusion of Hawaii, but if there was a decrease in consumption the continental quotas would not be disturbed, but the deficiencies would be taken from the other producing areas, including Hawaii.

Mr. REED. That occurs in a different part of the bill, on which action has been postponed. We will reach that later.

Mr. FESS. I thank the Senator from New York for yielding to me.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania has asked that the quota for Hawaii be fixed at 975,000 tons. I regret that he has not been willing to tie up with that a definite quota for Puerto Rico. Let me point out that in the 3 years used by the Senator from Pennsylvania to fix the definite quota for Hawaii, there have been two or three cyclones and hurricanes in Puerto Rico. The loss suffered in Puerto Rico during these 3 years totals 180,000 tons. One hundred and eighty thousand tons divided by 3 leaves 60,000 tons, and 60,000 tons added to the 821,000 tons which the President fixed from his figures, would make 881,000 tons. By exactly the same process of reasoning the Senator from Pennsylvania reaches the conclusion that Hawaii should have 975,000 tons, there would be the conclusion that Puerto Rico should have 875,000 tons.

Mr. President, I sympathize with everything the Senator from Pennsylvania has said about Hawaii. To my mind the treatment accorded by the United States to our colonial or insular possessions is little short of scandalous. Why anybody outside the continental United States should wish to be annexed to our country is, to me, one of the wonders of the world.

We do not know how to handle our colonial possessions. We do not know how to treat the citizens of these insular possessions. Our record is positively outrageous.

We used to own the Isle of Pines, and President McKinley and his Secretary of State stated to prospective American settlers in the Isle of Pines that that was American territory. It never was dreamed of in the early days that the flag should be hauled down from over the Isle of Pines. But that is what happened. We abandoned the Isle of Pines.

We do not have to go back 3 months to see how the Philippines have been treated by this body.

Admitting all the Senator from Pennsylvania has said about Hawaii, and the reasons why we ought to deal decently with the citizens of Hawaii after considering our action with regard to the Isle of Pines, then the Philippines and Hawaii, we now come to Puerto Rico. Let us see how we are treating American citizens who live in Puerto Rico.

We are dealing in the Hawaiian Islands with a population of 375,000, 125,000 of whom are Japs and other foreigners, and 250,000 are American citizens. Yet, so far as I am concerned, I want to have 250,000 or 250 or 1 American citizen, wherever he may live, treated fairly, and particularly if he lives under the American flag.

But, Mr. President, in Puerto Rico there are 1,600,000 persons, and those 1,600,000 persons are all American citizens. Are they not entitled to some degree of prosperity?

In my enumeration of the failures of the American Republic to deal with insular possessions I forgot to speak about the poorhouse—the Virgin Islands. Are we going to continue forever and ever to neglect those citizens of our Republic who live outside the shadow of the home institutions?

So far as I am concerned, I have no wish to interfere with the happiness of the beet-sugar producers in America. I have no desire to interfere with the raising of cane sugar in Florida or Louisiana. And if I could have my complete wish I would have the quota for Cuba lessened so as to make sure that any additional amount assigned to Puerto Rico and Hawaii should come from Cuba, and not come from the beet-sugar raisers of this country or from the cane-sugar producers.

Mr. President, why do we not on one occasion at least deal generously—no; I do not ask that—why do we not deal justly with American citizens who live in the islands of the sea which have come under our possession? There is no more loyal people anywhere than the people of Puerto Rico. The Senator from Pennsylvania a moment ago spoke about the loyalty of the Hawaiians. No longer ago than yesterday the Legislature of Puerto Rico voted unanimously its desire to have statehood. That is how devoted they are to us. I cannot for the life of me see why they want it, in view of the manner in which we have treated our insular citizens, but they want it. However, there are 1,600,000 of them who are entitled to some consideration.

Mr. President, there is in Puerto Rico one refinery—just one. At great expense they have equipped that refinery to manufacture 165,000 tons of refined sugar a year. The most that they will be able to manufacture under this bill as it is written is 105,000 tons. That is what we have written into this bill. Are we not willing, Mr. President, to change this bill in such fashion that the citizens of Puerto Rico may give employment to their people in their one refinery now equipped to produce 165,000 tons—to give them a quota sufficient to justify the manufacture of that amount of sugar? I wish I had words to convince Senators that with a slight modification this bill would do justice to everybody.

Why do we not, Mr. President, do as the Senator from Pennsylvania suggested regarding Hawaii, and fix the quota of those islands at 975,000 tons, the quota for Puerto Rico at 875,000 tons, the quota of refined sugar from Puerto Rico for the coming year at 165,000 tons, and make such change in the figures as will reduce the amount of refined sugar coming from Cuba so that the rearrangement of figures for Puerto Rico could be made effective?

Mr. President, I am not asking that one single plantation owner or operator or farm laborer in Cuba suffer by reason of the proposal. The amount of raw sugar which will be produced in Cuba would be exactly the same. The only difference would be that there would be opportunity for increased labor in the one refinery of Puerto Rico and also for a slightly increased labor in the Hawaiian Islands. The beet-sugar producers would get all they are asking for; the cane-sugar producers of continental United States would get all they are asking for. Could anything be fairer than that?

The trouble is, Mr. President, that according to the way we function in the Senate, unless a Senator is a member of the committee where a given bill receives consideration, if he attempts upon the floor to make any change in the bill as presented he gets little hearing and less consideration. Of course, with the pressure upon us in the Senate, it is natural that there should be this division of labor, and I suppose it is also natural for us blindly to follow the committee; but in this particular case it makes my blood boil to know that by law and the juggling of figures and the manipulation of machinery of government it is possible for the beet-sugar growers to operate their farms so as to sell at a profit to the farmer in the State of Wisconsin, for instance, sugar that cost 6.87 cents—nearly 7 cents—a pound, while at the same time that sugar is sold to the consumers of the United States at the going price of about 4½ cents a pound, and the deficit between the cost of 7 cents in Wisconsin and 4½ cents of the consumer's contribution, plus a profit to the farmer in Wisconsin, is charged against the American people. The sugar bowls of this country are taxed two or three hundred million dollars a year in order that the beet-sugar growers of America may operate at a profit. If I had my way, Mr. President, I would pay to every beet-sugar grower in America a bounty sufficient to permit him to close up his establishment and take sugar from the parts of the world where it normally and naturally is produced.

We are annually adding two hundred or three hundred million dollars to the cost of sugar to the housewives of America in order that beet-sugar production may be made profitable. We could pay a bounty of $40,000,000 a year out of the Public Treasury and save the American people from two hundred to two hundred and fifty million dollars a year by doing so.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, has the Senator from New York any idea how much we would pay for sugar if there were no sugar produced in the United States?

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator from Idaho will be patient, I am going on to say that I am willing to go ahead with this performance, and it may well be that we have a yardstick here—it may well be that we have a club to hold over the refineries; it may well be that we make a saving by reason of domestic production; but, nevertheless, the fact remains that we are paying a mighty high price for such protection as the Senator suggests we are getting by reason of this enterprise.

Mr. President, I am not proposing anything, however, to change the wording of the bill as regards the beet-sugar producers; I am not proposing anything to affect the cane growers of Florida and Louisiana. I am simply pleading with the Senate that they will let the stricken people in the island of Puerto Rico have at least one industry that will give them some chance to keep the wolf from the door.

There are no finer people anywhere than the Puerto Ricans. We now come in contact with them everywhere and in every walk of life. Some of the finest doctors I have ever known have been Puerto Ricans. They are a splendid people.

Mr. President, let us take just a little bit more from Cuba and give just a little bit more to Puerto Rico and Hawaii. We can do that without changing this bill in one single particular as regards beet and cane production in the United States.

I should like to call attention to the fact that whenever we pass any laws here, whether a prohibition law or such a law as the Agricultural Adjustment Act or any other similar act, they apply to Puerto Rico. The Puerto Ricans have to toe the mark and march the line. Let us be just to them now. So I ask the Senator from Mississippi, in charge of the bill, will he not be good enough to accept and take to conference an amendment fixing definite quotas for Hawaii and Puerto Rico—975,000 tons and 875,000 tons, respectively?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. In requesting that definite quotas be provided, does the Senator mean in short tons or long tons, or does he mean quotas based on production over a period of years?

Mr. COPELAND. My thought is that they should be in short tons.

Mr. McNARY. For instance, the Senator from Pennsylvania has offered a quota for the Hawaiian Islands based on the crop production of 1931, 1932, and 1933, which is around 975,000 tons, without specifying whether long or short tons. Is it the idea of the Senator from New York to take a base period, or does he want to fix the actual quota expressed in tons?

Mr. COPELAND. I would be willing to have the figures left as indicated for Hawaii. I have already tried to show that during the last 3 years there was a hurricane loss in Puerto Rico of 180,000 tons.

Mr. McNARY. I may say that is the reason I was asking the Senator the question, because the situation in Puerto Rico is not similar to that in the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. While a quota based on production in recent years might apply to one, perhaps, there should be a specific tonnage expressed here in the other case, at least.

Mr. COPELAND. That is the point exactly, and I should like to have a quota for Puerto Rico fixed at 875,000 short tons.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from New York has asked me a question. I may say to the Senator that the subject of fixing a quota for Hawaii, for Puerto Rico, for the Philippine Islands, for the Virgin Islands, and Cuba, as well as for the United States, was the most troublesome feature about this bill. After weeks and, I may say, months of conversation and conferences, it was determined that it was impossible to fix all these quotas and get a bill through the Congress. It was determined that the best way out of the difficulty, if any legislation was to be enacted, was to fix a quota for continental United States and leave it within the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture to determine the importations from Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the other places.

The reasons for that decision are quite apparent and have been demonstrated here on the floor. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] first suggested that we take last year's production as the basis of Hawaii's quota. Of course, that would be improper, because last year there was a very large production in Hawaii, and we would naturally have to decrease importations from other countries. In answer to the question whether that would be agreeable to the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] we were told that it would not be agreeable as applied to Puerto Rico, because a storm had interfered with normal production there.

That illustrates the difficulty of fixing a quota. If we take a 5-year or a 3-year period, we get into complications that prevent a satisfactory solution of the problem. Whenever we fix a quota of 935,000 tons for Hawaii—and I agree with the Senator from New York that that should not be done unless we fix a quota for Puerto Rico—then the question arises whether we must not then fix a quota for the Virgin Islands and then for the Philippine Islands and then for Cuba. There results a bargaining process which, I am afraid, will destroy any likelihood of the passage of the bill. I sincerely hope that the friends of the pending legislation who want to see the measure passed will not insist upon fixing any quota except for continental United States.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to permit me to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURPHY in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Is it not true, I ask the Senator from Mississippi, that all of this debate and all the propaganda that has been put out as to the relative rights of Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands, and Cuba for that matter, to consideration at the hands of the United States Government, is really beside the point? As a matter of fact, the sugar interests of all our dependencies and of the Republic of Cuba are controlled by interests in the United States. This is a dispute among various interests in the United States rather than a dispute between the countries with reference to the claims of Puerto Rico, Cuba, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands on the United States Government.

Mr. BORAH. That includes Cuba also?

Mr. CLARK. I include all of them.

Mr. HARRISON. With reference to that matter, if the Senator from New York will permit me, the following information has just been furnished to me. The number of mills in the Hawaiian Islands is 42. The number of interests controlling those mills is 6. There are six large interests which control all but a few of those mills. Only 10 percent of the cane used by the mills is produced by small planters. The remainder is produced by the six large interests. The six interests own practically all the mills, refineries, fertilizer plants, and all. They own the California-Hawaiian Sugar Refining Co.

In a summary prepared by the Tariff Commission sometime ago I find that in 1914, of a total of 45,718 laborers on 50 plantations in Hawaii, 24,340 were Japanese, 9,000 Filipinos, 3,570 Portuguese, 2,264 Chinese, 1,715 Spanish, 1,439 Puerto Ricans, 1,407 Koreans, 965 Hawaiians, 625 Americans, and 73 Russians.

I want to see Hawaii get a fair deal in this matter. I have such respect for the Secretary of Agriculture that I believe he will see that they get a fair deal. But if we fix a quota for Hawaii it means necessarily the fixing of a quota for Puerto Rico. When we fix a quota for Puerto Rico it means the fixing of a quota for the Philippine Islands, the Virgin Islands, and Cuba, and the result will be that the chances for legislation relating to sugar will have dwindled practically to nil during this session of Congress.

I repeat, I hope those who want sugar legislation enacted will vote down the amendments which have been offered providing for quotas and let us stand on the proposal as it applies to continental United States, under which we have given a quota of 1,550,000 tons to the sugar-beet interests.

Mr. COPELAND. But the Senator overlooks the fact that we are fixing a quota.

Mr. HARRISON. For continental United States.

Mr. COPELAND. We are fixing quotas on pages 7 and 8 of the bill for the other sugar-producing territories.

Mr. HARRISON. We are leaving it to the Secretary of Agriculture, who may take the average of any 3 representative years during the last 8 years in order to arrive at a basis.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator must see that if he is simply going to take the bald figures of importations into this country from Puerto Rico and disregard the fact that Puerto Rico has suffered from conditions which do not prevail in any other country and which involve the hurricanes to which I have referred, he will place Puerto Rico immediately at a material disadvantage.

Mr. HARRISON. I submit that when they have a storm it would not be a representative year in Puerto Rico. I am sure the Secretary of Agriculture would not think that such a year would be a representative year.

Mr. COPELAND. I suppose no year when they have a hurricane is a representative year.

Mr. HARRISON. I should not think so.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. Not having had an opportunity to give any consideration to the testimony before the Finance Committee, I should like to ask the Chairman of the Finance Committee, as well as the Senator who has the floor, if there are any tentative amounts which have been allotted to Cuba?

Mr. HARRISON. No. The only tentative amount that was fixed was suggested in the President's message, as the Senator will recall.

Mr. JOHNSON. I recall that figure.

Mr. HARRISON. That fixes the amount from sugar beets in this country at 1,450,000 tons.

Mr. JOHNSON. Was that figure discussed in any of the testimony before the committee?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I think it was pretty generally discussed.

Mr. JOHNSON. Was there a general agreement from those who are in authority that something approximating that amount would be accorded Cuba?

Mr. HARRISON. I can only give my own opinion. I think the figures in the President's message will, to a great extent, be the yardstick which will be used, with the exception that we have increased the allotment of sugar from sugar beets, with reference to continental United States, by 100,000 tons. All of the others will have to bear a proportionate decrease in order to take care of that increase.

Mr. JOHNSON. I listened with great interest to what was said by the Senator. I am quite familiar with the facts as they relate to Hawaii. Far be it from me to be the advocate of any particular individual who may be termed a sugar baron over there. But the fact remains that Hawaii is a part of the United States, that the individuals there interested in sugar production are Americans, and it seems to me if there is to be any injustice in providing the respective allotments—and I hope there will be none—we ought not to penalize those who are a part of our own country. So I asked the Senator in the beginning as to tentative allotments to Cuba.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator did not answer, may I say. The allotment is 1,944,000 tons, which is materially greater than the allotment given to any part of the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. I said the yardstick would generally be the suggestion made by the President, with the exception that we give 100,000 more tons to the sugar-beet producers in this country.

Mr. JOHNSON. The difficulty is perfectly obvious, then, to those who want to do no injustice to any interest. Tentatively we know an allotment has been made to Cuba. By this bill we have fixed an allotment for continental United States. Who is going to suffer?

Mr. HARRISON. I can only say what I think ought to be done. In my opinion, each one should bear its proportionate share; and if anyone is to be given a favor, I think Hawaii and Puerto Rico should be given the favor. May I say to the Senator that the Finance Committee has recommended that Puerto Rico and Hawaii be placed in a different classification from the other countries. We took them out of the category of foreign countries.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator is taking exactly the position I desire to take in this particular matter. I hope we shall be able to accomplish the result before we finish with the bill; but the bill as it stands does not, in my opinion, accomplish that result.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. BONE. In view of the fact that Hawaii is American territory, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee why it is that there is presented to us any real difficulty in the matter of Cuba. Cuba is alien soil. Why in the world should we allot to Cuba more sugar to be brought into continental United States than is produced by our own beet-sugar people, and in Louisiana and Florida, and twice as much as is produced in Hawaii? Why be sensitive about Cuba? I know that certain powerful banks have a tremendous stake there, and I am well aware also that sugar barons are the same the world around; but as between American territory and foreign territory I know where my loyalty would lie.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator will look at the figures he will find that we imported from Cuba in 1925 more than three and a half million tons; in 1926 just a fraction under 4,000,000 tons; in 1927, three and a half million tons; and the allotment, I think, as suggested by the President, was one million nine hundred and some odd thousand tons. That, however, is not fixed. It is in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. BONE. I am well aware of that; but what I am getting at is this: Why should we have our hands tied by the fact that we, over a period of years, have imported into this country so much sugar from Cuba? We might cut that in two if we needed to do so in order to make a better showing for our own possessions and our own territory. My point is: Why should we be so sensitive about Cuba? We are not going to provoke a world revolution here if we cut off the importation of some sugar from Cuba.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the Senator knows how delicate the situation is in Cuba. I do not want this discussion to branch off on Cuba. I am hopeful that we can pass the bill this afternoon, and I know that even to mention Cuba might start a long discussion. The economic situation in Cuba, however, is not very good; and I do not think it would help things particularly for us to cut the quota of Cuba in half, and say to Hawaii, "We are going to give you 935,000 tons or more, and give Puerto Rico more", and all that. Certain delicate international questions are involved.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to permit me to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I again ask if it is not a fact that the sugar interests in Cuba are controlled by American capital, and that the same thing is true of the sugar interests in Puerto Rico and the Philippines. In other words, Mr. President, it is not an international question at all. It is a question between diversified elements of American capital.

Everybody knows that the sugar industry in Cuba is controlled by the Chase National Bank of the United States, located in the city of New York. Everybody knows that the Hawaiian sugar industry is controlled by another group of American capitalists; and the same thing is true of the Philippines. So, as I see the matter, it is not a question of the relative rights of any of these dependencies.

I am going to vote against these quotas, as the Senator from Mississippi is; but I do not feel it necessary to make a specious argument on the subject. All these sugar industries are controlled by American capital. None of them is controlled by foreign capital; and so far as the relative rights of these various other sugar-producing interests are concerned, there is no difference between them, because under the Platt amendment we owe almost as great an obligation to Cuba as we do to the dependencies which are now under the American flag.

Mr. HARRISON. I think American capital is invested in all these countries; perhaps in Cuba more than elsewhere.

Mr. CLARK. And it controls them all.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I will now resume my remarks.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. KING. I think my able friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] emphasizes too much the American investment in the Philippine Islands and in Hawaii.

American investment in the sugar business in the Philippine Islands is less than 15 percent. The greater part of the sugar interests in the Philippine Islands is owned by Filipinos. Perhaps 12 or 15 percent is owned by the Spanish interests, some of whom are residents of the islands.

I know of no continental American interest in the sugar business in Hawaii. American citizens own and control the sugar business, and as stated, all owners are residents of the Territory.

I know of no banks in the United States, no capitalistic interests in continental United States, which have interests in Hawaii.

In Puerto Rico there are some American interests; but I think it may be said—and the Senator from New York probably is better advised as to that than I am—that the majority of the sugar lands in Puerto Rico are owned by the Puerto Ricans.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I cannot for the life of me see what difference it makes who owns the land or who owns the refineries. I am not interested in the men who own the refineries. I am interested in the human beings who are under the necessity of making a living out of the soil, raising sugarcane in Puerto Rico and Hawaii. I do not care whose money it is that owns the land or the refineries. I want these human beings to be given a fair deal, and particularly do I want them to have a fair deal because they are American citizens.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HASTINGS. I should like to make one observation with respect to these quotas.

I do not know very much about the sugar industry, although I have paid some attention to the pending bill. After the definite quotas were fixed in the committee for continental beets and for Louisiana and Florida, I asked why definite quotas should not be fixed for the other places that grow sugar, as suggested in the President's message, and I received no satisfactory answer to my question.

It seemed to me that Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Philippines, and Cuba would all be very much better off if they had definite quotas fixed than they would if the right were given to the Secretary of Agriculture to fix their quotas within a period of 9 years. Realizing that it was necessary, in accordance with the agreement which had been made, to give the beet-sugar industry their 1,550,000 tons and to give to Louisiana and Florida their 260,000 tons, making an increase in those two items of 100,000 tons, I suggested that we follow the President's message and fix definite quotas for all the other countries by distributing that 100,000 tons among them, which would mean a reduction of 2.1 percent. It would mean that Hawaii would be reduced by 19,635 tons, that Puerto Rico would be reduced by 17,241 tons, that the Philippine Islands would be reduced by 21,777 tons, and that Cuba would be reduced by 40,824 tons.

The only point I make is that it is important, I think, to have the quotas fixed, so that the people growing sugar in that country—and my understanding is that it takes 2 years to grow it—will know beforehand what they can reasonably depend upon as the amount they may sell.

The beet-sugar industry have in this bill—they had in the committee, at least; I do not know what has been done with it here—a provision that they shall have at least 30 percent of any increase. That need not be disturbed; and, if I were framing the bill, I should provide that what the beet-sugar industry did not get should be distributed in accordance with the proportions set out in the President's message.

I desired to make that suggestion to the Senator before the conclusion of his speech, because I should like him, before he finishes, to comment upon that thought.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the plan suggested by the Senator is so sensible that I am amazed it was not acted upon by the committee. There can be no doubt that fixing a definite quota would save heartburnings and ultimate distress over any changes which might be made by juggling figures in the future.

My own criticism of the suggestion relates alone to Puerto Rico, because in the figures which were prepared by the President, and the figures which have been used in the committee, no consideration was given to the fact that there has been a hurricane, or series of hurricanes, in Puerto Rico. There can be no doubt, however, I say in categorical answer to the Senator from Delaware, that to fix these quotas as he has suggested would be in the interest of fair play and a good feeling, and I think it should be done.

I am at a disadvantage in pressing the particular matter in which I am now interested by reason of the parliamentary situation. To offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania would take it into the third degree, as I understand, and therefore it would not be in order. May I ask the Chair if that is correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURPHY in the chair). The Senator's assumption is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. May I offer the amendment in the form of a substitute? I suppose that would still be in the third degree, would it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would.

Mr. COPELAND. I then appeal to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]. He has heard the debate. He has observed what I believe to be the feeling of the Senate that these quotas should be fixed; and I appeal to the Senator from Pennsylvania to modify his amendment so as to make the quota for Hawaii 975,000 tons, and the quota for Puerto Rico 875,000 tons.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. KING. I suggested a few moments ago that the two ought not to be linked together. Regardless of the merits of both or the merits of either, I sincerely hope the Senator will not consent to linking the two together.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask what the objection is to having them considered together?

Mr. REED. The objection is, Mr. President, that as a practical matter, there are some Senators who believe that Hawaii, being an integral part of the United States, ought to be treated like continental United States. That does not wholly apply to Puerto Rico. Many of us are ready to support the Senator from New York if he will offer an amendment covering Puerto Rico; but I do not want to confound the two. There are equities in the case of Hawaii which do not exist in the case of Puerto Rico. The proposal of the Senator from New York would increase the figure representing Puerto Rico's average production in the last 3 years. The amendment I have offered fixes the figure at less than the average production in Hawaii in the last 3 years. Senators may be willing to reduce the one and not willing to increase the other. It confuses two questions and makes the matter very difficult. I hope the Senator from New York will prepare his amendment and submit it as I have mine, and let us fight it out on the merits.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not desire to interfere with the program outlined by the Senator, but, so far as I am concerned, I think that fundamentally there is no difference between these two proposals. I think they ought both to be taken care of, and I am prepared to help take care of them.

Mr. REED. A great many Senators feel that way. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to make a statement. The amendment pending is one I have offered. I have engagements to attend two meetings in Philadelphia this evening, and I simply must take a train at 3 o'clock. In case this question should come to a vote while I am absent, I would like to have it understood that I am not absent through carelessness, but am simply forced to go away. I have a pair; I am protected to the same effect as if I were present.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I appeal once more to the Senator? I think it is hardly fair to us to split these propositions. I think the Senator from Idaho has stated the matter correctly, that they are on all fours. But, of course, I am utterly helpless if the Senator insists upon a vote on this particular amendment. I wish, however, he would put the two together.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator has been most accommodating to me many times, and I want to do what he asks, but there are so many points of difference. In Puerto Rico, for example, there is a sugar refinery, one of considerable size, now under construction. That is not true of Hawaii. The reason why Puerto Rico wants more as a quota than has been suggested is to take care of this increase in productive capacity. Hawaii does not ask that; it is willing to limit its output much more strictly than is continental United States. It does ask for fair treatment as an integral part of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if it is a place under the American flag where a new industry is being built up, and labor is to be employed, it seems to me that of itself must make a very extraordinary appeal to us to include Puerto Rico.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it is a strong appeal not to pass this bill at all.

Mr. BORAH. I might agree with the Senator as to that, but I presume it is going to pass in some form.

Mr. REED. I do not know whether that is a fact or not. The whole scheme is so un-American, it is such a flat denial of the essential liberties of the citizen, it so transgresses every conception of free government, I am hoping it will not pass at all; but if it is to pass, it ought to do equal justice to all American citizens.

Mr. BORAH. The Puerto Ricans are American citizens, and did not become so by their consent in the first instance either.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I want to say one word more. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania is mistaken about the one refinery in Puerto Rico. The license has been paid and the work is actually under way. They are prepared to proceed on a somewhat larger scale. It is the only refinery in the island.

Of course, if the Senator persists, there is nothing for me to do but to permit the amendment to go to a vote.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I was unavoidably absent from the Chamber when the able Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] made his statement regarding the amendment. He may already have covered the ground which it seems to me necessary to mention before the vote is taken.

At the outset, I affirm that no Member of the Senate wishes to do other than honor here the citizens and residents of the Hawaiian Islands. They are of fine intelligence, noted for their hospitality, and we are bound to them by ties of close and increasing association and regard.

On the other hand, it is to be borne in mind that the primary problem which we face in the pending bill is one of doing some measure of long-postponed justice to the sugar farmers of the continental United States. Lest there be misapprehension among Members of the Senate on that score, I feel bound to say that the bill does not pay undue attention to the welfare of beet and cane growers in this country.

There may be an impression that, as a result of the consideration of the bill by the Finance Committee, the beet and cane regions, at least the beet-growing regions, have been excessively favored, and specially singled out for privileged treatment in the measure when and as reported to the Senate.

Members of the Senate should once and for all realize that such is not the case. The President's message, in the tentative quotas which it set out, proceeded on the assumption that if we are to match, within reasonable bounds, production and consumption of sugar in this country, some equitable rule should be found for determining the quotas to be assigned to the various regions. Purely by way of illustration, the President, in his original sugar message, noted certain figures as quotas which the Secretary of Agriculture might choose under a representative 3-year rule out of a number of years of sugar crops and sugar consumption in this country.

The average of the years for the sugar-beet area resulted in a figure of 1,450,000 short tons of beet sugar. As a matter of fact, last year, in 1933, in the sugar-beet area of this country, the beet-sugar production was 1,756,000 short tons. Therefore, the quota first indicated fell approximately 300,000 short tons below the production of the 1933 crop. In consequence, when the bill came up for discussion, protests were reasonably made against so substantial a reduction for the sugar-beet area in this country.

Following much discussion, representatives of sugar-beet growers in the United States finally expressed their willingness to assent experimentally to a figure of 1,550,000 short tons of sugar. The reason for fixing the original figure at 1,450,000 was to be found in the fact that the figure represented the average of the three last crops grown in the sugar-beet regions. Viewed under the rule which was proposed to be applied, the Presidential figure was entirely fair and equitable in purpose.

On the other hand, even the 1,450,000 tons were objected to by other areas, including some of our islands of the sea, because, as they insisted, the 1933 beet-sugar crop now being marketed was so considerably in excess of the preceding crops as to be charged with being not representative. That it was unusual is true. For instance, the 1932 continental beet sugar sold in 1933 in this country aggregated but 1,372,000 short tons, and the 1931 beet sugar sold in 1932 was but 1,324,000 short tons.

Indeed the 1,372,000 short tons of beet sugar were more than any preceding consumption figure for domestic beet sugar in the continental United States. Therefore, in fact, the original suggestion of 1,450,000 short tons of beet sugar did represent a real advance, except for the last unprecedented year. In other words, there was every disposition on the part of the administration to be fair to domestic production and to give first attention to the welfare of sugar farmers.

I have reviewed these facts so that the fairness of the administration and the reasonableness of sugar-beet growers will alike be evident to all Members of the Senate. Nothing is being appropriated today in this bill by sugar-beet producers to which the beet growers of this country are not fully entitled.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. I should like to inquire whether there is any more reason for fixing a definite quota for the beets and the cane in Louisiana and Florida than there is in Hawaii or the insular possessions. I have never been able to get a definite answer to that question, either here or anywhere else.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator from Delaware has doubtless at different times urged the importance of giving definite and even prior recognition to the continental United States. There is, I take it, an instinctive disposition to say that we should deal first with the claims of our fellow citizens among whom we reside on this continent. They are our near neighbors. That may or may not be a sound instinct.

It is at least natural and understandable. But the real reason behind the quota arrangements in the pending measure is not that. As a matter of fact, this measure represents the meeting place of conflicting interests, not only of the continental United States but also of our sphere of influence elsewhere. The domestic sugar-growing interests of some 19 States of this country quite naturally insisted from the outset that there should be specific recognition of a fair quota for the continental United States. Other sugar-growing areas have not, for that or any other reason, been unjustly treated. As a practical matter, the moment you begin to add specifically to the continental quotas you inevitably open Pandora's box, and the bill will thereafter be subject to a constant barrage of applications for quotas from every corner of the world. We have already spent most of this day discussing the appropriate quota for the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. OVERTON. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Colorado that this bill has as its basis and foundation consumption requirements in continental United States. We are undertaking to supply consumption requirements in the mainland of the United States. Since that is the basis, it follows logically that our first effort should be to take care of mainland production.

Mr. COSTIGAN. What the Senator from Louisiana says is highly suggestive. As he knows, and as every other Member of the Senate knows, there is a strong conviction among many people who dwell on this continent that they ought to produce every pound of sugar we consume in the continental United States; and, however we may differ on such a subject, no one should be more sensible to that sort of appeal than the representatives of the high-tariff party who sit on the other side of the Senate Chamber.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not want to be misunderstood as having any objection at all to what has been done for the beet-sugar producing States and Louisiana and Florida in fixing that quota, but I am asking whether it is not reasonable, having fixed that quota, having given them 100,000 tons more than is set forth in the President's message—and to that I have no objection—to take from each of these other countries 2.1 percent less than the amount fixed in the President's message, and get it all done with at one time? That is a question I have asked several times and cannot get an answer. There may be, for all I know, some reason; and if there is, I think I am entitled to have it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The answer is that it is reasonable; but it will take us unreasonably long to arrive at any satisfactory conclusion.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think there is a further answer to be made to the Senator from Delaware. I think there was a very definite and specific reason why beet-sugar production in continental United States had to be singled out in the first instance for quota production; and that reason was that it was beet sugar, none other than beet sugar, which was singled out for the inimical observation of both the President and the Department of Agriculture when this subject originally was opened; and it was the beet-sugar production which, at least conversationally, was threatened primarily under the initial discussions of the bill by the Department.

I think the Senator from Colorado will agree with me that at the inception of the movement it was the beet-sugar portion of the sugar industry which seemed to require the protection given it by this minimum quota. So there was a specific reason why that particular figure was fixed.

That may not bear on the question of whether there ought not to be others fixed, but it does define why that figure had to be put into the bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. I have never had any question about that; but I still insist that no one has answered my question as to why we cannot make a distribution of the remainder of the sugar of this country in accordance with the President's message.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, there is one other misapprehension given more or less currency here today which I trust will not find lodgment in the Hawaiian Islands. Various statements during this discussion are calculated to impress our fellow citizens in the paradise of the Pacific with the view that they are being discriminated against by the people of the continental United States. Nothing could be farther from the truth. No part of America in fact has been more generously dealt with than the Hawaiian Islands. They deserve the best that can come to them, but let it not be said here or elsewhere that the people of the continental United States have been other than devoted to their just interests.

The islands are wealthy. They have prospered under our flag. For years they have been receiving a tariff subsidy of some $40 per ton on all sugar produced there. Their sugar comes to our mainland duty-free. The phenomenal development of the sugar industry in those islands is rooted not in the hostility but in the generosity of the people of this country.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. As my State is a beet-sugar producing State, naturally I am desirous of seeing the bill so framed as to serve the beet growers so far as possible; but I do not see how the beet-sugar growers or the cane-sugar producers in the United States can complain about fixing quotas for Hawaii and Puerto Rico. How will it hurt them?

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I say to the Senator from Idaho that no one knows better than does he the desperate plight in which the farmers of the West in the beet-growing regions find themselves at this hour. If the passage of this bill is indefinitely prolonged—indeed every hour in which it is prolonged adds to the crisis—the loss and the suffering which will be inflicted on the farmers of the sugar-beet growing regions will be incalculable. We are certain to be delayed by this suggestion. If I thought otherwise I should have not the slightest hesitation in entering on any discussion likely to contribute to any more acceptable solution of the problem.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the Senator that time is of the essence of this matter, and I am ready to vote upon every question involved in this bill. I do not see why we cannot vote upon all these questions without further discussion. Every Senator in the Chamber is well informed as to what he desires to do. Let us vote. We can dispose of it in no time. I do not see why it should be delayed. I do not see why it should imperil the bill.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I ask the Senator from Idaho if he will read to the Senate for its information the changed and specific allotments he would give to Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines if we were to proceed on the theory that we are going so to adjust the allotments at this moment?

Mr. BORAH. I am inclined to vote for the amendment which has been offered here with reference to Puerto Rico and Hawaii; and that is all I am considering.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Without reference to the effect on the other quotas? May I say, Mr. President, and I shall now detain the Senate only briefly, that what has been properly done with respect to the sugar-beet area through the increased allotment to that area of 100,000 tons presents a very definite problem for our consideration. That increase of the allotment throws out of line the other allotments suggested in the earlier Presidential message. One possible way to proceed would be to deduct from the other areas percentage amounts sufficient to make up, when added together, the 100,000 additional tons transferred to the beet area. I have before me a calculation which ought to be brought to the attention of the Senate. After giving effect to the 100,000 tons increase, if we apply to the remaining quota areas a reduction of between 2 and 3 percent, we may well conclude that the Hawaiian figures should be reduced considerably below the figure which is suggested in the pending amendment.

To put the matter in another way, the reduction under this particular proposal from the 1,750,000 tons produced in the last crop to 1,550,000 tons, represents a decline in the allotment to our sugar-beet area of 11.4 percent. The percentage of reduction allowed to Puerto Rico from the Presidential tentative figures as compared with this year's Puerto Rican crop, after giving effect to the pro rata reduction due to the increase in the beet quota of 100,000 tons, would be 12.5 percent. Hawaii, on the other hand, even after taking into account its pro rata reduction due to the 100,000 tons increase in beet quota, would only suffer a decline of 6 percent. In other words, under the plan as reported to the Senate, the decline from last year's Hawiian crop would be approximately only one half the percent decline in the beet area compared with last year's crop, and the Puerto Rican decline would be about the same as the beet-area decline. These facts should, in fairness, be noted so that the people of Hawaii will thoroughly understand that, instead of being discriminated against, they have been relatively and definitely favored, even after adding the 100,000 tons to the quota of the sugar-beet area.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, is that true also of Puerto Rico?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The figures as to Puerto Rico would be approximately the same as for the beet-sugar area. The precise figures, I may say to the Senator from New York, for Puerto Rico are 12.55 percent, whereas the decline for the beet area, even after including the 100,000-ton increase, is 11.43 percent.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. Cannot the Senator find some way by which the 90,000 tons which would make up the allowance we are seeking for Hawaii and Puerto Rico may be deducted from the Cuban quota?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, doubtless that can be done; but I venture to suggest that the shifting backward and forward of suggestions, including the last suggestion made by the able Senator from New York, is the best possible illustration of the desirability, importance, and, in my judgment, necessity of leaving the final solution of this problem to our fair and capable Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I desire to say that I am perfectly willing to do that if allowance shall be made for the hurricane loss of Puerto Rico, and that has not been done in any figures which have been presented.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. It may throw some light upon this subject if attention were challenged to the quotas proposed by the stabilization plan which was agreed upon last year by the representatives of the sugar interests not only of continental United States but of the insular possessions and Cuba. The Senator is aware of the fact that representatives of the sugar industry convened in Washington for the purpose of working out some plan that would satisfactorily meet the sugar situation. There were protracted hearings and discussions participated in by experts and practical sugar farmers. Dr. Coulter, of the Tariff Commission, presided and guided the work of the conference. Following the discussions, quotas for the following respective countries taking part in the conference were agreed upon, the object being to secure stabilization of this important industry:

The beet industry of continental United States, 1,750,000 tons; southern cane, 310,000 tons; Puerto Rico, 875,000 tons; Hawaii, 975,000 tons; the Philippine Islands, 1,100,000 tons; the Virgin Islands, 15,000 tons; and Cuba, 1,700,000 tons, making a total of 6,725,000 tons.

I attended a number of the meetings when the discussion was in progress, and my understanding, from my contacts with a large number of delegates and representatives, was that they accepted, with practical unanimity, the quotas which I have just stated.

The quotas proposed by the President reduced the continental quota from 1,750,000 tons to 1,450,000 tons; southern cane from 310,000 tons to 260,000 tons; Puerto Rico from 875,000 tons to 821,000 tons—and I might say that the 3-year average between 1925 and 1927, inclusive, for Puerto Rico was only 577,500 tons; Hawaii from 975,000 to 935,000 tons; the Philippines from 1,100,000 tons to 1,037,000 tons, a reduction, as will be observed, of approximately 63,000 tons from the agreed quota at the conference to which I have called attention; the Virgin Islands from 15,000 tons to 5,000 tons; and in the case of Cuba an increase from 1,700,000 tons to 1,944,000, or an aggregate of 6,452,000 tons.

The 3-year average of deliveries—that is, from 1925 to 1927, inclusive—was 6,638,500 tons.

I hope the Senator will pardon me for calling attention to these figures, and if they throw any light upon this rather complicated question, and aid us in reaching a happy solution, I know that my trespass will be forgiven.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the figures cited by the Senator from Utah are informative.

Returning to the question of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], may I say that my attention has just been directed to certain figures for Puerto Rico dealing with the consumption of Puerto Rican sugar in this country during the years 1931 to 1933. Included in those years, I assume, was one hurricane year. The tabulation shows, for 1931, 752,000 short tons; for 1932, 915,000 short tons; for 1933, 794,000 short tons. On the average of these figures the Presidential quota for Puerto Rico was, I believe, based.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I agree fully with what the Senator has said, but——

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I add that those figures show a higher average than any other 3-year period for Puerto Rico during the years from 1925 to 1933, inclusive?

Mr. COPELAND. Needless to say, on that account I should be happy to accept them, but during those 3 years there was a loss of production, owing to a hurricane, amounting to what is estimated to be a total of 180,000 tons. Including those figures, the average would be 60,000 tons greater, and 60,000 tons added to the average would make approximately the figures for which I am contending, those figures being 875,000 tons; and that, to my mind, is a just and fair figure.

Of course, my interest has been greater in Puerto Rico than Hawaii. With the conditions in Hawaii I am not so familiar, but it would seem to me, in view of the studies made and referred to by the able Senator from Colorado, that those figures could not be considered complete without adding the hurricane loss during the 3 years.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I have the attention of the Senator from New York also? The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has just presented figures which represent the voluntary agreement last fall with reference to what the relative producing areas thought they were entitled to in respect to each other. The relationship which existed in that agreement as between continental beets and Puerto Rican cane was as follows: This is the voluntary agreement. They agreed that continental beets should have 1,750,000 tons and that Puerto Rico cane should have 875,000 tons. Very well. Under the provisions of the bill the quota for continental beets is reduced 12 percent from 1,750,000 tons, and in order, therefore, to maintain the same relationship which was agreed upon voluntarily by the representatives of these competing areas last fall, it seems to me if we fix the Puerto Rican quota we should apply the same 12-percent reduction straight down the stabilization program, which would bring it below 800,000 tons.

Mr. COPELAND. I see the force of the figures presented, but still I am unconvinced.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Upon what basis would Puerto Rico be entitled to claim the full quota under the stabilization agreement when continental beets are failing by 12 percent to have the quota provided in the stabilization agreement?

Mr. COPELAND. Let me say to the Senator from Michigan, if the Senator from Colorado will yield——

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I am perfectly willing to accept the arrangement made in the bill as regards sugar beets. I am willing to accept the quota established for exchange. But I contend with all the vigor of my soul that we are not being fair to our own citizens in Puerto Rico if we do not deal more generously with them. I have no desire to be unkind to Cuba. The first public speaking I ever did in my life was when I undertook to stimulate interest for intervention in Cuba on the part of the United States. I have had that interest all these years. But, Mr. President, if I have to choose between being liberal with the citizens of Cuba and being liberal with the citizens of the United States living in Puerto Rico, I am going to err, if I err at all, on the side of the American people.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What I am asking the Senator is why there should not be equality of treatment as respects American citizens in the beet areas of continental United States and American citizens in Puerto Rico if we are going to fix quotas for both. I am asking the Senator whether he does not concede that on the basis of the stabilization agreement he is seeking a greater advantage for Puerto Rico than the bill undertakes to give in its quota to continental beets.

Mr. COPELAND. Where did the Senator get his figures, may I ask?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I got them from the statement just submitted for the RECORD by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. COPELAND. I have here the marketing agreement which was made, whereby Hawaii was given 975,000 tons, Puerto Rico 875,000 tons, the Philippine Islands 955,000 tons, and Cuba 1,700,000 tons. But now, somehow or other, through the juggling of figures—I do not mean the improper juggling of figures, but in the confusion which arises from handling masses of large figures—Cuba has been given 1,944,000 tons. We are only asking for 90,000 more tons to give fair treatment to Puerto Rico and Hawaii.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Would the Senator object to having the same percentages apply straight down against the stabilization plan?

Mr. COPELAND. I should want to study those figures. If the Senator will submit them to me, I shall be glad to look at them.

Mr. VANDENBERG. My only argument with the Senator is over the size of the quota which he is proposing for Puerto Rico in relation to the quota already fixed for continental beets. I am submitting to him that he is seeking a greater percentage for Puerto Rico on the basis of the voluntarily agreed stabilization plan than we are receiving for continental beets.

Mr. COPELAND. I would not object if the Senator added another 100,000 tons to the continental quota.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Michigan would not object either.

Mr. COPELAND. That is all right. Propose a greater quota for the people of the United States and I will vote for it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is easier said than done. We have been trying to do it for 2 months.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was not able to be present for just a moment during the discussion, having been called momentarily from the Chamber. I wish to inquire with reference to the figures the Senator from Michigan has just used. What is the reduction in percentage which the Senator suggests continental United States would take?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Twelve percent.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the reduction in percentage Cuba would take?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Cuba would take no reduction. The bill very frankly charges the economic stabilization to the sugar farmers of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is what I wanted to ascertain. The theory behind it is that we take 12 percent from continental United States and no percentage from Cuba. Is that the fact?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I beg the Senator to address his question to someone who is in favor of that kind of arithmetic.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is that exactly, in the opinion of the Senator from Michigan, what the bill does?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is precisely what the bill does.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, it is my hope that certain observations I made with respect to the Hawaiian Islands will also be considered as applying to Puerto Rico. I have in my hand the weekly statistical sugar-trade journal of January 11, 1934, containing figures compiled by Willett & Gray, in long tons, with respect to the sugar crop of the world in different years from 1913–14 to 1933–34. I wish to call attention only to the relative progress in sugar production in the different regions we have been discussing.

In 1913–14 the Puerto Rican production, in long tons, was 325,021; in 1933–34 it was 876,000 long tons, representing the progress of Puerto Rico in sugar production under the very substantial tariff bounty that that island has been enjoying.

In the same period the Hawaiian Islands advanced from a production of 550,925 long tons in 1913–14 to 919,000 long tons in 1933–34.

That the progress in the continental United States in sugar production was not disproportionate is shown by the following figures for the beet areas: 655,298 long tons produced in 1913–14 and 1,450,000 long tons in 1933–34. It is to be borne in mind that these figures are long tons refined. The last figure, converted to short tons raw basis, would give the figure of 1,750,000 tons, which has been so often cited here this afternoon as the phenomenal production for the beet areas during the last crop year.

Mr. President, I ought to add that Puerto Rico, under the bill which is before the Senate, will have further special consideration—at least it is possible for the President to issue a proclamation permitting that result. The bill permits the creation, out of processing taxes on island sugars, of a separate fund which can be used in Puerto Rico for the promotion of agricultural development other than sugar. The same generalization applies to Hawaii and to the Philippine Islands. In other words, if the bill is passed, instead of appropriating to ourselves the proceeds of pro-essing taxes on island sugars, special funds are expected to be created which will be used, not for our benefit, but for the benefit of diversified agriculture in those respective regions.

This entire discussion must have convinced every one on this floor of the unwisdom of adopting, at this hour, any amendment which will defer final action by the Senate on the pending bill. Great distress is now being experienced in the sugar-beet areas because the planting period, as stated in telegrams reaching us almost hourly, is about half over. The fact is, according to all the reports, that every hour's delay is actually diminishing the returns which will come to farmers of the sugar-beet areas of this country. For one, I earnestly trust that the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I sympathize very thoroughly with what the Senator from Colorado has said in his closing sentences. If we are going to pass the measure, we ought to pass it just as soon as possible.

Expressing my personal view, I hope that we may take votes upon these matters and conclude the consideration of the bill today. If we take up the measure again tomorrow, it will be another day; and I know no reason why we should not vote now.

I am in thorough sympathy with what the Senator from Colorado says. Let us vote upon the measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes appear to have it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I was on my feet, attempting to get recognition, in order to ask whether we had not better have a quorum before voting on this amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator wants the yeas and nays there will be no objection to giving them to him, provided we hasten along, because more speeches probably will be made if we have a quorum call.

Mr. FESS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, before that question is put, let us accept what has happened with regard to this amendment. Before that is done, however, let me say that it is my intention to do what I have been wanting to do all the afternoon, to link together Puerto Rico and Hawaii. If this decision is accepted, I shall then vote that the quota for Hawaii be fixed at 975,000 tons, and the quota for Puerto Rico at 875,000 tons. Then on that question I should be very glad if we could have a record vote.

Mr. FESS. I had understood that the present vote was on the Reed amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. It was on the Reed amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. But that includes Hawaii only.

Mr. FESS. The Senator from Pennsylvania is not in the Chamber, and it does not seem to me right to vote on his amendment in his absence.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Pennsylvania stated that he had to leave.

Mr. VANDENBERG. He has left the city.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me say to the Senator from Ohio that the Senator from Pennsylvania understood very well that this amendment was to be voted on in his absence. He has gone to Philadelphia.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Pennsylvania understood, I think, that the two proposals were not to be linked; that the vote was to be taken upon his amendment, which related solely and exclusively to Hawaii, and did not embody any suggestion about Puerto Rico.

Mr. FESS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let us have the yeas and nays on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED].

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I announce the absence of the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], all detained on official business.

I regret to announce the absence of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], caused by a death in his family; and the absence of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], caused by personal illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] to the amendment of the committee. On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have felt a deep interest in the Territory of Hawaii ever since it became a part of the United States. I have watched with interest the commercial, material, and educational development which has there taken place. My interest in part grew out of the fact that my father spent 12 years in Hawaii and to the day of his death was a sincere friend of the Hawaiian people. Before the Hawaiian Islands were incorporated into the United States I believed that they should be brought within the jurisdiction of our Government. It seemed to me that if they were not made a part of the United States, other governments would covet their possession and seek their control.

A number of European powers having interests in the Orient, among them being Germany, Great Britain, France, and Holland, might, I feared, seek to obtain special interests in the Hawaiian Islands if not the ownership and control of the same. It seemed to me that there were many reasons justifying the United States, if it was in consonance with the wishes of the inhabitants of Hawaii, in bringing them under the sovereignty and control of our Government. Accordingly, many years ago, when I was a Member of the House, I offered the first resolution for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands. Within a short time thereafter the Hawaiian Government, as an independent nation, ceased to exist, its territory became a part of the United States, and its inhabitants citizens of the United States. A Territorial form of government was established, and a measure of local autonomy granted to it.

The population of the Territory has greatly increased and it has made remarkable advancement commercially, industrially, agriculturally, educationally, culturally, and, indeed, in all important and progressive matters.

Mr. President, the Territory of Hawaii is as much a part of the United States as is the State of Pennsylvania, or, for that matter, any other State in the Union. It is under the flag of this Republic; it is under the Constitution of this Republic; the Bill of Rights and all fundamental guarantees provided by the Constitution apply to the Territory and to its inhabitants. The inhabitants of Hawaii are American citizens and entitled to all the rights of American citizens; their products have the same rights to enter the ports of continental United States as the products of any State of the Union are entitled to pass beyond its borders and into any other State. The people of Hawaii are loyal American citizens. They have done their part; they have contributed in every proper way to the Government of the United States and discharged all the duties and obligations resting upon them as loyal, patriotic American citizens. There is no divided allegiance.

Accordingly, there ought not to be a different policy invoked or plan carried into execution in dealing with industrial or other questions common to the United States and to the Territory. Therefore, when I have suggested that if there were no sugar quota for continental United States I have stated that the Territory of Hawaii should not be subjected to a quota; and, upon the other hand, I have believed that if a quota were fixed for continental United States it would not be improper to apply the same rule to the Territory of Hawaii.

When the Senator from Colorado was speaking I called his attention to the conference held in the fall of 1933, participated in by the sugar producers in continental United States, Hawaii, the Philippines, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Cuba, and to the agreement there reached as to the quotas that should be fixed for the participating countries. A quota was fixed for each of these countries and, as I have stated, the agreement reached was reasonably satisfactory and was acquiesced in by the representatives of the industry there participating.

The quota proposed for Hawaii in the stabilization plan was 975,000 tons. I have been willing to carry into execution the provisions of that stabilization agreement. Under that plan the beet growers of continental United States would have been authorized to produce 1,750,000 tons of sugar. That quota, however, was reduced and the pending bill gives a quota of 1,550,000 tons. There has been a reduction of 11 percent from the amount provided in the stabilization agreement. While I should be glad to vote for the full quota provided for the United States as well as for the Territory of Hawaii, I have discovered that a measure giving these quotas would not meet with approval; indeed the House departed from the quota and made the reduction to which I have referred.

It is obvious that the proposal to give to the Territory of Hawaii the full amount provided in the President's quota will not be approved, and while I would be glad, as I have stated, to accord to the Territory the full amount indicated in the President's quotas, I shall not vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania believing that if adopted it might jeopardize the passage of the measure, but if it shall be defeated I shall then offer an amendment providing approximately 11 percent reduction in the quota for Hawaii.

While I believe that such quota is too low and is not warranted by the situation, nevertheless, when confronted with the difficulties and uncertainties connected with this proposed legislation I feel constrained to take the position just indicated. Moreover, I am inclined to think that it would be better for the Territory to have a quota less than that to which it is entitled than to leave it to the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture to determine the amount of sugar which may be produced in the Territory.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I say for the RECORD that I take precisely the view of this thing taken by my able friend from Utah, and I shall vote accordingly, and for the same reason.

Mr. KING. I regret the complicated situation which has developed in connection with legislation relating to the sugar question. I had hoped that a measure would be submitted that would be fair and just in all of its provisions and one to which I could subscribe without compunctions or fears or reservations. The bill before us does not suit me; it has provisions that are objectionable; it rests upon a foundation which I fear is not stable; and I have no little concern as to the results of this proposed legislation. However, I am advised from the beet producers of my State as well as those in other States that this measure, objectionable as many of its provisions are, will perhaps meet a situation which calls for some sort of legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the committee. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is unavoidably detained. I am advised that were he present he would vote "nay." Were I permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HEBERT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], who is detained on account of illness. If present, he would vote "nay" on this question. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. DUFFY (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent in attendance on the funeral of former Senator Blaine. I am not advised as to how he would vote on this question were he present and voting.

Mr. METCALF (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. STEPHENS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON], and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALCOTT. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], who is necessarily detained. Not knowing how he would vote if he were present, I refrain from voting.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]; and

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] earlier in the day explained his position on the amendment and the necessity of his absence. He announced that he was paired.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] is paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE]. The Senator from Washington, if present and voting, would vote "yea", and the Senator from Georgia, if present and voting, would vote "nay."

I desire also to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are detained on official business.

Mr. DICKINSON. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], who is necessarily detained. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD], which I transfer to my colleague the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], who is unavoidably absent, and vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS. I reannounce the absence of several Senators and the reasons for such as previously given by me.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 50, as follows:

So Mr. REED's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment: In line 10, page 10, after the word "subsection", insert the following words: Provided, That the quota calendar year for Hawaii shall not be less than 868,000 tons, not including sugar consumed in Hawaii."

I reached the figures indicated by referring to the various quotas which were proposed in the stabilization plan which was agreed upon by the various sugar interests of the United States and of our insular possessions, as well as Cuba, in the fall of last year.

As I stated a few moments ago, when I submitted these figures to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the United States received a quota of 1,750,000 tons and Hawaii a quota of 975,000 tons. It is not necessary, in support of the amendment I have offered, to read the quotas which were stated in that agreement to the other countries participating. Eleven percent of the amount allocated to the United States has been deducted, and the proposed amendment applies the same rule to the Territory of Hawaii. I have heretofore indicated that the rule was not satisfactory to me and indeed was not fair; but, believing that the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] was doomed to defeat, I thought this proposed amendment might be adopted and go to conference.

Even though the amendment would not do justice to the Territory, I cannot help but believe that it possesses advantages in the plan to confer discretionary authority upon the Secretary of Agriculture to fix quotas.

We now find, in the bill under consideration, an 11-percent reduction below the amount that was unanimously agreed upon by the representatives of all the sugar interests at that time. It seemed to me that it would not be unfair to subject Hawaii to the same reduction—to wit, 11 percent—and the figures included in the amendment represent the total after the subtraction of the 11 percent.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. Has the Senator at hand the figures in reference to Louisiana and Florida, the sugarcane area, under the proposed operating agreement?

Mr. KING. The Southern cane area, under this agreement, was to receive 252,000 tons. This included, as I understand, Florida as well as Louisiana.

Mr. OVERTON. Three hundred and ten thousand tons.

Mr. KING. No; 252,000 tons.

Mr. OVERTON. That is for Louisiana.

Mr. KING. I am in error; yes. The amount was to be 310,000 tons in the aggregate.

Mr. OVERTON. The quota assigned to sugarcane under the pending bill is 260,000 tons. That is a reduction of 50,000 tons. Dividing 50,000 by 310,000, we find that it would be a reduction of over 16 percent.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not talking about Louisiana now.

Mr. OVERTON. I am.

Mr. KING. The Senator may talk about his State—and it is a great State—in his own time, but I do not care to inject into the few remarks I am making the proposition which he desires now to discuss.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah does not want to be bothered with Louisiana any more. He has been bothered enough by it in committee.

Mr. KING. We can stand Louisiana in committee as well as on the floor.

Mr. President, before voting I wish to ask the Senate to listen to a few extracts from a letter which I have just received from a distinguished resident of Hawaii who formerly resided in the State of Utah. He is one of the able lawyers, one of the progressive citizens, of that great Territory. In a letter dated April 6, he states:

> I had the privilege of having dinner last night with ——— ———, the ——— ——— of the Hawaiian Department, and during the evening the discussion arose as to what effect the Jones-Costigan bill would have upon the loyalty and patriotism of the Hawaiian people in case it became a law in its present form, discriminating against Hawaii. ——— ——— stated that in his opinion it would have a very grave effect upon the defense of these islands, in that the people would not feel that they were citizens of the United States in the true sense of the word. President David Crawford, of the University of Hawaii, was extremely concerned and took the view that such a discrimination as was expressed in the Jones-Costigan bill would defeat the nationalizing of the many different races living in Hawaii. The whole community appears to be aroused, as they do not consider such a discrimination as wholly confined to business or industry, but take the view that it is a personal discrimination, and an attempt to reduce them to an inferior status contrary to the intent and wording of the treaty of annexation. I need not tell you, of course, that sugar means the very life blood of these islands, and that practically every one in Hawaii is dependent upon the prosperity of the sugar industry, directly or indirectly, for their living. * * *

I have omitted the name of the party referred to in the letter, but I am well acquainted with him and know him to be a man of honor and integrity.

There is some other reference to myself, and to the fact that I had occasionally spoken in behalf of the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. President, I repeat what I said a moment ago, that Hawaii is an integral part of this Republic—as much so, to use the language of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] in the committee, if not upon the floor, as the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. It is under the flag. Hawaii came voluntarily into the United States. When the people of Hawaii came into the United States they came in under the solemn pledge, by treaty as well as by the organic act which was subsequently enacted, that they were a part and parcel of the United States; they were entitled to all the rights of American citizens; and now, whether justly or unjustly, many of them feel that this proposed legislation is discriminatory in character.

I agree with my dear friend from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] in the observation he made a moment ago that there is no intention to discriminate. I know that neither he nor any other person supporting this measure has in his heart any desire to treat Hawaii differently than they would treat any State or the people of any State; but they have felt constrained, in order to secure the passage of a bill of this kind, to accept the terms found in this measure.

I will say very frankly that I do not like the bill. I do not like the thought of subjecting people living in continental United States to a quota. The sugar industry is an important industry. It is one that may grow and expand; and so long as the consumptive needs are so much less than the production, I have looked with a great deal of regret upon plans contemplating subjecting the people of continental United States to quotas and preventing them from expanding and developing this great industry which I believe is so important to the agriculturists of the United States. In view of conditions which it is not necessary to recapitulate I have felt constrained to accept as a fait accompli the fact that we have this bill before us, and I shall vote for it, but I shall do so reluctantly. I do not like the principle involved. I do not like the idea of restricting production in continental United States. I do not like the restrictions which are being imposed upon Hawaii.

Mr. President, I shall not take the time to elaborate this matter further; and I ask for a vote upon my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 9, beginning with line 16.

The committee amendment was agreed to, as follows:

"(ii) Forbid processors, handlers of sugar, and others from transporting to, receiving in, processing or marketing in, continental United States, and/or from processing in the Territory of Hawaii or Puerto Rico for consumption in continental United States, sugar from the Territory of Hawaii or Puerto Rico, in excess of quotas fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture, for any calendar year, based on average quantities therefrom brought into continental United States for consumption, or which was actually consumed, therein during such 3 years, respectively, in the years 1925–1933, inclusive, as the Secretary of Agriculture may, from time to time, determine to be the most representative respective 3 years, adjusted, together with the quotas established pursuant to paragraph (i), (in such manner as the Secretary shall determine) to the remainder of the total estimated consumption requirements of sugar for continental United States, determined pursuant to subsection (2) of this section, after deducting therefrom the quotas for continental United States, provided for by paragraph (B) of this subsection: Provided, however, That in such quotas there may be included direct-consumption sugar up to an amount not exceeding the respective quantities of direct-consumption sugar therefrom brought into continental United States for consumption, or which was actually consumed, therein during the year 1931, 1932, or 1933, whichever is greater, and the Secretary of Agriculture may, by orders or regulations, allot such quotas and readjust any such allotment, from time to time, among the processors, handlers of sugar, and others; and/or.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next committee amendment passed over.

The amendment passed over was on page 11, line 17, after the word "quotas", to strike out "for edible molasses and/or"; in line 19, after "United States", to insert "and/or for edible molasses, sirups, and sugar mixtures, as part of or", and in line 21, after "(A)", to strike out "and (B)" and insert "to (C) inclusive", so as to read:

"(D) Establish a separate quota or quotas for sirup of cane juice produced in continental United States and/or for edible molasses, sirups, and sugar mixtures, as part of or in addition to the quotas established pursuant to paragraphs (A) to (C), inclusive, of this subsection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Was that subsection (D), Mr. President, which was just agreed to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; subsection (D) was under consideration and was agreed to.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment dealing with subsection (D) was agreed to may be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote will be reconsidered.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator from New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon is making a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McNARY. I observe the presence of the Senator from New York on the floor. I thought probably it was not quite fair to take up the Puerto Rican amendment during his absence.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The amendment I was about to propose related to subsection (D) on page 11. I did not refer to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the Senate agreed to the amendment beginning on page 9, line 16, and extending to line 19, page 10, be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was agreed to? The Chair hears none, and the vote will be reconsidered.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I was called to the telephone on an important matter relating to the business of a Senate committee. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Oregon for holding the matter open for me.

I am sure there are those in this Chamber who are anxious to help the Puerto Ricans. They are among our best customers. They are American citizens, 1,600,000 of them. They have suffered from the effects of hurricanes, and in consequence the quota which they will be given under the general terms of the bill will be much less than it should be. Therefore, Mr. President, I venture to offer an amendment to fix the quota of Puerto Rico at 875,000 tons.

I send to the desk and ask to have read an amendment on which I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, line 10, after the word "subsection", it is proposed to insert:

Provided, however, That the quota per calendar year for Puerto Rico shall not be less than 875,000 tons, not including sugar consumed in Hawaii.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] to the amendment of the committee.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DICKINSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], who is necessarily detained. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore concerning my general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], I withhold my vote.

Mr. HEBERT (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], who is detained on account of illness. If present, he would vote "nay." If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea." I refrain from voting.

Mr. DUFFY (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE's name was called). I wish to make the same announcement with reference to the absence of my colleague the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] as on previous roll calls. I am not advised as to how, if present, he would vote on this question.

Mr. METCALF (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FLETCHER. Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the last roll call, I vote "nay."

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]; and

So Mr. COPELAND'S amendment to the amendment reported by the committee was rejected.

Mr. METCALF. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island offers an amendment which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment of the committee, on page 10, line 16, after the word "greater", it is proposed to strike out the comma and to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That after December 31, 1934, there may be included, in the case of Puerto Rico, direct-consumption sugar up to an amount not exceeding 37 percent of the quota established for Puerto Rico.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, by the organic act of 1917, the residents of Puerto Rico were declared to be citizens of the United States. By virtue of this act, the citizens were brought into the Army of the United States for prosecution of the World War. The resources of the people of Puerto Rico were thrown into the Federal Treasury for the prosecution of that war, and since that day all administrations have considered the island of Puerto Rico as an integral part of the United States. The Democratic platform of 1928 outlined the policies of that party toward Puerto Rico in the following words:

We favor granting to Puerto Rico such territorial form of government as would meet the present economic conditions of the island, and would provide for the aspirations of her people, with the view to ultimate statehood.

Four years later the Democratic platform outlined the policy of that party by the simple assertion, "We advocate statehood for Puerto Rico."

To all intents and purposes the policies of the United States since 1917 toward Puerto Rico have and should have been the consideration of that island as a portion of the United States.

In December 1932 the steamship Coamo sailed for Puerto Rico bearing food and clothing for the destitute children of the island. The President-elect, speaking from Albany, N.Y., sent this ship into Puerto Rican waters with the declaration that the deplorable economic conditions then existing in Puerto Rico would move him to adopt a strong reconstructive program for the rehabilitation of the entire island. In that address the President-elect further stated that Puerto Rico is our own American island, and the port to which this Christmas ship was sailing was within the boundaries of our own Nation.

As a part of the reconstruction program for this Nation, which the President had declared to include the island of Puerto Rico, the Congress adopted the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Section 10, paragraph E, of this act extended the provisions to Puerto Rico and Hawaii.

Thus we have a sequence of events, beginning with our entrance into the World War in 1917, which have consistently declared the policy of the United States toward Puerto Rico to be one of consideration of that island as an integral part of our country. The organic act adopted in 1917 bound the Congress to this policy by placing the island under all statutory laws of the United States, which were to be considered in full force with the exception of the internal revenue act.

Thus as a result of this sequence of events we now find the island of Puerto Rico without yet having received the statehood promised in two consecutive campaigns by the Democratic Party, subject to all provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and all other regulatory measures for the rehabilitation of agriculture and industry. But we find the ironical situation where the island, after having been subjected to these regulatory measures, is failing to receive the benefits intended by the one act which could serve to rehabilitate the island.

We find ourselves in the unfortunate position of declaring the people and the industries of Puerto Rico to be subject to the provisions of the processing taxes without the possibility of receiving the benefits of these processing taxes. In other words, we say to the citizens of Puerto Rico, "You shall help pay for our reconstruction program; you shall bow to the codes of the National Recovery Administration; you shall be subject to the statutory laws of the United States, but you shall not share in the benefits which may accrue from these actions."

It is my understanding that the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Tugwell, assured the sugar interests of Puerto Rico that they would have nothing to worry about in the pending sugar legislation. With these assurances the one important industry of Puerto Rico saw a ray of hope for the future. The Secretary of Agriculture has stated that insofar as the refining clauses of this bill are concerned the Department of Agriculture has no interest whatever. The position we find ourselves in, therefore, is that under the guise of regulating an agricultural product we are taking from the island of Puerto Rico—an integral part of the United States—to give to the mainland refiners.

Puerto Ricans are citizens of the United States. As a fundamental proposition it is wholly unjustifiable in equity to legislate that Louisiana, Colorado, or California can make all their sugar cane and sugar beets into refined sugar, but our fellow citizens from Puerto Rico can convert only 15 percent of their sugar cane into refined sugar.

It is the exercise of might rather than right for Congress to say, "You cannot exercise your natural right to establish factories for the manufacture of your own farm products, because to do so will not be regarded with favor on the mainland."

The bill gives by legislative fiat to the American refiners preferential treatment which they asked for in the sugar stabilization agreement, and which was rejected by Secretary Wallace.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. METCALF. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. What percentage of raw sugar can be refined in Puerto Rico and imported into this country under the bill as it now stands?

Mr. METCALF. About 15 percent.

Mr. WALSH. How does the Senator arrive at that figure?

Mr. METCALF. There is only one refinery there now——

Mr. WALSH. Does not the bill leave it to the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture to determine the amount of refined sugar?

Mr. METCALF. I do not understand that to be so. On the contrary, I understand that it does not.

Mr. WALSH. Where is the provision in the bill which fixes the quota for refined sugar?

Mr. METCALF. On page 10, line 10.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator state how he arrives at the percentage of 37 suggested in his amendment? What is the percentage of refined sugar now imported?

Mr. METCALF. About 15 percent.

Mr. WALSH. So the Senator is seeking to increase the amount of refined sugar from 15 to 37 percent?

Mr. METCALF. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. In every other instance the amount of refined sugar is being reduced.

Mr. METCALF. There is one refinery there now which has a capacity of 165,000 tons. It has never produced that amount, and it is already licensed. It is now proposed to build another one, and we are proposing that a maximum of 303,000 tons may be produced in the two refineries.

Mr. WALSH. But the principle sought to be applied in fixing these quotas is to arrive at the average importations from the various possessions during the last 3 years. I understand the Senator to say that would be about 15 percent from Puerto Rico, but because they are contemplating the construction of another refinery, or are actually building another one there, he desires the quota to be increased to 37 percent, so that refinery may do business with the United States against American refineries.

Mr. METCALF. With the extra amount there will probably be a little loss to the refineries here, but it will not be of consequence.

Mr. WALSH. Can the Senator give the figures as to how much refined sugar was imported from Puerto Rico last year and how much raw sugar?

Mr. METCALF. I do not have the figures at hand at the moment.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Rhode Island will permit me, the figure is approximately 124,000 tons.

Mr. WALSH. Of refined sugar or raw sugar?

Mr. WALCOTT. Refined sugar.

Mr. WALSH. How much raw sugar was imported?

Mr. WALCOTT. About 800,000 tons.

Mr. METCALF. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. So about one sixth of the total importations of sugar was in the form of refined sugar.

Mr. WALCOTT. I think it is just under 15 percent.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the Senator from Rhode Island think, in view of the policy under the pending bill, that asking us to increase the percentage from 15 to 37 percent is out of keeping with the other quotas?

Mr. METCALF. No; I do not. Here is a little island whose people have already started to build another refinery which will put men to work. We know how the island suffered from two hurricanes only a few years apart. I think the small amount which it will take from our American refineries would not be really noticed here.

Mr. WALSH. Unfortunately the American refineries could also relate a tale of unemployment and want and suffering among their employees.

Mr. METCALF. I think probably with the extra amount of sugar that will be refined they can still operate all of their refineries in this country.

Mr. President, I have no interest whatever in this matter other than a sense of fairness and justice. It would appear to me that if we are to subject the people of Puerto Rico to all of the regulations of our various reconstruction acts we should certainly allow them some of the benefits. If they are to pay processing taxes on our flour and on our cloth they certainly should be given the small privilege of refining a product of their own soil. Consequently, I am proposing an amendment to the bill which will limit the proportion of the Puerto Rican quota which may be refined on the island to 37 percent after 1934. I propose this amendment because:

First. I feel that Puerto Rico is an integral part of the United States, and that the people of that island, as citizens of the United States, have every right to industrial development of at least part of their natural resources.

Second. Since we are subjecting the people of Puerto Rico to all the regulations and taxes of our recovery program, we should allow them some of the benefits.

Third. I feel that this clause is an injustice to American citizens for the purpose of perpetuating the mainland refiners, some of whom have continued to earn good profits during the depression.

Fourth. I feel that the small amount of sugar which would be refined in Puerto Rico would be of little importance in the continental United States, but of tremendous importance to the successful culmination of a reasonable rehabilitation program in a territory where such rehabilitation is sorely and desperately needed.

This amendment will have no effect whatever upon the administration's intention to stabilize the economic condition of Cuba, because it in no way affects the Cuban quota, either of raw or refined sugar.

It has no effect whatever upon the American beet-sugar or cane-sugar grower, as their quotas remain fixed. Actually, the only interest of the continental sugar grower is the amount of sugar which is brought into continental ports, and not the condition of that sugar when it arrives at the market.

I think I may state with reasonable assurance that Secretary Wallace and the experts who have drafted this bill are in hearty sympathy with this amendment. It can hurt no one, and certainly it will partially undo a very great injustice which we are about to inflict upon 1,600,000 of our own American citizens.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I fear that the Senator is "a voice crying in the wilderness"; but I desire to add a word to the argument he has presented. Before doing so, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not the treatment proposed to be accorded our insular possessions in this bill was approved by the War Department? Did the Secretary of War write a letter approving what is here proposed?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, my recollection is that the Secretary of War wrote us a letter in behalf of Puerto Rico, and we had several communications from the officials of Puerto Rico. I do not recall now whether or not they wanted a quota fixed. I know the Secretary of War manifested every interest in the subject. I think his communication was quite largely on the same line as the letter of the Secretary of the Interior with reference to Hawaii.

Mr. COPELAND. I am sorry to say that I am left more or less in the dark by what the Senator has said. Did I understand him to say that the Secretary of War approved of this treatment of American citizens living in our insular possessions?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know that I can state any more on the subject than I have stated. I have not before me the letter of the Secretary of War with reference to the matter. As I explained before, it was a practical question that confronted us, and that was the reason why we did not fix the quota in the case of Puerto Rico and in the case of Hawaii.

The Senator has seen today that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] offered four different amendments in about 10 minutes. One distinguished Senator in the Finance Committee thought he could fix quotas with a pencil and a pad in a little while, and he figured out certain quotas; but the quotas recommended were determined upon after several months of very arduous consideration.

I am quite sure, and I express the sincere hope, that Puerto Rico and Hawaii will be treated fairly in fixing the quotas; and I shall do all I can to bring that about by appeal or expression of sympathy or otherwise, so far as any conference I may have with the Secretary of Agriculture is concerned.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask the Senator from Mississippi if, during all the discussion about quotas, the maximum demand made was not that a quota should be arrived at that was about one third of the average imports for the past 3 years of raw sugar and refined sugar?

Mr. HARRISON. I think that is true.

Mr. WALSH. And in no instance have we gone beyond that?

Mr. HARRISON. That is very true.

Mr. WALSH. This amendment seeks to go beyond that—in fact, to double it?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Because the average has been 15 percent, and the amendment asks 37 percent.

Mr. HARRISON. What we tried to do was to fix the status quo with respect to the matter.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, we have in Puerto Rico 1,600,000 American citizens. Almost the only means of livelihood they have is the sugar business. They have but one refinery—just one. They have not 8, or 10, or 50. They have one. This bill is so written that when it is administered it will mean that Puerto Rico, with a million and a half American citizens, will have about 50 percent less than the capacity of its one refinery as its quota of refined sugar to be sent into the United States.

I do not have to be a prophet or the son of a prophet to know what will be the sentiment of Puerto Ricans when they learn that the Senate of the United States was unwilling to give them permission even to operate their one refinery at anywhere near capacity.

Mr. President, I am not sure that I would go as far as the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF]. His proposal would make it possible not only to operate the one refinery at capacity, but to operate another refinery. I am not particularly eager to have new refineries built outside continental United States. We have refineries here; we have refineries in my own State; but, in the interest of common decency and humanity as well as love of our own country—not alone continental United States, but our country wherever the stars and stripes may fly—in the interest of patriotism and common decency to our citizens I do contend that an opportunity should be given to the people of Puerto Rico to operate their one refinery at capacity.

It is utterly useless to make an appeal. It is set in the stars that this bill is to pass as it is written—an outrageous bill, a bill that will cost the housewives of the United States $200,000,000 annually—and yet, willing as we are to impose upon the citizens of our country a burden of that magnitude, we are unwilling to let these poor brothers and sisters of ours down in Puerto Rico have enough refined sugar placed in the quota to run their one mill and give employment to the workers in that island.

Mr. President, I do not know that there is anything in the world I can say to make clearer the feeling I have in my heart. I do want to make just one last selfish appeal. Sometimes an appeal to the pocketbook means more than an appeal to the heart.

Let me call attention to the fact that this little island of Puerto Rico imports from continental United States each year from seventy-five to one hundred and twenty-five million dollars' worth of goods. If they could run their refinery and make more money, they would buy more goods. Because we are unwilling, however, to impose any burden on a sister republic—and I am sorry that we have even to suggest it—we are willing to let our fellow citizens in the island of Puerto Rico suffer from the lack of income which could be given by the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. President, I think I have said all I can say, but I know that what we are doing here today is unjust and unfair and indecent and unpatriotic, and we ought not to do it.

The matter is for the Senate to decide.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment on page 11, the vote on which was reconsidered.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 11, line 19, after the words "United States", it is proposed to insert "and/or for edible molasses, sirups, and sugar mixtures, as part of or", and in line 21, after "(A)", to strike out "and (B)" and insert "to (C), inclusive", so as to read:

"(D) Establish a separate quota or quotas for sirup of cane juice produced in continental United States and/or for edible molasses, sirups, and sugar mixtures, as part of or in addition to the quotas established pursuant to paragraphs (A) to (C), inclusive, of this subsection.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk a substitute for subsection (D).

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to amend the pending amendment?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I wish to offer a substitute for subsection (D).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senate agreed that committee amendments were to be considered before other amendments are offered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next amendment passed over.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 12, it is proposed to strike out lines 7 to 17, inclusive, and in lieu thereof to insert:

"(B) In the event that available statistics of the Department of Agriculture during the course of any calendar year indicate that the consumption requirements of sugar for continental United States for such calendar year will exceed the amount of the consumption requirements determined for that year, the Secretary of Agriculture may prorate such estimated excess amount on the basis of the respective quotas determined by and pursuant to subsection (1) of this section: Provided, however, That for each calendar year there shall be allotted to continental United States not less than 30 percent of any amount of consumption requirements therefor above 6,452,000 short tons raw value.

The amendment was agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 13, it is proposed to strike out lines 6 to 13, inclusive, and in lieu thereof to insert:

"(C) In the event that available statistics of the Department of Agriculture during the course of any calendar year indicate that the consumption requirements of sugar for continental United States for such year will be less than the amount of the consumption requirements determined for that year, the amount of such deficiency may be proportionately deducted from the respective quotas determined by and pursuant to paragraph (A) of subsection (1) of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. A great many of these amendments were adopted. Are these the ones that were passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 14, line 24, it is proposed to strike out "eliminate" and insert "limit or regulate", so as to read:

"(3) In order more fully to effectuate the declared policy of this act, as set forth in its declaration of policy, and to insure the equitable division between producers and/or growers and/or the processors of sugar beets or sugarcane of any of the proceeds which may be derived from the growing, processing and/or marketing of such sugar beets or sugarcane, and the processing and/or marketing of the products and byproducts thereof, all agreements authorized by this act may contain provisions which will limit or regulate child labor—

And so forth.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. WAGNER. No, Mr. President. I hope the amendment will be rejected. It permits, in effect, the employment of children, and it prevents the fixation of minimum wages for workers in the sugar industry. Thus it is contrary to the whole policy we have been pursuing since the National Recovery Act was passed.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator that the reason why it is proposed to strike out the word "eliminate" and to insert the words "limit or regulate" is because the big question was the stabilization of the sugar-beet industry, and there was a sharp difference of opinion as to whether we should eliminate, limit, or regulate child labor. That is why the Senate committee took the action they did. It was because if we had left the provision in the other form it might have precipitated a long debate here, which would be very disastrous at this time, we think, because if sugar-beet contracts are to be made, and the sugar-beet growers are to get any relief, this measure ought to be passed pretty soon; and it ought not to be delayed by a long discussion of the very sharp difference of opinion with reference to limitation or elimination of child labor.

Mr. WAGNER. Personally, I had not anticipated that there would be any difference of opinion at this day as to whether or not children should be exploited as they have been in the past. Only recently an investigation was made of the whole subject, in response to assertions that this was not real toil for children, but merely healthy recreation for 2 or 3 hours per day after school. The investigation disclosed quite the contrary. The children are being taken from school entirely for a period of 4 or 5 months. They are being made to do this work for 9 to 12 hours per day, and, according to the report, they are as young as 5 or 6 years of age.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, to what territory does the Senator refer in reference to these facts?

Mr. WAGNER. An investigation which was made by Dr. W. Lewis Abbott, and it covers the sugar industry generally. It says:

> Investigations by various agencies during the past 14 years have uniformly revealed undesirable social conditions among the laborers who perform these hand operations. The rates of pay are low, the hours of work long for brief periods of intensive activity, children as young as 6 or 7 years old work for 9 or more hours a day, and are kept out of school for this purpose.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what I am asking is, Where is it that these children are supposed to be taken out of school and worked 6 and 8 hours a day; in what part of the country?

Mr. WAGNER. Wherever this industry is situated.

Mr. BORAH. If that is the assertion in the statement, then it will take some time to dispose of this matter, because that is slander.

Mr. WAGNER. If it is untrue, then I may say to the Senator there should not be any objection to a provision in the pending measure for the elimination of child labor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I suggest to the Senator that the reason behind the amendment does not conflict with the Senator's viewpoint fundamentally at all. I am sure that if any such child-labor conditions do exist—and I can state to the Senator that they do not exist in the Michigan area—they can be reached by the language which was put into the bill by the committee, to wit, permitting a limitation and regulation.

Mr. WAGNER. I recognize that language, and I cannot persuade myself that it was not put in so as to permit some child labor; otherwise why should such words be substituted for words eliminating child labor altogether?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am going to tell the Senator, if he will permit me.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The word "eliminate" was stricken out because the farm groups object to the use of a complete proscription which might even invade the family unit at work upon its own farm.

Mr. WAGNER. I have gone through this fight in my own State, and that was one of the arguments used in reference to the canning industry; but no one has ever been able to cite an instance where any official has prohibited the employment of children in family work. What we are after is the wholesale exploitation of children which this report says goes on in certain sections of the country, at least in the sugar industry.

I do not condemn any particular section. I do not notice to what particular section this report refers. But we all know that these horrible conditions have existed in the past, and even the severest critics of the National Recovery Act have hailed as an achievement the practical abolition of child labor in this country. It has been one of the great blessings of our social efforts in modern times, and wherever one goes he finds it hailed. The amendment presented by the committee would prevent the abolition of child labor and of the sweatshop; it would deny the validity of the two greatest achievements of the Recovery Act.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have no quarrel whatever with the Senator in respect to his statement regarding the elimination of child labor, and I join him a thousand percent. I simply want to ask him whether he would intend that the proscription of this nature should prevent the family unit at work upon its own farm in respect to its own children.

Mr. WAGNER. No; unless, of course, there is a severe imposition by a parent upon a child, which rarely occurs. Nobody intends to reach the normal family situation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then why write it in the bill?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this raises a very important question, and I am going to suggest the absence of a quorum, and we will have to ask that this matter go over until tomorrow.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I am quite willing to state my position, and then the responsibility will rest with the Senate. I am not attempting to delay at all. There are two amendments I shall ask the Senate to reject. The responsibility will be placed upon the conscience of each Senator as to whether we ought to take this chance of permitting the exploitation of children in this industry.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. Is the statement from which the Senator read from a former Government officer?

Mr. WAGNER. What is the Senator's question?

Mr. FESS. Was the statement read prepared by Miss Abbott, who used to be in the Department of Labor?

Mr. WAGNER. The report was made by Dr. W. Lewis Abbott. It is entitled "Report for the Committee on Labor Conditions in the Growing of Sugar Beets." The report was made within the last 60 days, as I understand.

Mr. FESS. Evidently the report was not made by the officer I had in mind.

Mr. WAGNER. No.

Mr. FESS. I cannot imagine that in any part of the beet area of the country children from 6 to 7 years of age would be worked. I cannot see how it would be possible. As the Senator knows, the schools are not in session in the beet area at the time the work goes on.

Mr. WAGNER. The report states that the children are taken out of school during this period of time.

Mr. FESS. They would not be in school.

Mr. WAGNER. The rest of the year they attend school, but during this period of time, according to this report, they are taken out of school for the purpose of doing this work.

Mr. FESS. I think that if the Senator will investigate he will find that the schools in the beet areas are not in session at the time when the beets are being cultivated. I think it must be a mistake.

Mr. WAGNER. Schools are usually in session during the months of September, October, and November.

Mr. FESS. That would be the time of harvesting the beets.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. As I understand the Senator, the report which he holds in his hand was made within the last 60 days.

Mr. WAGNER. So I am informed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It refers to conditions dating back over 14 years?

Mr. WAGNER. It was brought up to date.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I doubt very much whether the statements which it contains have any application to the State of Wyoming.

Mr. WAGNER. If the conditions do not exist today, then surely a provision for the elimination of child labor can have no effect.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will say to the Senator that the reason for the insertion of this language is the fear that the original language of the bill would confer upon the Secretary of Agriculture the power of life and death over the industry which it is not necessary to give at this time. It is much more important to the children in the beet-growing area that their fathers should be able to plant and grow a crop than it is to engage in any technical discussion of child labor at this time.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not intend to stop the father from working. I am talking about the child of tender years. I stated that I thought we had practically reached an agreement upon that question, that as a matter of national policy we would not permit the exploitation of children.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from New York may not have been in the Chamber when it was explained this morning that the beet growers throughout the West are waiting daily and even hourly for the enactment of this legislation, in order that they may enter into contracts with the refiners for the planting of crops, and every hour's delay means a reduction in the crop and a reduction of return which the growers will eventually get from the crop. It is our position, if I may say so to the Senator, that this is not the time nor the place to legislate on child labor.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from New York exactly what the amendment is he now proposes?

Mr. WAGNER. The bill as it passed the House provided that these agreements, which in being made give definite benefits to the industry, might contain provisions which would eliminate child labor. The Senate has amended it to strike out the word "eliminate" and to substitute the words "limit or regulate" child labor.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let me make a suggestion to the Senator from New York. I do so because I have exactly the same view in respect to child labor that he has. The bill originally, to which the Senator desires to return, contained in lines 23 and 24, on page 14, the words "all agreements authorized by this act may contain provisions which will eliminate." Of what earthly value is that any more than "may contain provisions which will limit or regulate", because child labor is not prohibited and is not defined in regard to this particular measure. There is in the original measure a mere permission—"may contain provisions."

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. As a matter of realities, is the language which is suggested by the Senator any less able to do what is desired to be done than the language contained in the measure as passed by the House?

Mr. WAGNER. I think it is less able because of the changes made by the committee. I think the Senator is right——

Mr. JOHNSON. I can very thoroughly understand that if the bill said "must contain provisions which will eliminate child labor", or if it said in so many words, "must contain provisions which will limit or regulate child labor", there would then be room for a discussion, exactly as the Senator suggests, on the question of child labor; but with a purely permissive provision, I think that we are rather tilting at something that is not of very great value as a reality.

Mr. WAGNER. I beg to differ with the distinguished Senator, which I rarely do. I think that if the original language had authorized the limitation or regulation of child labor, it would have permitted its elimination. But by striking out the word "eliminate", and substituting the words "limit or regulate", it seems to me there is a legislative suggestion permitting the employment of children.

Mr. JOHNSON. As a matter of English construction, I think the Senator may be right in saying that it has two permissions instead of one, as originally written. But, nevertheless, the language of the character of that which was in the original bill, "may contain provisions which will eliminate" is of little or no consequence.

Mr. WAGNER. There again we must bear in mind those who are going to be called upon to administer the act. I am sure that they are in sympathy with the social progress which has been made, one of the results of which has been the abolition of child labor generally, and I am quite willing to entrust to them the matter of providing for the elimination of child labor.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the Senator is correct in that, and I will assume that he is, then under a provision which gives the right to limit or regulate they may do practically as they please.

Mr. WAGNER. If the proponents of the act say that they interpret these words to include the power to eliminate child labor, I shall be content to accept their language.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would not undertake that responsibility.

Mr. WAGNER. May I ask the Senator from Colorado as to that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I respond?

Mr. WAGNER. I understand the Senator from Michigan is an opponent.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am the author of the amendment. Would that give me some credentials to interpret?

Mr. WAGNER. If the Senator from Michigan is the author of the amendment, I bow to his interpretation.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is the Senator from Michigan in favor of the amendment?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Most certainly, and on the precise theory previously indicated.

It would be my interpretation that there was complete authority to eliminate the commercial exploitation of children in the sense that the Senator is using the words "child labor."

Mr. WAGNER. Then I shall not discuss the matter further.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And I should want it to mean that also, may I say to the Senator.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, this is not a very persuasive reason for changing the words, but I am content with the interpretation placed upon the language by the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I certainly did not want it to mean the other thing which I indicated to the Senator.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. For some 20 years the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and some of the rest of us have been strongly urging the sort of legislative action now being advocated by the Senator from New York. Because of my relations to this bill and the crying need for its immediate adoption, I will not prolong the discussion; but I am forced by conviction and feeling to go on record with the declaration that I support this amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. May I ask the Chair whether we are considering now only the words "limit or regulate"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BYRD in the chair). That is the amendment now under consideration.

Mr. WAGNER. I ask to have that disposed of, and then I shall say something about the other amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 14, line 25, after the words "child labor", it is proposed by the committee to strike out "and will fix minimum wages for workers or growers employed by, or under the control of, the producers and/or processors who are parties to such agreements."

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the able Senator from New York permit me to send to the desk a letter from the Secretary of Labor which I ask to have read?

Mr. WAGNER. Of course.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It relates to this amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, before the reading of the letter is begun, if I may be permitted, I should like to state that I hope, and I have talked to a great many who are interested in this legislation, that we will stay here until we finish action upon the bill tonight.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the communication referred to is read by the clerk, I desire to make a very few remarks. Unfortunately there is a disposition upon the part of persons in executive departments and bureaus, when measures are under consideration by Congress and are in some instances about to be voted upon, to attempt to influence legislation by transmitting communications to Senators. I am afraid that there are those in executive positions who do not understand our form of Government, and that the functions of the executive department are entirely different from those of the legislative branch of the Government. Congress enacts laws; executive departments are charged with their enforcement. Theoretically executive bureaus and departments do not originate legislative measures, but in practice it is different. More and more the legislative branch is abdicating its functions to the executive department; and more and more persons in executive agencies are becoming ambitious to draft legislation and to determine legislative policies. The President of the United States, under the Constitution, may make recommendations to Congress, but it was never supposed that the multitudinous Federal executive agencies and instrumentalities should originate legislation and set in motion forces for the purpose of securing the enactment of laws.

When bills are introduced, they are frequently sent by committees to executive departments for the views of those who are supposed to have some knowledge concerning the subjects dealt with. Reports from executive departments are obtained in this manner, and such reports often furnish valuable information in connection with legislative matters. Speaking for myself, I dislike the course pursued by some executive agencies in sending communications for the purpose of influencing legislation when either the House or the Senate is considering measures properly before it.

The Secretary of Agriculture and a number of representatives of the Department appeared before the House committee and the Senate committee when the so-called "sugar bill" was being considered. Many hours and, indeed, many days were devoted by the committees of the House and the Senate to the consideration of the bill before us, and during such consideration, the views of the Department of Agriculture were freely expressed. In the consideration of most bills offered in Congress, the views of various departments are sought and are important; but I deprecate the practice of executive agencies, when bills are about to be passed, sending communications obviously intended to influence legislation. In some instances no opportunity is afforded to examine the sources of information sought to be conveyed, or the reasons which inspired the communications, or to meet statements contained in such communications which may be subject to refutation. There is an orderly way to proceed in dealing with legislation.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, no one here needs to speak in commendation of the great and proved ability of the Secretary of Labor. However, I cannot refrain from paying tribute to her efficiency and usefulness as a member of the President's Cabinet and her devotion to social welfare. I have requested that the letter of the Secretary of Labor be read, and I now request that following the letter there be placed in the RECORD the appended recent report on living standards and working conditions in sugar-beet fields to which the letter refers, without now reading that report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The letter will be read.

The Legislative Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, April 17, 1934.

Hon. EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR COSTIGAN: I was very disappointed to hear that the Senate Committee on Finance has struck out of S. 3212 (a bill to include sugar as a basic agricultural commodity), the language authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to incorporate in contracts provisions fixing "minimum wages for workers or growers employed by, or under the control of, the producers and/or processors" (p. 9, lines 19 to 21).

As you undoubtedly know, pursuant to authority conferred upon me by the President, I appointed several months ago a committee to study labor conditions in the beet-sugar fields. This committee was composed of representatives of the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Labor, the National Recovery Administration, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, and had the aid of people familiar with conditions in the beet-sugar fields. This committee unanimously recommended that if sugar were made a basic commodity and if benefits were to be paid to farmers, the Secretary of Agriculture should be given the power to fix minimum wages for persons employed by growers and farmers. This recommendation was made after conferences with representatives of beet growers, farmers, and refiners, and met with their approval.

I believe that the opposition to the minimum-wage provision comes from people who are not familiar with the scope of its operation. It is not intended that a farmer should be forced to pay his own family or his own children high wages. The Secretary of Agriculture would be given the power merely to fix a bottom level below which a farmer could not employ a person not associated with him by family ties.

The reports from the Federal Emergency Relief Administration and other social and charitable organizations indicate that at the present time wages for beet-sugar workers have fallen so deplorably that the Government is financing workers even during their term of employment. If now the Government is to give benefit payments to farmers, it seems only reasonable for the Government to make it a condition of such benefit that the farmer will do something to relieve the United States of the burden of caring for the farmer's own employees.

I am enclosing a copy of the report of the committee to which I have already referred. This report seems to me to make it abundantly clear why the bill should contain provisions authorizing the fixing of minimum wages, and I sincerely hope that the appropriate language will be restored to S. 3212 before it is enacted.

Very truly yours,

FRANCES PERKINS.

(The report appended to the letter from the Secretary of Labor is as follows:)

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON LABOR CONDITIONS IN THE GROWING OF SUGAR BEETS

During the hearings held by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration on the sugar-marketing agreement last summer attention was called to the conditions among the contract workers in the growing of sugar beets. The Federal Emergency Relief Administration had also discovered that numbers of these workers were applying to its local agencies for relief. As a result, the President authorized the Secretary of Labor to appoint this committee for the immediate formulation of a plan which will place the labor policies of sugar-beet production on a reasonable and equitable basis. To assist it in making the investigation and preparing the report the committee secured the services of Dr. W. Lewis Abbott, the author of a report upon labor conditions in the beet fields. Dr. Abbott has spent approximately 3 months in gathering material and summarizing the results of earlier investigations into the conditions of workers in sugar beets. Data have been secured from reports of the Children's Bureau, the Tariff Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, the National Child Labor Committee, and other sources. In addition, questionnaires were sent to the county administrators of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration and to the county agents of the Department of Agriculture in every county in which sugar beets are an important crop. The committee also had the advantage of a discussion with persons representing the United States Beet Sugar Association and the National Beet Growers Association.

Sugar beets are grown by farmers who contract in advance for the sale of the crop to a sugar processing company. Their cultivation requires a large amount of hand labor for thinning the stand in the spring, weeding and hoeing in the summer, and pulling and topping in the autumn. These hand processes are in the majority of cases performed by laborers who make contracts with the growers for the work on a stipulated number of acres, being paid by the acre. All members of the workers' families, including children, take part in the work.

Reports to the Tariff Commission last summer showed that the total number of those doing hand work in the crop exceeded 150,000, of which 100,000 were contract workers.

The compensation paid to these workers last summer averaged about $13.87 per acre of beets cultivated, with some as low as $8. This average would amount to about $98 per individual worker, or $392 per family for a season of 7 months. In the years preceding the depression it was possible for many of these families to supplement their earnings from beet work by other types of labor. At the present time, however, the larger part of the workers have no other income and must depend entirely upon their earnings from beets.

During the base period of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, August 1, 1909, to July 31, 1914, the average compensation paid was $19.08 per acre and the average price received for a ton of beets was $5.58. The compensation for the summer of 1933 was 73 percent of that of the base period, while the price of beets per ton was 95 percent of that of the base period.

It is also reported that in some cases these workers have difficulty in collecting their full compensation. As a result of these low wages and failure to receive payment, and also because of the seasonal nature of the employment, many of them have become dependent upon the Federal Emergency Relief Administration or other relief agencies. For example, the committee has received reports which show that in 15 counties 748 families of beet workers have applied for relief.

Other families seem to be meeting the situation by purchasing their food on credit from the storekeepers in their localities. These storekeepers then undertake to secure work for them.

Studies of the subject indicate a large percentage of child workers in this industry, the figures from various reports showing from 13 to 41 percent of the workers were under 16. The work in beets for the children of contract laborers is not the varied work of chores around a farm, but continuous, repetitive, standardized, and arduous labor. Studies indicate that these children work for periods averaging 9½ to 10 hours a day and actually extending for some children to 12 or 14 hours.

One of the most serious results of the employment of children lies in their loss of school time, for in many sections beet work starts in April and ends in November, with the result that the children lose a considerable portion of the school year.

The most conservative estimates indicate that for a family of six of this class of labor an income of $565 is necessary under present living conditions to ensure it a minimum subsistence living, exclusive of rent, which is not included because in many instances workers are furnished housing by the growers and sugar companies. To give these workers an income equivalent in purchasing power to that of the period from 1909 to 1914, the base period of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, they would have to receive about $600 per year.

At the present time the average family of workers does the hand labor on about 30 acres of beets. With the reduction in the amount handled which would follow the elimination of child labor and possibly some shortening of hours, it is estimated that the average family would take care of about 24 to 25 acres. If they were paid $21.50 per acre for this work, their income during 7 months would be $516 to $538. This amount, with an additional $75 which might be earned in other ways, would give them $600 a year.

Although these earnings from sources other than beet work are small now, in the years preceding 1930 many families were able to earn from $300 to $500 per year from other work during either the winter or summer. With the return of prosperity the opportunities for thus supplementing the income from beet work should increase.

In considering the situation of these workers the committee recognized the desirability of taking some action to eliminate child labor and to improve the rates of compensation, but it was also faced with the fact that the farmers by whom these workers are employed are also suffering grave economic difficulties.

The committee considered possible ways of securing an improvement in the compensation and working conditions through the various agencies now operating. It did not seem possible to apply to these workers the provisions of a code under the National Industrial Recovery Act, because they are engaged in an agricultural rather than an industrial pursuit.

Higher compensation would result either in higher costs for the growers or for the processors. If the expenses of the growers were raised by an increase in the compensation of the contract workers, it seemed necessary to increase their incomes in some way. This led to the consideration of the possibility of meeting an increase in contract rates through an increase in the tariff on sugar. Such a plan seemed undesirable in view of the reports of the Tariff Commission of 1924 and 1934 recommending lower duties on sugar and the present policies of the administration which contemplate a decrease rather than an increase in the tariff on this article. The proposed reduction in the tariff and the proposed change in the Agricultural Adjustment Act will have an effect on processors that cannot now be estimated. In view of this lack of certainty it seemed unwise to place the full burden of the improvement of labor conditions upon the processors.

The proposals of the President in his message to the Congress of February 8, 1934, seemed to the committee the best means of securing the necessary increase of income to the farmers to make possible the payment of higher compensation to the beet workers, and these means can also be used for the elimination of child labor. These proposals, it will be recalled, included the making of sugar a basic commodity and the establishment of a quota system to restrict the production of sugar in the various areas from which the United States draws its supply. This would be accompanied by the levying of a processing tax upon sugar, the lowering of the tariff by the amount of the processing tax, and the payment of a benefit to the beet grower in return for a restriction of acreage planted in beets.

If the latter proposal is embodied in law it will make possible the control of the situation revealed by the investigation of this committee. The payment of benefits to beet growers in return for restriction of acreage could be made dependent upon their signing a contract with the Secretary of Agriculture whereby they agreed to pay an established minimum compensation for beet workers per acre and to prevent the employment of children in the cultivation of beets.

The drafts of the bill S. 2732, introduced by Senator COSTIGAN in the Senate on February 6 (calendar day Feb. 12), and H.R. 7907, introduced by Congressman JONES in the House on February 12 (calendar day Feb. 12), contain a provision which would give to the Secretary this power in the following terms:

"(F) In order to more fully effectuate the declared policy of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as set forth in its 'declaration of policy' and to insure the equitable division, between producers and/or growers and the processors of sugar beets or sugarcane, of any of the proceeds which may be derived from the processing and/or marketing of such sugar beets or sugar cane and the products and byproducts thereof, all agreements authorized by this act may contain provisions (1) with respect to the terms which contracts between processors and producers and/or growers may contain, and/or (2) which will eliminate child labor among, and will fix a minimum of wages for, agricultural workers employed by, or under the control of, processors and/or producers who are parties to such agreements, and the Secretary, upon request of any producer or grower, or of any producers' or growers' association, or of any processor, of sugar beets or sugar cane, is hereby authorized to adjudicate any dispute as to any of the terms under which such sugar beets or sugar cane are grown, or are to be grown, and/or marketed, and the products and/or byproducts thereof are to be marketed. The decision and any determination of the Secretary shall be final, if in accordance with law."

The inclusion of a paragraph substantially in this form in the final draft of the bill seems to this committee essential to the improvement of the working conditions of the industry through the benefit-payment plan, for it appears doubtful under the Agricultural Adjustment Act as presently drawn that the Secretary would have the needed powers.

There appears to be no scarcity of labor available for work in the beet fields. Therefore the elimination of child labor would probably not result in any shortage of labor. It is more likely that its elimination will make possible the continued employment of adults who might otherwise be unable to secure work as a result of the restriction of acreage in beets.

The committee is informed that this suggestion of a benefit payment of a sufficient amount to enable the grower to augment the wages of the workers would not require the imposition of a burden upon the Treasury of the United States.

The study of the committee and information received from the sources stated indicate that at least $20 should be the minimum rate of wages per acre, in addition to housing.

The committee recommends:

(1) That the policy of declaring sugar a basic agricultural commodity and the application thereto of the powers of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration should be carried forward as a means of securing for the growers of sugar beets and for the contract workers an adequate return.

(2) That the act declaring sugar a basic commodity should include a clause which will empower the Secretary of Agriculture to require that agreements authorized by the act may contain provisions eliminating child labor and insuring adequate compensation for the workers.

(3) That pursuant to this provision the Secretary of Agriculture should incorporate in the benefit contracts a condition providing for the payment during the current season of compensation of at least $20 per acre to the contract workers, in addition to housing or its equivalent.

(4) That pursuant to this provision the Secretary of Agriculture should incorporate in the benefit contracts a condition forbidding the employment of children under 16, other than those of the families of the growers themselves.

Such a program, it is believed by the committee, will receive the cooperation of the growers and processors.

NOTE.—Dr. Mordecai Ezekiel, economic adviser to the Secretary of Agriculture, who was also appointed a member of the committee, participated in some of the deliberations of the committee but has not seen or signed the report, because of absence from the city.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I am in hearty accord with the statements made by the Secretary of Labor in the communication just read. I am more in accord because this bill, as I called attention a moment ago, is merely permissive, and to give the right to fix a minimum wage is not to fix it by any means. It ought to be accorded under circumstances such as have been here detailed.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, there is not very much I can add to what has been so well stated by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and in the letter of the Secretary of Labor. I want to emphasize again that the other great accomplishment of the National Recovery Act has been the fixation of minimum wages. It has not only increased the purchasing power of the country and thus helped industry as well as the farming community, but it also has driven out of existence, we hope for all time, the so-called "sweatshop" which has had so much to do with dragging down the decent employer and the decent manufacturer.

In view of the fact that in this case the Government is aiding the farmer—and I am heartily in favor of such a policy, and say so not in criticism, but as a matter of approval—it seems to me that at least there should be authority for the Government to see that a decent minimum wage is paid to these workers. I refer again to the report which has been made at the request of the Secretary of Labor. There were cited a large number of instances where the wage paid the worker was so deplorably low that the Government, by giving the individual relief, was required to make up the difference between the wage paid and the amount which was needed for bare living expenses. It seems to me we ought to protect the workers in these industries that receive governmental aid, at least to the extent of insuring a living wage.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, as I read the words which are proposed to be stricken out by the amendment, if the amendment should be voted down as a whole, it would go further than the Senator desires to go and further than the Secretary of Labor desires to go, according to her letter. If the Senator will look at the words on page 15, line 1, he will find that it would not only permit the fixing of minimum wages for workers or growers employed by but also for workers or growers under the control of. That, as I view it, would permit the fixing of wages for members of the family. I am in sympathy with the position taken by the Senator, and I am in sympathy with striking out the provision of the Senate committee. I simply desire to call his attention to that feature, because I believe if the amendment should be voted down, then an amendment should be adopted striking out the words "or under the control of."

Mr. WAGNER. That would be quite agreeable to me.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement as to the reasons why the growers recommended this amendment. I completely concur in the minimum-wage provision. I make that statement unequivocally.

I invite the attention of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] to the consideration that in none of the other basic-commodity legislation has there been any minimum-wage provision fixed. No other basic commodity under the A.A.A. has the minimum farm wage in it. This is the first time the effort has been made to fix a minimum farm wage. In the evolution of controlled agriculture I would agree with the Senator that we ought to hope to improve these conditions, but I invite his attention to the specific physical fact which confronts us under the sugar bill.

The President has stated that the retail price of sugar must not be increased as a result of the bill. This is not the ordinary basic commodity bill. The benefits paid are paid in lieu of beet acreage taken out of production and are calculated merely to leave the farmer in the same relative status he occupied before the acreage reduction was inaugurated. The farmer cannot control what he gets for his beets. He is at the mercy first of the processor and then of the market. Where will the farmer get his revenue with which to pay increased labor costs?

The Senator from New York refers to the survey and report made by the Department of Labor. I invite his attention to the fact that in that report it is stated, if I am correctly informed, that the average labor cost today per acre is $13, whereas the Department recommends an average labor cost of $20. Well and good! I concede that it ought to be $20, but this is a relief measure and not a reform measure. I ask the Senator where the farmer is going to get the $7 additional to pay the labor per acre, inasmuch as the price of sugar is not to be increased? The $7 to which I have referred would eat up most of the benefit payments, which the farmer is supposed to get by way of compensation for having reduced his acreage. In other words, if we are going to maintain the President's purpose not to increase the price of sugar, we cannot increase the farmer's cost of labor in this particular connection.

Furthermore, the control of the minimum wage to be paid in the beet fields could well become the power to determine whether or not there shall be a beet-sugar industry at all, because if it were put at $30 instead of $13 that would be the end of the entire transaction.

I may say to the Senator from New York that processors are covered by the minimum-wage provisions of the N.R.A. They are quotaed industries. I cordially and enthusiastically agree with him that it is a fine thing that they should be; but under this specific piece of legislation, in view of the nature of the situation I describe, I do not see how we can hope to make the bill work if, at the same time, we are contemplating increased costs of labor on the farm.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the report to which the Senator from New York has referred looks, as I recall it, to the receipt of between $13 and $14 an acre more through benefits out of the processing tax than the farmer would otherwise receive. The report further has in view that about half of the per-acre increase could well go to the farmer and the other half to the field worker.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I desire to suggest that it seems to me this is about the last straw that is to be laid upon the farmer to break his back.

Heretofore in certain legislation we have tried to control, and are controlling, the amount the farmer may produce. I suppose that includes the amount of fertilizer he may use, the number of acres he may plant, and so forth. It seems to me that of all things I ever heard of, the proposal to give one man authority to say how much the farmer shall pay for his labor is most calculated to shock the farmers of the country.

In my State the C.W.A. has pretty nearly wrecked the farmer, because it fixed a minimum wage that is greater than the farmer could afford to pay. Now, we come along in the beet-growing industry and propose to tell the farmer how much he is to pay the people who work for him. I think it is the most outrageous thing Congress ever did or ever tried to do, and I am astonished that any member of the President's Cabinet should recommend to the Senate or to the country such a thing.

I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, is the Senator horrified at efforts to give the ordinary worker a living wage? Is not the Senator in sympathy with such aspirations?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I think that is a wholly unfair statement.

Mr. WAGNER. Let me give some idea of the wages that are being paid. This report shows that the average wage has amounted to $98 for the individual and $392 for a family during a season of 7 months, and the difference between this sum and what a family has needed to live has been made up by contributions from the relief funds of the Federal Government.

Mr. HASTINGS. I should like to say to the Senator that the amount he has mentioned is more than a great many farmers and their families are getting today. What I am talking about is the farmer. I am not complaining about labor getting too much. I am complaining about the farmer being unable to pay any such amount as the Secretary of Labor or the Secretary of Agriculture may fix.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am impressed with the suggestion made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]. I remember also, from listening to the reading of the letter of the Secretary of Labor, that she says there is no intention upon the part of those who favor retaining the language of the House bill to control the price or to enable anyone to fix the wages of members of the farmer's family. I am under the impression that to carry out that idea, with which I am in sympathy, we ought to strike out of the House language on page 15, the words "or under the control of."

As a parliamentary proposition, that amendment would take precedence of the committee amendment, because it is an amendment of the language which the committee seeks to strike out.

In order to take that step, I move——

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if the Senator will ask unanimous consent to strike out that language, I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well. I ask unanimous consent that the language sought to be stricken out be amended by striking out of it on line 1, page 15, the words "or under the control of it."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The question now is upon the adoption of the committee amendment.

Mr. CUTTING. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes have it.

Mr. WAGNER. I ask for a division.

On a division, the committee amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, on page 11 I move to strike out subsection (D), and in lieu thereof to substitute the subsection I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11 it is proposed to strike out lines 17 to 22, both inclusive, and in lieu thereof to insert:

(D) Establish a separate quota or quotas for edible molasses and/or sirup of cane juice produced in continental United States, in addition to, and/or for edible molasses, sirups, and sugar mixtures produced in any other area or areas to which this title relates, as part of, or in addition to, the quotas established pursuant to paragraphs (A) to (C), inclusive, of this subsection, for use as such and not for the extraction of sugar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Colorado a question or two in reference to this amendment.

As I understand, the first part of the amendment, beginning with the words "Establish a separate quota or quotas for edible molasses and/or sirup of cane juice produced in continental United States, in addition to", refers exclusively to edible sirup and cane juice produced in continental United States.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is correct.

Mr. OVERTON. And it authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to assign a separate quota or quotas for sirup or edible molasses produced in continental United States in addition to the quotas already prescribed by the bill.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is correct. The edible molasses and sirup of cane juice are to be used as such, and not for the extraction of sugar.

Mr. OVERTON. The words just used by the Senator apply to the entire amendment?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. OVERTON. That is, all of this edible molasses and cane juice is not to be used for the extraction of sugar, whether produced in continental United States or in other areas. That is correct?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator has made an accurate statement with reference to the application of the above clause.

Mr. OVERTON. Let me ask the Senator another question. What may be designated as the second portion of the amendment, beginning with the words "and/or for edible molasses, sirups, and sugar mixtures produced in any other area or areas to which this title relates, as part of, or in addition to, the quotas established", and so forth, relates to off-shore molasses and sirup?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator has correctly stated the purpose of the second part of the amendment. Perhaps it should be added that the purpose is not to interfere with the present competitive situation respecting molasses and sirup of cane juice, and yet to be able to prevent any marked shift from sugar to molasses and sirup.

Mr. OVERTON. Just one other question. The part of this amendment which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to establish quotas for sugar mixtures, edible molasses, and sirup in other areas in continental United States, giving him authority to make those quotas either as part of or in addition to the quotas established, is designed to vest him with authority to prevent the excessive importation of mixed sugars into the United States, as, for instance, beyond the amounts which have been introduced into the United States?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator from Louisiana has accurately stated the purpose of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado has two committee amendments to present.

Mr. OVERTON. I have one other amendment to offer.

Mr. COSTIGAN. On page 21, I move to strike out section 13 of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I present another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed on page 25, after line 11, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 17. Section 16 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by adding the following new subsections:

"(c) The provisions of paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of this section shall not apply in the case of sugar beets or sugar cane or the products thereof.

"(d) The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to purchase, out of such proceeds of taxes as are available therefor, during the period this act is in effect with respect to sugar beets and sugar cane, not in excess of 300,000 tons of sugar raw value from the surplus stocks of direct-consumption sugar produced in the United States beet-sugar area, at a price not in excess of the market price for direct-consumption sugar on the date of purchase, and to dispose of such sugar by sale or otherwise, including distribution to any organization for the relief of the unemployed, under such conditions and at such times as will tend to effectuate the declared policy of section 8a of this act. The sugar so purchased shall not be included in the quota for the United States beet-sugar area. All proceeds received by the Secretary of Agriculture, in the exercise of the powers granted hereby, are appropriated to be available to the Secretary of Agriculture for the purposes described in subsections (a) and (b) of section 12 of this act."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this is an amendment which meets with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture. It is to deal with the surplus sugar stock on hand now.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. I present an amendment and ask to have it stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the end of section 9, page 19, line 10, after the word "year", the words "and for the year 1934 the marketing year shall begin January 1, 1934."

Mr. HARRISON. We have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I should like to know what the motion to strike out section 13 means.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, that section is a clear duplication, which is the only reason for striking it out.

Mr. CLARK. Duplication of what?

Mr. HARRISON. Of section 15 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. That was the only reason for striking it out.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the basis of the proposed act is the fixing of quotas. The allocation of that power is to the Secretary of Agriculture. It seems to me that the power should be directed to him to exercise in a mandatory way.

On page 7 authority is given to the Secretary to exercise this power if he sees fit to do so. It says that he may make these orders and regulations to limit quotas on domestic sugar and to place limits on incoming sugar.

When the word "may" is used, as was pointed out by the Senator from California a while back in connection with another matter, the authority is also given not to do it. So, as an amendment in line 11, on page 7, I move that the word "may" be stricken out and the word "shall" inserted.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I think it would be infinitely better to leave it in permissive form, as it is, rather than to make it mandatory, as suggested by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. HARRISON. That was the view of the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the Senator from Colorado may be perfectly certain, from our experience with gentlemen in high position, that if we give them the opportunity to exercise power, they take it. So, I imagine there will not be much difficulty about the exercise of the power; but it would be infinitely better to leave it so that if in certain instances the power should not be exercised, at least the discretion might be reposed in the Secretary in that regard.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, in response to the suggestion of the Senator from California, may I call his attention to the fact that under this language the Secretary of Agriculture may enforce the limitation upon domestic beet sugar and leave the imported sugars from Cuba without limitation. I am seeking to put the bill in such shape that the limitations upon incoming sugars will be mandatory upon the Secretary of Agriculture, so that our beet industry may not by any possibility be swamped with unlimited sugar importations.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, is the Senator entirely certain of his position in that regard?

Mr. ADAMS. Quite.

Mr. JOHNSON. If that be the fact, I will not make any objection whatsoever to the amendment that is suggested.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. CLARK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Johnson	Pope
Austin	Couzens	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Bachman	Cutting	King	Schall
Bailey	Davis	Lewis	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dieterich	Logan	Shipstead

Byrnes	Hale	Neely	Van Nuys
Capper	Harrison	Norris	Wagner
Carey	Hastings	O'Mahoney	Walcott
Clark	Hatch	Overton	Walsh
Connally	Hayden	Patterson	White
Copeland	Hebert	Pittman

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to reannounce the absence of Senators as previously announced and to reannounce the reasons given before.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HASTINGS. May the amendment be stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, line 11, it is proposed to strike out the word "may" and insert "shall", so it will read:

> The Secretary of Agriculture shall, in order to effectuate the declared policy—

And so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 15, after the word "however", it is proposed to insert:

> That the quota fixed for Cuba for any marketing year shall not exceed the sum of the quotas fixed for Hawaii and Puerto Rico for the same year: And provided further.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, this amendment proposes to give reasonable protection to Hawaii and Puerto Rico, so that in the future the Cuban quota will not run away ahead of the combined quotas of Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALCOTT. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator mean that the quota for Cuba would be measured by the addition of the quotas of the other two countries?

Mr. WALCOTT. No; that it shall not exceed for any one year the combined quotas of Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

Mr. KING. If I may be pardoned further, is there any such relation between the 3 in that triangular contest as to make 1 equivalent to the other 2, or the 2 equivalent to 1?

Mr. WALCOTT. This is an arbitrary relationship that is sought in order to protect Hawaii and Puerto Rico from having an excessive quota given Cuba. In other words, the quotas today, as computed by the stabilization agreement, would be exactly the same. It is provided that there shall be 850,000 tons for Puerto Rico and 950,000 tons for Hawaii, which two combined make 1,800,000 tons. The quota for Cuba is 1,800,000 tons.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I do not see any sufficient relation between the three to make Cuba's determination of quota the basis for the other two, or the quota for the other two the basis for Cuba's quota.

Mr. WALCOTT. Cuba is merely limited by the sum of the other two.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 13, line 20, after the word "determined", it is proposed to insert "for Cuba and other foreign countries."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HARRISON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COSTIGAN (when Mrs. CARAWAY's name was called). The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] is unavoidably absent. She has asked me to say that if present her vote would be "yea."

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I understand that if he were present he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay." I refrain from voting.

Mr. GIBSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HEBERT (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], who is detained on account of illness. If present, I am informed that he would vote "yea." If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay." I withhold my vote.

Mr. METCALF (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WALCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr.

McADOO]. Not knowing how he would vote, I refrain from voting.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I beg to announce the same absences, and for the same reasons as announced upon the previous quorum call. I am repeating the announcement now to account for the absence of these Senators on the vote.

I also announce that I have received a message from the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] regretting his absence and stating that were he present he would vote "yea."

I am also advised that the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], if present, would vote "yea."

I wish further to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL], the Senator from Montana [Mr. ERICKSON], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. FLETCHER. Making the same announcement as before as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] is necessarily absent. He has a pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. I am informed that if the Senator from Iowa were present he would vote "nay" on this question, and that if the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] were present he would vote "yea."

I desire to announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY]. If present, the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay", and the Senator from Arkansas would vote "yea."

I also desire to state that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "nay."

I also desire to announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

I am not advised how the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] would vote on this question. The position of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] was explained by him prior to his necessary departure from the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 18, as follows:

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer (Mr. DUFFY in the chair) appointed Mr. HARRISON, Mr. KING, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. COSTIGAN, Mr. REED, and Mr. COUZENS conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill just passed be printed with the Senate amendments numbered; also that the clerks may be authorized to change as may be necessary section numbers and references thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language inserted by said amendment insert the following: ": Provided further, That the rights, privileges, and benefits conferred upon Richard A. Chavis by reason of the enactment of this act shall be limited to admission to a soldiers' home under the regulations governing such admission: And provided further, That he shall be entitled to such medical care as is usually accorded inmates of such home while resident therein"; and the Senate agree to the same.

THE AIR MAIL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3170) to revise air-mail laws.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] desires to take the floor to discuss the air mail bill, but that he is willing to yield this evening in order that we may have an executive session before recessing until tomorrow.

Mr. McKELLAR. That will be entirely satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] is recognized.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to enable us to have a brief executive session?

Mr. FESS. I yield for that purpose.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the treaty will be passed over.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. McKELLAR. I invite the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] to the request I am about to make. I ask that the President may be notified of the confirmation of the three postmasters in Tennessee, Mabel W. Hughes to be postmaster at Arlington, Ernest F. Dennis to be postmaster at Chattanooga, and Joseph M. Dedman to be postmaster at Columbia.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, APRIL 19, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

O Shepherd Divine, ever present to guard and to guide us in the ways of upright living, we praise Thee that there is healing in the hem of Thy garment and comfort in the merciful glance of Thine eye. We pray Thee, our Father, that the issues of our daily conduct may please Thee and satisfy our highest hopes and longings. Just now we wait for that divine touch that shall enable us to hold our course amid the exactions of our responsibilities. O keep the sacred fires burning on the altars of our natures until our colleagues and friends shall feel the impulse of spiritual and moral earnestness. We rejoice, Almighty God, that Thy bosom is recovery, that Thy long-suffering is infinite, and that Thy love is all-conquering. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RESIGNATION OF SILLMAN EVANS

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Silliman Evans, a letter from the President, and a letter from the Postmaster General, Mr. Farley, with reference to the resignation of Mr. Evans as Fourth Assistant Postmaster General.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the letter of resignation of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General. Silliman Evans, Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, today made public his letter of April 17 to the Postmaster General in which he transmitted his resignation to the President in order that he might accept the position of executive vice president of the Maryland Casualty Co.

The complete text of Mr. Evans' letters of resignation to the President and the Postmaster General and also the letters of acceptance from the President and the Postmaster General follow:

THE FOURTH ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, April 17, 1934.

Hon. JAMES A. FARLEY,
The Postmaster General.

MY DEAR JIM: You will find enclosed my letter of resignation addressed to the President, which I ask that you transmit to him.

When you recommended my appointment to the President, I realized that you had given me an opportunity to be of service to you and this administration. It will always be a source of gratification to me to have been a part of your official family and to have been a part of this administration. But arising above any official connection has been that strong personal tie which has bound me to you and which no letter of resignation can ever sever. Before I was appointed I was your friend and realized you were mine, but these months of close contact have increased my esteem and affection for you, and I shall strive to always merit your confidence and your friendship.

You have been a wise counselor, a helpful administrator, and a good friend, and in leaving this Department I thank you for your many personal kindnesses.

I should not want to leave the Department without having expressed my appreciation of my colleagues in the direction of this Department. Bill Howes, Harllee Branch, and Clint Eilenberger have been constant in their friendly helpfulness and well-advised cooperation.

From childhood's first admiration of the postman, I have esteemed the Postal Service of this Nation. But, until I had come into direct contact with the Post Office Department, as the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, I did not have the proper appreciation of the individual efficiency, the loyalty and devotion to the Service, and the faithful and untiring labor of that vast army of Americans who are engaged in the collection and distribution of the mails. To my deputy, Smith W. Purdum, and the 14,000 employees of this Bureau, I pay a tribute of respect and offer my thanks for their assistance and loyalty.

My desk is current and only a few matters of importance are yet to be decided. I am filing with you a summation of them with my recommendations for their disposition.

Sincerely,

SILLIMAN EVANS.

APRIL 17, 1934.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,
The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The board of directors of the Maryland Casualty Co. have invited me to become executive vice president of that company, and today elected me to that office. I have discussed the matter with my immediate chief, the Honorable James A. Farley, the Postmaster General, and the Honorable Jesse H. Jones, the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and they agree that it constitutes an opportunity for service to which I should respond. I, therefore, have asked the Postmaster General to transmit to you this letter of resignation, to become effective April 21, 1934.

You appointed me the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General immediately upon your inauguration, and it has been a happy undertaking during the last 13 months to render faithful service. I take pleasure in reporting to you that the Bureau of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General will spend only $31,421,507.23 of the $35,355,734 appropriated by the Congress, and this has been done without the dismissal of an employee or the curtailment of the service of this Bureau. Economies effected in the Bureau will result in much larger savings in the future. A recent survey made of this Bureau indicates an improvement in its efficiency.

I am deeply grateful to you, Mr. President, for your kindnesses to me during my service and shall forever cherish with pride the fact that I have been privileged to be associated with your administration.

With the kindest personal wishes and with great gratitude, I am

Sincerely yours,

SILLIMAN EVANS.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 18, 1934.

Hon. SILLIMAN EVANS,
The Fourth Assistant Postmaster General,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SILLIMAN: It is with real regret that I accept your resignation tendered in your letter to me of April 17, even though I appreciate fully the important task that you are quitting the Post Office Department to undertake.

I want to take occasion, however, to thank you for your loyal and efficient services, and to congratulate you on a job well done.

With all best wishes for the future.

Sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN ROOSEVELT.

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, April 18, 1934.

Hon. SILLIMAN EVANS,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SILLIMAN: I received this morning, and with most sincere regret, your letter of resignation addressed to the President, which I presented to the President this morning.

I also desire to acknowledge receipt of your letter to me, and I assure you that I appreciate its contents. You were very kind and generous to the writer, and I accept your resignation with a feeling of great regret. I realize full well, however, that in leaving this Department you are doing so to accept a position which will give you a greater opportunity for the future. I know that you will bring to your new position the same ability and faithful discharge of duties which you demonstrated as Fourth Assistant Postmaster General. During the time you occupied the position of Fourth Assistant Postmaster General I had entire confidence in you and in your ability to satisfactorily perform the duties of that position, and I shall always recall with vivid recollection and sincere appreciation the generous assistance you accorded to me during the time you were associated with the Department.

Even though you are severing your connection with the Post Office Department, I want you to consider yourself as a member of the official family, because there isn't a doubt in my mind but that I will be calling upon you for advice from time to time, knowing full well that it will be freely given.

You have my very best wishes for your every success in your new association, and with kindest regards to you and Mrs. Evans, I am,

Very sincerely,

JAMES A. FARLEY,
Postmaster General.

A RADIO BILL TO PROVIDE FOR THE ALLOCATION OF RADIO FACILITIES TO EDUCATIONAL, RELIGIOUS, LABOR, AND OTHER NON-PROFIT-MAKING ASSOCIATIONS

Mr. RUDD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUDD. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this privilege so that I may bring to the attention of the Members of the House the injustice and inequity of the allocation of time of broadcasting facilities to the prejudice and detriment of educational, religious, agricultural, labor, cooperative, and similar non-profit-making associations.

On April 5, 1934, I introduced in the House of Representatives H.R. 8977, a bill to amend the Radio Act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended:

Be it enacted, etc., That to eliminate monopoly and to insure equality of opportunity and consideration for educational, religious, agricultural, labor, cooperative, and similar non-profit-making associations, seeking the opportunity of adding to the cultural and scientific knowledge of those who listen in on radio broadcasts, all existing licenses issued by the Federal Radio Commission, and any and all rights of any nature contained therein, are declared null and void 90 days following the effective date of this act, anything contained in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 2. The Communications Commission, herein created, shall, prior to 90 days following the effective date of this act, reallocate all frequencies, wave lengths, power, and time assignments within its jurisdiction among the citizens of the five zones herein referred to.

SEC. 3. The Commission shall reserve and allocate only to educational, religious, agricultural, labor, cooperative, and similar non-profit-making associations one fourth of all the radio-broadcasting facilities within its jurisdiction, excepting those facilities issued to ships and to the use of the United States Government departments or agencies. The facilities reserved for and/or allocated to educational, religious, agricultural, labor, cooperative, and similar non-profit-making associations shall be equally desirable as those assigned to profit-making persons, firms, or corporations. In the distribution of radio facilities to the associations referred to in this section, the Commission shall reserve for and allocate to such associations such radio-broadcasting facilities as will reasonably make possible the operation of such stations on a self-sustaining basis.

This bill was referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries and ordered to be printed.

This injustice and inequity and the need for this legislation, was brought to my attention by the Reverend Father John B. Harney, the superior, of the Missionary Society of St. Paul the Apostle, or Paulist Fathers, which operates station WLWL, of New York City, a non-profit-making organization, and by many residents of my congressional district who forwarded to me letters and petitions for this legislation.

Subsequently a meeting was held in the office of Congressman CONNERY, of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee on Labor, which was attended by Congressman MALONEY, of Connecticut, many other Congressmen, and representatives of labor, various religious denominations, and other organizations favoring this legislation. This meeting was addressed by the Reverend Father Harney and others. These addresses clearly evidenced the absolute necessity for this legislation.

A committee of three was appointed, consisting of Congressmen CONNERY, MALONEY, and myself, to draft an amendment to be offered to the Federal communications bill, H.R. 8301, now pending in the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

This committee met and prepared the following amendment to H.R. 8301, page 67, between lines 7 and 8, insert the following:

SEC. 507. The Commission, notwithstanding any other provisions of law, shall, within not less than 90 days after the date of enactment of this act, reallocate all frequencies, wave lengths, station power, time assignments, and other radio-broadcasting facilities within its jurisdiction among the citizens of the several radio-broadcasting zones established by law, in such manner that not less than one fourth of all such facilities, excepting those facilities allocated for the use of ships and for the use of United States Government departments or agencies, shall be reserved and allocated only for the use of educational, religious, agricultural, labor, cooperative, and similar nonprofit associations. The facilities reserved for and/or allocated to such nonprofit associations shall be equally desirable as those assigned to profit-making persons, firms, partnerships, or corporations. In the allocation of radio facilities to such nonprofit associations there shall be reserved for and allocated to such associations such radio-broadcasting facilities as will reasonably tend to make possible the operation of such stations on a self-sustaining basis.

Page 67, renumber sections 507 as 508; 508 as 509; and 509 as 510.

Congressman MALONEY of Connecticut, who is a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, has offered to submit this amendment in committee to H.R. 8301.

I am informed that of all the time utilized for broadcasting purposes only 2½ percent is allocated for educational institutions.

Radio broadcasting is the one means of education which can be utilized by all of the people. During the recent years of world-wide depression the radio has been the one means of education still left to the workers and their families. Thousands of schools have closed. In millions of instances, I am informed, the distance between those schools which remained open and the homes of the workers have been too great, considering the impoverished condition of the children, for them to try and get to the school each day.

The Legislature of the State of New York and the Board of Aldermen of the City of New York have memorialized Congress of the necessity for this legislation.

I hope the Members will support this worthy legislation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the majority leader a question with reference to the program. A day or two ago it was hinted that if we finished the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill today, perhaps we could adjourn until Monday morning. I should like to know if there has been any change in the program as far as the majority leader is informed.

Mr. BYRNS. I may say to the gentleman from New York that there has been no change. We have a number of bills pending in the Senate. There is no particular reason that I know of why the House should be in session tomorrow or Saturday; and if this appropriation bill is passed today, it is my intention to ask the House to adjourn over until Monday. The gentleman understands, of course, and the Members understand, that unless this bill is completed today we will have to have a session tomorrow in order to complete it.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman will remember, of course, that we have met every morning this week at 11 o'clock in order that we could adjourn over.

Mr. BYRNS. That was the object of meeting at 11.

Mr. SNELL. I suggest that the gentleman submit his request now, depending upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. BYRNS. I see no reason why we should not complete the bill today.

Mr. SNELL. We will stay here until we do complete it?

Mr. BYRNS. If we stay here until we complete it, then we will adjourn until Monday.

Mr. BLANTON. If our two leaders will help so the bill may be read scientifically, I know we can adjourn.

Mr. BYRNS. It always has been read scientifically.

Mr. SNELL. We cannot quite do that.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-NINTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BATTLE OF LEXINGTON, MASS.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts is recognized to address the House for 5 minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts, Mr. Speaker, 159 years ago today, the shot was fired "which was heard 'round the world", at Lexington, Mass., which is a part of my district. Ten of its citizens died in their fight for liberty. Today a delegation of eight citizens of the same patriotic town have journeyed to Washington to again fight for liberty. They are sitting in the gallery. They bring a demand, signed by more than 1,200 Lexington citizens, reviving a historical practice, because they believe that when a free people choose duly elected representatives they invest them with responsibility for preserving their constitutional rights to own property and to exercise freedom of individual enterprise.

They believe, Mr. Speaker—

When a free people feel that their rights are being trespassed upon and that the guidance of government is being unduly influenced by advisers not chosen by the people, it is a duty as well as a right of the people to express determined disapproval.

Such disapproval must be voiced decisively when legislation is enacted giving into Federal control the right to regulate individual and national activity for ends which the people feel are open to grave question.

They protest, Mr. Speaker—

Against Federal interference in business under the guise of promoting social reform and economic recovery.

They protest—

Against the indefinite extension of legislation originally designed solely for emergency purposes.

They protest—

Against the passage of legislation without more careful consideration by Congress.

They protest, Mr. Speaker—

Against the increase of bureaus, boards, and commissions, and the delegation of arbitrary powers to such governmental agencies.

They protest—

Extravagant and wasteful expenditure of public funds on unneeded and unproductive projects, thereby creating a constantly mounting public debt.

Mr. Speaker, they are resolved that—

The individual's rights of private enterprise and its rewards must continue, free from unreasonable interference by the Federal Government, and they demand their preservation at your hands.

Mr. Speaker, I earnestly commend their resolution to the House. It is high time that the Nation protested against the taking away of the people's rights, no matter how covertly done. This petition must be heard, must be considered, must be acted upon. It is patriotic. It is not partisan. I cannot believe, Mr. Speaker, that we are going to throw away the freedom, the liberty, that started at the very beginning of this country, the thing that has made our Nation the greatest Nation in all the world. Every nationality that came to our shores came for freedom. I feel sure my colleagues on the left, who have always, since the Republic began, said they were for State rights, for freedom, for liberty, will join with us in acting upon the recommendations of this delegation. We cannot let our country be ruined; we cannot let individual freedom be taken from us. [Applause.]

(The petition referred to by Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts is as follows:)

LEXINGTON, MASS., April 19, 1934.

To the honorable Senators and Members of Congress from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts:

When a free people choose duly elected representatives they invest them with the responsibility for preserving their constitutional rights to own property and to exercise freedom of individual enterprise.

When a free people feel that their rights are being trespassed upon and that the guidance of government is being unduly influenced by advisers not chosen by the people, it is a duty as well as a right of the people to express determined disapproval.

Such disapproval must be voiced decisively when legislation is enacted giving into Federal control the right to regulate individual and national activity for ends which the people feel are open to grave question.

Now, therefore, we, citizens of Lexington, Mass., on this 19th day of April, the anniversary of the first battle for American liberty, reviving an historical practice, submit to the Congress of the United States through the Senators and Representatives from this Commonwealth, the following protest:

We protest against Federal interference in business under the guise of promoting social reform and economic recovery.

We protest against the indefinite extension of legislation originally designed solely for emergency purposes.

We protest against the passage of legislation without more careful consideration by Congress.

We protest against the increase of bureaus, boards, and commissions, and the delegation of arbitrary powers to such governmental agencies.

We protest extravagant and wasteful expenditure of public funds on unneeded and unproductive projects, thereby creating a constantly mounting national debt.

We are resolved that the individual's rights of private enterprise and its rewards must continue, free from unreasonable interference by the Federal Government, and we demand their preservation at your hands.

CHICAGO WORLD'S FAIR

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 3235) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the participation of the United States in A Century of Progress (the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration) to be held at Chicago, Ill., in 1933, authorizing an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes", approved February 8, 1932, to provide for participation in A Century of Progress in 1934, to authorize an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman inform us whether or not this is the same as the bill now before the Ways and Means Committee? We have before that committee a bill extending the World's Fair Commission and permitting the importation without tariff charge of exhibits.

Mr. KELLER. This is not that bill. This is simply the bill authorizing the carrying on of governmental activities at the World's Fair in Chicago.

Mr. TREADWAY. Has this bill been before any committee?

Mr. KELLER. It has been before the Committee on the Library. It passed the Senate 3 days ago and the bill has been acted on by the House Library Committee.

Mr. TREADWAY. This bill carries an appropriation of $400,000.

Mr. KELLER. $405,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. Who authorized that?

Mr. KELLER. The authority, of course, should come from the Committee on the Library. It was referred to this committee for that purpose.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this is too important a matter to take up under such consent as the gentleman from Illinois has asked. It involves the expenditure of $400,000, and should be given proper consideration.

Mr. KELLER. We are not seeking to appropriate at all.

Mr. TREADWAY. But if it is authorized, the Appropriations Committee immediately says they must include this.

Mr. KELLER. I have not found it that way, I am sorry to say.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is practically the attitude of the Appropriations Committee. An authorization means practically an appropriation.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. Do I understand that the Ways and Means Committee has this same bill before that committee?

Mr. TREADWAY. We have a bill before our committee, not making an appropriation but providing for a continuation of the Commission and allowing the importation into this country of exhibits from foreign countries under bond.

Mr. SNELL. I think that is a separate bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think it is, too. From the explanation of the gentleman, I assume it is a separate bill; but it seems to me that this is too important a matter to bring up under unanimous consent at this time.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman should make some explanation of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am going to object to this $405,000 bill at this time, so that settles the matter. What is the use of discussing it any longer?

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. We did much for Chicago last year. The C.W.A. and the P.W.A., as instrumentalities of this Government, are doing much for Chicago now. I do not think, after the large sum of money we gave to Chicago for her exposition last year, that we ought to take $405,000 more out of the Treasury of the United States and give it to Chicago. Therefore I must object.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I will withhold my objection if the distinguished philosopher wishes to philosophize. The Clerk has not yet reported the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, under my reservation of objection, may I ask how many more centennials we are going to have for Chicago? We had one last year, and all of us were patriotic friends of Chicago and went there and spent our money. They made tremendous profits. Here is an attempt to extend it another year at Government expense for more private profit. Then next year, "Extend it for another year" will be the cry, and first thing you know it will be extended over 5, 6, or 10 years. If Chicago wants to carry this on, let them carry it on on their own bottoms, and at our own expense we will go back and see it again this year, but it is outrageous to ask the Congress of the United States to appropriate $405,000. Eventually I am going to object, but our friend wants to talk, so I withhold my objection.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I think it is absolutely wrong for anyone to come in here with a resolution and ask that it be passed without giving the House some opportunity to know what it is all about.

Mr. BLANTON. This one is not going to pass. We are not going to allow this resolution to pass.

Mr. RICH. I do not think we ought to let it come up without giving the House an opportunity to know something about the matter.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] wanted to say something about Chicago. He is a loyal Illinoian. Let us hear what he has to say, and then I will object to the measure and we will save this $405,000.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I simply call attention of the House to the facts in the case. The facts are that we went through a year of depression last year, and I think everybody knows that. Nevertheless, the attendance at the Chicago World's Fair was the greatest of any other world's fair in history, quite true; but when President Roosevelt was out there last October, he went over the situation very carefully. He himself suggested that it ought to be continued another year and he extended invitations to the other countries of the world to participate in the fair, and a number of them have accepted.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. In spite of the depression last year, did not the fair meet its expenses?

Mr. KELLER. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Then why ask for this appropriation at this time?

Mr. BLANTON. Every old man there over 70 took in the Streets of Paris at Chicago last year, and he was highly entertained.

Mr. TREADWAY. And some younger ones did, too.

Mr. KELLER. I am glad to have the gentleman from Texas say things, but I should like to have him stay within the facts. There were some men over 70 there. What I am trying to get over is this: It is true that the fair was very successful. It had over a million and a half greater attendance than any other fair in history. It is a well-known fact that the prosperity of the country is on the increase and it is reasonably expected that this will go on. Therefore, we can get more people to attend the fair this year than attended last year. It is purely a question of whether the Congress wants to give or to deny the right to continue the American Government exhibits there.

Mr. BLANTON. They can do this themselves without our appropriating $405,000 out of the Public Treasury, and I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Objection is heard.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the reading of the Journal on Monday, and the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH] may have 1 hour in which to address the House.

Mr. SNELL. I suppose there will be nothing political in that address?

Mr. BYRNS. I do not think so. I have not seen the speech, but it will be a very interesting and instructive one upon the subject he is going to discuss. I do not mind telling the gentleman the title of the address. It is "Yesterday, Today, and Tomorrow."

Mr. SNELL. I am more interested in tomorrow than yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

CROSSING A NEW FRONTIER

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a speech by the Speaker of the House delivered at an American Legion meeting in Alexandria, Va., Saturday a week ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech of Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY, Speaker of the House of Representatives, at the fourth annual Army Day dinner of the American Legion of Alexandria, Va., broadcast Friday, April 6, over the Columbia Broadcasting System via Station WJSV.

I am glad to have the opportunity of addressing this convention of patriotic citizens.

I believe in an adequate national defense. At the present time the way to keep out of war is to be prepared for it. Republics are never prepared.

When we were irresistibly drawn into the awful vortex of the World War we had the largest peace-time Army in the history of the country, but they had more musicians in the Russian Army than we had officers and men in our own Army. It was necessary for us to prepare after we entered the war, and we were able to do it on account of our incomparable economic strength. In less than 2 years we had an army of 4,000,000 trained men, and 2,000,000 of them were in France.

We expended for war during the first year after our entry four times as much as we had money in existence in the United States—an economic miracle never before accomplished in the history of the world—and our participation in the war cost us perhaps $40,000,000,000.

The entire Nation was regimented. Our declaration of war was unique in the history of the world. We pledged the entire resources of the Government. A peace-loving Nation, anxious always to avoid war, we were able quickly to develop an intense patriotic sentiment which made it possible to crown our war efforts with almost immediate success. It was easy then to get a patriotic response from every section of the United States. The next day after our declaration of war flags were flying from the palaces of the rich and the cottages of the poor. From one end of the country to the other a forest of flags was flying. Then there came news of victories in France; always victories for our armies on every field. It was easy to develop patriotism and obtain cooperation when the bands were playing and khaki-clad soldiers were marching, and when news of victories on the battlefields of France was carried in great headlines in the papers throughout the land.

WAR AGAINST DEPRESSION

We are engaged now in another war, more serious than the World War—a war against depression. It is more difficult now to inspire patriotic cooperation, but the people of the United States have remained orderly, patient, hopeful, and the great mass of people are contributing in their efforts to the success of our recovery program.

On the 4th day of March of last year this Nation was on its way toward an economic collapse; our banks were failing; all the way from Pennsylvania to Utah an agrarian revolt was in progress.

It cost $40,000,000,000 to win the World War. Our plans call for an expenditure of less than $12,000,000,000 to win this war against depression.

Already our plunge toward economic chaos has been halted and we are turned now in the other direction. Evidences of recovery became apparent within 30 days after the inauguration of Franklin D. Roosevelt as President. The new deal, with its objectives, is now in operation.

Two days after the oath of office was administered to President Roosevelt every bank in the country was closed. The examination and reopening of the banks commenced immediately. They are practically all open now, and in the first year of the new deal only seven of the reopened national banks have failed. The number of State banks which have failed after being reopened will not exceed 100. Before the new deal commenced four or five banks failed every day.

Three months ago the deposits in practically every bank in the country were insured to the amount of $2,500. This took care of 97 percent of the depositors in our banks. Attention was called most vigorously to the fact that States had attempted to insure deposits and all of them had failed in the attempt; but since January 1 last, when the insurance of bank deposits went into operation, not a single insured bank has failed, and 54,000,000 depositors enjoy complete protection. Only 3 percent of the depositors in the banks are not fully protected, and these, of course, are the larger depositors. The process of insuring deposits has met with tremendous success.

During the year which has passed the work of reopening unlicensed banks has proceeded, and today over $30,000,000,000 tied up by the bank holiday has been released, and slightly less than a billion dollars remains frozen in banks which have not been licensed. Out of 16,000 banks closed during the holiday, only 1,500 are still unlicensed.

It is not possible to find a single phase of the recovery program that has not been launched for the purpose of helping, directly or indirectly, every class and every group in the United States.

Federal credit has been completely reestablished. Through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation we have advanced money on the securities of closed banks and have paid off depositors up to 50 percent of the total amount of deposits impounded.

We are refinancing home mortgages and farm mortgages. A bill has just been passed guaranteeing both the principal and the interest on Home Owners' Loan Corporation bonds.

The monetary policies of the Government, proceeding along new lines, have already met with tremendous success. The present administration, under a great leader, has been doing in a new way the new things which were necessary in order to start this country on the road back toward better times.

GOLD

A year ago the embargo on gold became an established fact and the country went off the gold standard. Quickly the gold of the United States was impounded, and then followed the revaluation of the gold dollar at just below 60 percent of its former level, and by this revaluation we increased our gold base $2,810,000,000.

RECOVERY EXPENDITURES

Attention is now being called, apparently for partisan purposes, to the alleged enormous increase in our national debt, but the gross public debt of the United States increased in a little over a year of operations under the new deal only $5,223,000,000. On the 31st day of last month our gross public debt amounted to $26,158,000,000, but we had in the Treasury at that time $2,008,000,000. On February 28, 1933, when our national debt was $20,935,000,000, we had in cash in the Treasury only $221,000,000.

Therefore, deducting from our gross public debt as of March 31, 1934, the amount of cash we had in the Treasury on that date, we are face to face with the fact that during the interval from February 28, 1933, to March 31, 1934, we have, as a matter of fact, increased our public debt only $3,436,000,000.

What we have really been doing is to underwrite investments, taking from industries their securities. We have made loans to banks, to insurance companies, to railroads, to building-and-loan associations, to farmers, to joint-stock land banks, to municipalities, to various farm-mortgage corporations, including production-credit corporations, to Federal intermediate-credit banks, regional agricultural-credit associations, and commodity-credit corporations; and in so doing loaned a large amount of money, all of which, when the new deal has succeeded, will come back again. We are simply underwriting these propositions.

There is nothing alarming about the expenditures we are making, and we are preparing in the near future to make still larger expenditures.

A NEW METHOD OF APPROACHING THE NATIONAL DEBT

Using the new method of approaching the national debt, I might call attention to the fact that on February 28, 1933, our public debt, less the cash and securities the Federal Government controlled, amounted to $6,225,000,000. On March 31, 1934, our public debt, less cash and securities, amounted to only $8,264,000,000. It had increased $2,039,000,000, and this is all.

But in giving these figures, I am giving them to you exclusive of the $2,810,000,000 increment on gold we have obtained by revaluing the gold dollar—a perfectly legitimate item to include in this estimate—and when you do include this item you reach the inevitable, startling conclusion, in view of all the unfavorable comment the administration has received from partisan newspapers and magazines, that today our public debt, less cash and securities, is $771,000,000 less than it was at the end of the Hoover administration.

EMERGENCY WORK FOR FIVE MILLION

Five million men have been taken care of in P.W.A. work, in C.C.C. camps, and in the C.W.A. work. We are now entering upon another program of relief which contemplates aiding the destitute in the rural sections by giving them an opportunity to grow their own foodstuffs. Industry in the last year has reemployed over 2,000,000 men.

As compared with the dismal conditions of gloom and depression which prevailed in every section of the country last March, the accomplishments of the recovery program have been marvelous and without a parallel in the history of the world. We have entered now upon the second year of the recovery program. We have been legislating for the debtor class and we expect to continue to do that. We have been pulling down the mountain tops of the very rich and raising the levels of the valleys in our new methods of taxation, and this work still continues.

COMMUNISM

There is no room for communism in the United States. There is no revolution in progress except the revolution which is leading us out of the slough of despondency toward better times. The good old days will never come back again. After all, they were good only for a few. Our capitalistic form of government is not in danger. All talk of a deliberately planned revolution, preparing for a dictator and communism is silly and absurd, and the congressional investigation on that subject which will soon start will fully demonstrate, I predict, in a short time the mean, partisan, unpatriotic motives which inspire statements of that character.

The rule of so-called "captains" of industry and of big bankers is at an end in this country. Heretofore, and under the three administrations following the Wilson administration, we blindly followed the suggestions of this class of leaders, and the result was the conditions in which we found ourselves on the 4th day of last March.

The fact that a few big bankers and a few captains of industry and a few unpatriotic citizens of the United States are, for partisan purposes, now attacking vigorously the recovery program will make not the slightest difference. Back of the administration's efforts to accomplish recovery marches in solid ranks the great mass of the people of the United States, for the first time in recent years looking forward hopefully, patiently, toward the future. The only remedy offered by the few who oppose the recovery program is to suggest that the efforts toward recovery be abandoned, and nobody wants to slip back again into the condition of uncertainty and despair which prevailed before these recovery measures were put into effect.

The intention of the administration is to restore and maintain the 1926 price levels so far as it is possible to do so. We are going so to manage our currency that the value of the dollar, measured in purchasing power, will ultimately reach a reasonable constant point from generation to generation.

A SMALLER AMERICA

For a while we must content ourselves with being a smaller America. We must reduce production until we find markets abroad for our surpluses, and we are starting to do that now.

So far, measuring in the way in which I have measured our recovery expenditures, our recovery up to the present time has cost us nothing at all. We are $771,000,000 better off than we were at the end of the Hoover administration, but we are going to spend some money from now on in our P.W.A. program and in other programs, and we are not afraid to do it. If the new deal succeeds—and it must succeed—it will be worth more than it has cost, and it will bring again happiness and contentment to the homes throughout the land.

This, however, is not the time to rock the boat. We must be permitted to proceed on an even keel. Unpatriotic attempts to create dissension and distrust in the land ought to receive the vigorous condemnation to which they are entitled.

RECOVERY IN FOREIGN MARKETS

The tariff bill which looks toward reciprocal relations with the nations of the world and a restoration of international trade has already passed the House by an enormous majority. All partisan efforts to stop it failed miserably.

We have already established banks for the purpose of encouraging and bringing about a sale of the products of our farms and our factories in other lands, and the reciprocal tariff bill, when it goes into effect, will accomplish ever-increasing favorable results. Our present restriction of production may end sooner than we think.

This is a new road we are traveling; new conditions, new difficulties, present themselves on every hand. The recovery program will succeed—it must succeed. With the patriotic cooperation of 120,000,000 people in the United States, it will be crowned with success. Even now we are standing on the highlands of the morning, witnessing the dawning of a new day, and the United States may soon again assume its position of leadership among the nations of the world. Prosperity here means prosperity throughout the world, and no section of this world can be really prosperous until all sections of the world are prosperous.

Today, after many years, we recognize Russia, and today these two great peace-loving nations, stretching around the world, have clasped hands across the world's great oceans, and although the four awful horses of the Apocalypse seem to be riding, always riding, there are indications that war conditions will not be resumed.

Just a few days ago the representative of the great Empire of Japan and our own great Secretary of State clasped hands here in Washington in friendly, hopeful greeting, pledging the efforts of this country and of Japan toward maintaining the peace which prevails now.

There is no revolution; there will be none. We are moving out of the depression, and we are moving surely toward the better times which are ahead of us.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a petition brought here by the people of Lexington, Mass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL—1935

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 9061) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H.R. 9061, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. SEARS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, any revenue (not including the proportionate share of the United States in any revenue arising as the result of the expenditure of appropriations made for the fiscal year 1924 and prior fiscal years) now required by law to be credited to the District of Columbia and the United States in the same proportion that each contributed to the activity or source from whence such revenue was derived shall be credited wholly to the District of Columbia, and, in addition, $5,700,000 is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be advanced July 1, 1934, and all the emainder out of the combined revenues of the District of Columbia, and the tax rate on the full value, and no less, of real estate and tangible personal property subject to taxation in the District of Columbia shall not be more than $1.20 per $100 assessed valuation during the fiscal year 1935, namely.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that so much of the paragraph reading "and the tax rate on the full value, and no less, of real estate and tangible personal property subject to taxation in the District of Columbia shall not be more than $1.20 per $100 assessed valuation during the fiscal year 1935" is a matter of legislation, and therefore subject to a point of order.

In view of the Chairman's suggestion, I shall not indulge myself so far as any remarks on it are concerned, and am willing to commit the matter entirely into the hands of the Chairman for a ruling. I may refer the Chair, however, if the Chair would care to have a reference, to a ruling on a similar question in the last Congress made on February 15, 1933.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, it is not so much a question of parliamentary procedure as it is a question of giving the House the right to pass upon this important item in the bill. Every expression the committee has had from the taxpayers of the District has been to the effect that the tax rate should be lowered.

And conditions seem to justify that contention. Notwithstanding the lowered rate of assessment we have unprecedented tax delinquencies here, greater delinquencies than we have ever had before in the history of the District.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is an able and experienced and successful lawyer. I am certain he would not want a case in which he was counsel decided without allowing either of the parties litigant to be heard. And all we are asking in submitting this item is that the taxpayers of the District have their day in court.

With this in view, I ask the gentleman to withhold his point of order and give the Members of the House a chance to pass upon the question.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. With pleasure.

Mr. DITTER. May I say to the gentleman that I shall be happy if the gentleman or his able colleague from Texas, through the proper legislative committee, will sponsor a bill to bring this matter squarely before the House for determination; but, to my mind, tacking this question of a reduction of the tax rate onto this appropriation bill certainly provides no fair day in court for all parties to be heard.

As I said yesterday, I believe a large part of the hearings was definitely confined to a commitment to the lowering of the tax rate, largely sponsored by the able gentleman from Missouri, and probably encouraged and sponsored as well by the gentleman from Texas, and there were no groups of people coming before the committee who in any way gave voice to the thought that there should be this reduction, which, to my mind, is not warranted.

The gentleman has suggested that we refrain as much as we can from discussion, and I purposely have refrained from it and shall do so, but I insist on the point of order, and if the point of order shall be to the disadvantage of any worthwhile project in the District or the proper functioning of its government, I shall be glad to be corrected, and shall support at the proper legislative time the program which the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman was present at the hearings, or at least he had the opportunity to be present at the hearings, and was never denied——

Mr. DITTER. And I was present at the hearings, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. And the gentleman was never denied an opportunity to inquire fully in any phase of the hearings. The gentleman will recall that we invited his cooperation at all times and urged him to participate in the hearings. I am certain the gentleman, as well as all other members of the committee, is in receipt of a very carefully prepared brief from the organized taxpayers of the District, showing the tremendous rise in the cost of all District activities and pleading for a reduction in taxation in order that they may be able to tide them over the period of the depression.

The question is now before the House. We can determine it here on its merits, if the gentleman will consent, and this is all we are asking the gentleman to do—to withdraw his point of order and give us an opportunity to present the case of the taxpayers who are trying to pay for their homes and meet their taxes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition on the point of order. I hope our friend from Pennsylvania will not make this point of order, because it is subject to a point of order. He knows it. He has been told that. If he makes the point, the reduction in taxes will be stricken out. Why not give the House an opportunity to pass upon it? I want to say that he went out of his way yesterday to say that this whole hearing for days was on the tax matter, and that the bill ought to be called a tax bill.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking to the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I will discuss the point of order. This is a provision in the bill that will permit the poor home owners of the District to save something to pay for their homes.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas has said that the point of order will be sustained by the Chair. He is not discussing the point of order raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, there is some latitude allowed in the discussion of points of order.

Mr. FULLER. Not on a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask to be heard a moment more.

Mr. DITTER. If the gentleman confines himself to the point of order, I shall not object; but I will object to the gentleman's dissertation bearing on matters not confined to the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Chair and the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact that if he makes this point of order it applies to the whole paragraph. This paragraph contains appropriations amounting to $5,700,000, contributions to the District government. If he makes the point of order, the whole paragraph goes out, because I shall insist that it applies to the whole paragraph. When it goes out it cuts the appropriations for the District government $5,700,000.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on that.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not through yet. The gentleman should know that where any part of a paragraph is subject to a point of order, the whole paragraph is subject to a point of order. If the gentleman is going to insist on his point of order for the benefit of the newspapers of the District, I am going to insist that the whole paragraph goes out, and he will deprive the District of these appropriations amounting to $5,700,000. If he wants to do that, well and good.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I have not discussed the point of order, but I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw it and give the House an opportunity to pass on it.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I think I have a right to answer the innuendoes of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the whole paragraph.

Mr. DITTER. I only raised an objection to specific words at the close of the paragraph.

I further say that that of itself will not rule out and make subject to a point of order the entire paragraph, and the onus of dropping $5,700,000 from the bill will rest on the shoulders of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] if he follows my point of order with the proposition that he just made. If he wants the onus of that upon his shoulders, he may have it. May I say further that the innuendo with regard to the newspapers is wholly uncalled for. My friend continually here is disturbed and very much annoyed about the newspapers. What the newspapers may say about me I care not.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the whole paragraph.

Mr. SNELL. There is one point of order pending, and you cannot make another until that has been decided.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order on the whole paragraph. It is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can entertain all points of order affecting a paragraph. It seems to the Chair to be foolish to pass on these points of order separately, when they all will reach the same conclusion. The Chair, therefore, holds that the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is well taken. On February 15, 1933, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PRALL], who presided over the Committee of the Whole, so held. It is legislation on an appropriation bill, which is subject to the point of order. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] having made the point of order to the whole paragraph, the Chair holds that his point of order is well taken, and the paragraph is ruled out.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair hear me for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Is it not true that after the point of order has been sustained, the language against which the point of order is made has to be considered out of the paragraph, and, therefore, that the question as to whether or not the paragraph is out of order will depend upon whether there remained anything which was subject to the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would say to the gentleman from New York that the Chair ruled on the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas against the entire paragraph, and at the same time, in fairness to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the Chair also ruled upon his point of order. The Chair sustained the points of order of both gentlemen.

Mr. BLANTON. Part of it being subject to the point of order makes the whole paragraph subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so ruled.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CANNON of Missouri: Page 1, beginning with the enacting clause, insert "That in order to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, any revenue (not including the proportionate share of the United States in any revenue arising as the result of the expenditure of appropriations made for the fiscal year 1924 and prior fiscal years) now required by law to be credited to the District of Columbia and the United States in the same proportion that each contributed to the activity or source from whence such revenue was derived shall be credited wholly to the District of Columbia, and, in addition $2,200,000 is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be advanced July 1, 1934, and all the remainder out of the combined revenues of the District of Columbia."

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in opposition to the amendment. If the suggested reduction as contemplated by the amendment is made in the Federal contribution, I believe that certain definite municipal operations will be seriously curtailed. The amendment contemplates a reduction of 50 percent in the Federal allotment. In my opinion, there is a distinct obligation on the part of the Federal Government to bear a part of the cost of the operations of the District. I believe that those costs should be equitably divided between the Federal Government and the taxpayers of the District. I am as much opposed to the reduction of the Federal allotment as I was opposed to the effort to reduce the local tax, because if this reduction is made, then a large number of contemplated improvements, necessary improvements, must be stopped, and we shall not have such progress as necessary school building construction, a certain relief program, contemplated work along the line of health service, and child welfare.

A large part of the cost of the municipal operations here can be directly related to the operations of the Federal Government, and the Federal Government very properly should bear its share of those costs; and simply because there was an effort made to void this legislative enactment, to bring along this present program of deducting from the Federal allotment 50 percent of its amount, to my mind, is not warranted. It is not just. It is not equitable to the taxpayers of the District; and when the vote is taken on this amendment, I hope those men here in the House who can feel and understand a sense of obligation to the taxpayers of the District will rise up and oppose the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I demand that the gentleman's words be taken down. I submit that such statements cannot be made with impunity.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's words with reference to the whole statement be taken down.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's entire statement be taken down accusing the gentleman of not being present, of not knowing anything about the work, and his statement with reference to the gentleman not having been in Congress long enough for the papers to know his name; and that portion of his statement calling him names also—all the personal remarks which, in my understanding of the rules of the House, are not permitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the words objected to.

The Clerk read the words objected to.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I recall that in one of the gentleman's statements he said that the picture of the gentleman from Pennsylvania had appeared in the newspaper so many times that it had gone to his head.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read all of the statement.

Mr. BLANTON. Here are the pictures.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I want all of that taken down which was a personal attack on the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

The CHAIRMAN. The Reporters will furnish all the words reflecting on the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman cannot be heard on anything at this stage of the proceedings.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that nothing can be considered until we get the statements which the gentleman from New York has asked for. [After a pause.] The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York that he has just been informed by the Reporter that the words just mentioned by the gentleman from New York are in a prior statement made before the gentleman got the floor at this time.

Mr. SNELL. No. The words I had in mind were the words in that general statement. I supposed it was all made in one speech and I thought I would wait to see how far the gentleman was going.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will get the entire speech which the gentleman from Texas made under his pro forma amendment, but the Chair holds that we cannot go back of that.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, what is before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union when words are demanded to be taken down, the words must be furnished to the Chair and reported to the House and in the meantime no other business can take place.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am authorized to say for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that he admits saying what the leader on the other side stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will refrain from speaking. This cannot be debated. The words objected to will have to be read first.

Mr. SNELL. We will allow the words to be read in the regular order.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. PATMAN. The point of order is that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] will admit everything he is charged with saying. Why should the proceedings of the House be delayed until it is verified if he admits it?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a point of order.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the words objected to be reported to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. SEARS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill, H.R. 9061, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, certain words used in debate were objected to, and on request were taken down and read at the Clerk's desk, and he reported the same to the House herewith.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the words objected to in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. You will find in the hearings record of 100 pieces of property in the District on which there are delinquent taxes of $434,000 now due this District. I have here in my envelop 500 pieces of property in the District, some of them owned by multimillionaires, upon which there is $864,000 of taxes due the District, and they will not pay.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking to the question of this amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I am talking about the advisability of reducing this $5,700,000, when you raise the tax rate 30 cents.

Mr. DITTER. The gentleman from Texas is going back again to the matter of the reduction of the tax rate, in connection with these delinquent taxes.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, within the last 2 weeks I have a stack of Washington papers here that have been carrying the gentleman's picture on the front page. That is what is the matter with him.

Mr. DITTER. I make the point of order against that.

Mr. BLANTON. Printing his pictures is going to his head.

Mr. DITTER. Again I make the point of order, and I insist upon it. If the gentleman wants to indulge in personalities I shall open the record of the hearings and I shall delight myself in indulging in personalities.

Mr. BLANTON. If the membership wants to know the truth, the gentleman did not attend the hearings while the bill was being marked up.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman not interrupt me when I have only 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say again the gentleman would not have made this speech if he had attended our hearings when we marked this bill up, if he had known something about it; but he did not attend a hearing when we were marking the bill up.

He did not make a suggestion to the committee; but when they got to calling him "Mr. Ditt" and "Mr. Dittan" and "Mr. Ditton", like the papers have been playing him up—he has not even been here long enough for the newspapers to learn his name, and yet he is dictating here to this committee. And they go on in the paper and refer to him as the G.O.P. leader against this bill. That is not correct.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, again I take exception to the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. BLANTON. The G.O.P. is making no fight on this bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand that the gentleman's words be taken down. I submit that such statements cannot be made with impunity.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's words with reference to the whole statement be taken down.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's entire statement be taken down accusing the gentleman of not being present, of not knowing anything about the work, and his statement with reference to the gentleman not having been in Congress long enough for the papers to know his name; and that portion of his statement calling him names also—all the personal remarks; that is not right, according to the rules of the House.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I asked that these words be taken down, because under the rules of the House no Member has the right to make bitter personal attacks upon any other Member of the House and say uncomplimentary things about him in his representative or personal capacity.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania tried to stop the gentleman from Texas making these statements, but the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House did not seem willing to give attention to the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, so in order to stop the tirade the only recourse left to us was to ask to have the words taken down and presented to the House. In my judgment, these words are unbecoming personal attacks, and they are not in order under the rules of the House, and I ask for the ruling of the Speaker.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, it is never subject to a point of order to state the truth. The statement made by the gentleman from Texas was merely a statement of fact—a statement of fact the accuracy of which is obvious to all who heard the colloquy. He quoted certain definite statements which he said were carried by the newspapers, and he has the material here on the desk to substantiate every statement he made. If anyone has any doubt as to the authenticity of his statement, he is at liberty to consult the papers which I hold in my hand and be convinced. Now, Mr. Speaker, you cannot call a Member to order for stating what is true, especially when the truth of the statement is not disputed; and the truth of the statements made by the gentleman from Texas is not disputed by anyone in the Chamber. He asserted that these newspapers carry certain material. The newspapers which carry exactly the material to which Judge BLANTON referred are here and open to inspection, and his statements to that effect are therefore not subject to a point of order.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman say, as a statement of fact, that there is in the newspapers what the gentleman from Texas said, that this publicity in the newspapers had gone to his head and turned it?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That is very evident.

Mr. SNELL. I maintain it is a vitriolic, personal attack on the gentleman from Pennsylvania, without any excuse whatever, made because he disagrees with the gentleman from Texas in regard to a matter contained in the appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The language objected to by the gentleman was that certain statements were carried in the papers, and those precise statements are carried in the papers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair reads from Jefferson's Manual:

No person, in speaking, is to mention a Member then present by his name, but to describe him by his seat in the House, or who spoke last, or on the other side of the question, nor to digress from the matter to fall upon the person, by speaking reviling, nipping, or unmannerly words against a particular Member. * * *

The consequences of a measure may be reprobated in strong terms, but to arraign the motives of those who propose to advocate it is a personality and against order.

The Chair thinks the language used by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is objectionable and impugns the motives of the gentleman who advocates this particular measure.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the words be stricken from the RECORD.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the gentleman from Texas be allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, should not that motion be made in the Committee rather than in the House?

Mr. PATMAN. It can be made either in the House or in the Committee.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has now permitted the gentleman from Texas to proceed in order in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The Committee will resume its session.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H.R. 9061, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. SEARS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized to proceed in order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Texas will yield, in order that there may be no further confusion about the question, what is the matter now pending before the Committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas to strike out the last word, on which the gentleman had 5 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the situation is this: There was a provision in this bill by reason of the fact that the valuation of property in the District of Columbia was reduced last year $80,000,000 and in spite of that fact, with a tax rate of $1.50 there was over $5,000,000 of surplus in cash, and in order to prevent that surplus from being wasted and to give the people the advantage of it, the committee had provided for a tax rate of $1.20, which was the tax rate here for many years.

There was a point of order against that which would cut it out of the bill. This will leave all this surplus here in cash, subject to being spent extravagantly unless we earmark it. This money will be in the Treasury and they can shift these funds about. The hearings will show you they have used money that we gave for maintenance to raise salaries of certain employees here during the past year. It is to keep them from using the people's money in waste that we put this provision in the bill. When you raised the tax rate back on them 30 cents by reason of the point of order, in order to protect and to save the money in the Treasury, the gentleman from Missouri made a motion here to reduce the Federal contribution.

Why should it not be reduced? Two thirds of the Members of the House do not believe there ought to be any Federal contribution. The Federal Government within the last 20 years has spent $200,000,000 here in Washington beautifying it, and within the last 3 days there have been 200,000 visitors here just to see the cherry blossoms, and every one of them spent from $25 to $50 or $60 apiece. It is a regular mint for the people of Washington and the merchants and the commercial interests here.

The Government has spent millions of dollars for the District in hospitals to which the District does not contribute one cent. For instance, at St. Elizabeths Hospital every dollar is furnished by the Government. Take Howard University, for instance. Every dollar is furnished by the Government, and the District spends nothing on it. I could mention enterprise after enterprise upon which the Government has spent much money. For instance, take the bridges here, the million-dollar bridge on Connecticut Avenue, or the two-and-a-half-million dollar Key Bridge, and the $14,000,000 bridge that spans the river going over to Arlington—every dollar of that has been paid by your taxpayers back home.

Here in the District people do not pay a cent for sewers after they once get connection. They do not pay anything for garbage collection or ash collection. Every tree that has been planted here for 50 years the people have not paid anything toward it. The bill cuts their water rate down here to where a family only pays $6 a year. I hope the committee will agree to the amendment offered by my colleague from Missouri.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment, which was prepared hastily and I got the wrong figures, by substituting $4,364,295, in place of the $2,200,000 carried by my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by striking out the figures $2,200,000 and inserting "$4,364,295."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, if that is done, would not that be an amendment in the third degree?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it would not be—it is a modification. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the Public Works Administration has allotted to the District of Columbia during the current fiscal year a total of $11,365,810.98. The greater part of this very substantial sum was given gratis. There were, however, certain allotments for purely municipal purposes which were awarded under the 30–70 terms under which similar allotments were made to the several States. Thirty percent was granted and 70 percent was loaned. In such allocations the Board specifically provided for reimbursement of the Federal Government by the District to the amount of 70 percent.

I quote from the transcript of the minutes of the Special Board of Public Works on page 14:

Resolved further, That the Administrator shall notify this action to the appropriate committees of the Senate and House with a view to the determination by Congress of the appropriate share of the expense to be borne by the District.

Grants to the District of Columbia from the Federal Government may be tabulated as follows:

Relief funds, including Public and Civil Works allocations received by District of Columbia, no part of which is to be repaid:
Civil Works Administration:
Federal projects	$1,380,775.22
District of Columbia projects	2,795,275.76
Reformatory at Lorton, Va	136,000.00
Public Works Administration:
Highway construction	1,918,469.00
Improvement of the Mall:
Roadway construction, paving, etc	373,500.00
Union Square development	226,500.00
Federal emergency relief:
Direct aid	2,005,681.00
Food, coal, etc	375,960.00
Transient relief	185,500.00
Total (not to be repaid)	9,397,660.98
Public Works funds for municipal improvements for which it is proposed to require repayment by the District of Columbia of 70 percent:
Sewer construction	1,759,500.00
National Capital Parks:
Tree work (feeding, cabling, etc.)	50,000.00
Replacement of bridges, etc., washed out	31,100.00
Replacing water lines and sewers in older parks	54,550.00
Regrading, seeding, planting in Sherman Square	13,000.00
Total (70 percent to be repaid)	1,908,150.00
Total chargeable to Federal Government	572,445.00
Total chargeable to District of Columbia	1,335,705.00
Grand total	11,305,810.98

It will be observed that the Government has been very generous to the District. Out of the total of $11,305,810.98 donated to District purposes it requires the repayment of the customary 70 percent on only $1,908,150. Seventy percent of that sum amounts to $1,335,705. Of the $11,305,-810.98 granted the District, the required reimbursement is the comparatively small amount of only $1,335,705.

The purpose of the amendment I am offering is to repay this comparatively insignificant amount accepted by the District as a loan. The bill as originally drawn provides for a Federal contribution of $5,700,000. Subtracting from the Federal contribution of $5,700,000 the $1,335,705 loan, as provided by the specific order of the Board of Public Works, we have $4,364,295, the amount carried by the amendment.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PALMISANO to the committee amendment offered by Mr. CANNON of Missouri: Strike out the figures "4,364,295" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "5,700,000."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I should like to hear from the gentleman on that amendment. I should like to know upon what theory he bases his amendment.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I base my amendment on precedents of this House. In the Seventy-first Congress this House appropriated $9,500,000 toward the District expenses. In the Seventy-second Congress we appropriated $7,775,000, and in the Seventy-third Congress, this Congress, we appropriated $5,700,000, which is the amount that I ask in my amendment to have appropriated at this time. Gentlemen speak about reduction in the assessments in the District. Mr. Chairman, that applies to every city in the United States, and the mere fact that you reduce the assessment implies that you have to raise the taxes instead of reducing them. You certainly cannot reduce assessments and at the same time reduce taxes. In the last two Congresses the District reduced the taxes itself, and the Congress by its act has reduced the District taxes by taking assessable property away from the District of Columbia, on which many of these new buildings have been constructed. You have taken away property which has been bought by the Government, and by virtue of that purchase you have taken away assessments from the District itself. So, with all due respect to the Committee on Appropriations, I say that we should appropriate the same amount that this committee recommended in the present Congress. The committee does not give you any reason why we should be different this year from what we were last year. The same Members of Congress are here today that were here last year. The only reason the committee gives you, as I understand it, is that they want to say to the District Commissioners, "From now on you must listen to us, and you must put on the pay roll whom we say and must repair what streets we say and make what improvements we want you to make and not pay attention to what the people of the District desire and demand."

Mr. Chairman, in view of the unemployment, if you cut down the taxes, you cut down employment. You cannot have employment without money, and so I beg of you to keep this appropriation in at this time. I say to the Democratic Members of the House let the Commissioners, appointed for the first time from Democrats, have a free hand in conducting the affairs of the District. You are slapping them in the face by this amendment, and saying to them, "You shall not; you are not worthy of being Commissioners of the District as were the Republicans." The Republicans were free to make their assessment basis and to fix their taxes. You are saying to the Commissioners, for the first time appointed by your President, that they are not capable of doing the things that you permitted the Republicans to do, even in this present Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland. The amendment of my colleague from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], the chairman of the subcommittee, is absolutely correct. It is based upon an allowance out of the Federal Treasury for the District government of $5,700,000. His amendment subtracts from the $5,700,000 a sum equal to 70 percent of the $1,759,500 that the Public Works Board has allotted to the District of Columbia for the extension of its sewer system, and 70 percent of $148,650 for some of the parks that have always been supported jointly by the Federal Government and the District government—a total deduction from the $5,700,000 of $1,335,705. In other words, under this bill, with this amendment, we are allowing the same contribution that we allowed last year of $5,700,000. When the Public Works Board made the allotment of $1,759,500 for sewers they entered an order on their minutes that their action be reported to the two appropriation committees of Congress, that Congress might determine what part of these allotments the District should be required to pay. We only ask that the District pay what every other city throughout the Union pays under the National Recovery Act under similar circumstances; and why not? I do not want to do an injustice to the District. If $5,700,000 is right as a contribution, let us stick to it, and we are sticking to it when the Public Works Board makes a grant wherein the District is to get 30 percent free from the United States and pay 70 percent themselves. Let us make the District live up to their proportionate share like every other city. Therefore this amendment is right and should be adopted.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mrs. NORTON. Is it not a fact that this same grant has been given to every city in the country which has asked for it?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mrs. NORTON. And is it not also a fact that taxes have not been reduced in these cities because of such grants? Had the reduction from $1.50 to $1.20 per hundred been retained in this bill the item of $5,700,000 would not be reduced.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The same character of grant has been given to every city that has asked for it where it has been approved, and every city has been made to pay or give security for 70 percent of it, and that is all we ask here.

Mrs. NORTON. The District can be depended upon to live up to its agreement. Why reduce the appropriation when it is the lowest appropriation ever granted to the District, and at a time when it is very necessary to make many improvements in the District? The appropriation should be increased, not reduced.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What appropriation is the gentlewoman talking about?

Mrs. NORTON. About the appropriation of $5,700,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We are not curtailing that.

Mrs. NORTON. You are cutting it down to $4,364,295.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly not. We are making them pay to the Federal Government 70 percent of the allotment the Public Works Board made.

Mrs. NORTON. Do you not think they could be trusted to pay without compelling them to do it in this way?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Without giving security? Other cities have to give security or bonds.

Mrs. NORTON. What kind of security? Other cities have the right to determine how their taxes should be spent. This city has not.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The other cities give bonds. This District has received 100 percent of the allotment, and this is the only way to collect the 70 percent they should pay.

Mr. BLANTON. When my colleague says we ought to pass "the amendment", the gentleman, of course, means the Cannon amendment, and not the Palmisano amendment?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The Cannon amendment; yes.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. Why should the Government contribute anything to the District of Columbia? The rate here is but three tenths what it is in my home city, Los Angeles.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is an old question. The Government has taken so much of the taxable property in the District that it probably ought to contribute something to the support of the District.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. PALMISANO. Is it not true that this year they have taken $10,000,000 of District property from the tax rolls of the District?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I may say to the gentleman from Maryland that I suspect the District of Columbia this year has been the most-favored city in the entire Union. [Applause.] The Federal Government, through the Public Works Board, the Civil Works Administration, and the Emergency Relief Administration, has absolutely given to the people of the District of Columbia, in Federal aid, $9,397,000, without a cent to be returned to the Federal Treasury; and I am not asking that it be returned. We need have, therefore, no sympathy for the District this year. They have a surplus in the Treasury and can well stand to pay this debt. [Applause.]

SUBSIDY TO WASHINGTON, D.C.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, in regard to the city tax rate in Washington, I was a member of the Mapes committee which studied this question for several months. We got the facts and figures relative to all the cities in the United States of comparable size to Washington City. We also made investigation to determine if any country on earth had adopted the policy of giving a bonus or a subsidy to its capital city. We were unable to find where any country in the world gave to its capital city any sort of a subsidy except the United States of America in the case of Washington, D.C.

NO OTHER PRECEDENT

There is no State in the Union which gives to the capital city of the State a subsidy because the State government uses so much of the taxable property in the capital city. The capital cities are always anxious to get Government activities.

The county seat does not require the county to give the municipality a subsidy because the courthouse and other county buildings are there, because they are anxious to have those public buildings. But in this country it has been the custom to give annually $5,700,000, $9,000,000, $10,000,000, and I believe at one time $12,000,000, as a direct grant from the taxpayers of the United States to the Capital City, Washington, D.C.

LOWEST TAX RATE AND HIGHEST HOTEL RATES—LOWEST TAX RATE AND HIGHEST REAL-ESTATE RENTALS

It is my opinion, after investigating this subject for many months on that committee, that the people of Washington pay not more than 50 percent of the tax rate that is paid in cities of comparable size in America. It is a city where they have the lowest tax rate and the highest hotel rates, the lowest tax rate and the highest rentals of any city in America.

GOOD NEWSPAPERS HELPFUL TO CITY

It has been more favored by the Government of the United States than any city in America. It has many good newspapers, and the owners of the newspapers live here in Washington City.

They have pride in their local city just like we have pride in the cities where we live, and they are always trying to do something to benefit the city and its people. By reason of these great means of communication they have been able to convince Congress to give them many things which ordinarily they probably would not have been given.

TAXABLE PROPERTY REMOVED BY GOVERNMENT

With regard to the question raised by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO] that the Government has taken taxable property away from the District of Columbia and appropriated it to the use of the Federal Government after paying the owners the value of it, and that for this reason we should pay them taxes each year on that property—that is the conclusion I presume he intended to leave—let us analyze it. The Southern Railway Building at the corner of Pennsylvania Avenue and Thirteenth Street was purchased by the Government of the United States. It is going to be destroyed and another Government building will be erected on that site. The Southern Railway Co. went out on Fifteenth Street and purchased a lot and built a building which will be assessed by the District for several million dollars more than was the building they left on Pennsylvania Avenue. So instead of reducing the tax values, they have been increased. Further, the taxable values of property surrounding these Federal buildings is always increased. So we have not taken anything from the tax rolls of the District. It frequently happens that on property surrounding these Federal buildings, buildings will be constructed just outside the Government reservation which cost several times as much as the Southern Railway Building cost.

RESIDENTS OF DISTRICT CANNOT VOTE

I have studied this problem a great deal. There is one argument made by the people of the District of Columbia that you cannot answer with any logic or reason, and that is the proposition that they are not entitled to vote for President and Vice President; that they are denied the right and privilege of voting in this great country of ours. This argument cannot be answered. I have often wondered how we might solve the question. I believe there is a way by which it can be handled.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

NATION'S CAPITAL MUST BE UNDER CONTROL OF CONGRESS

Mr. PATMAN. I believe this question can be settled. None of us want any city—Washington, D.C., Baltimore, or any other city—to have charge of the Capital of this Nation. This is one spot that the representatives of the people should control in every way. We do not want to be in a postion where there may be a conflict between the jurisdiction of Congress and the jurisdiction of some local municipality.

I do not believe that the people would be willing for us to give up this jurisdiction. I think they expect us to maintain control over the Nation's Capital. At one time the Nation's Capital was 100 square miles; however, subsequently about 31 square miles were given back to Virginia, and we only have 69 square miles in the District of Columbia today.

The people of the District say they cannot vote. There are about four or five hundred thousand of them that make this claim; although they came to the District with the knowledge that they must maintain their residence in the States in order to vote. If you were to give them the right to vote, they would control the Nation's Capital instead of the Nation's Capital controlling them; therefore, we cannot agree with the people of the District.

CONGRESS SHOULD ANNOUNCE POLICY FOR FUTURE

My theory is that this Government should now announce a policy for all time to come that we are going to condemn sufficient property here in the District for the Capital. I would suggest just for the purpose of discussion that we commence at the Congressional Library and the Supreme Court Building, and take in the Capitol of the United States, all the Mall, up to the Arlington Memorial Bridge, including the Lincoln Memorial, and sufficiently wide not only to accommodate the Government business now, but for any time a hundred or two hundred years from now, erect buildings thereon for the Government and allow that to be the Nation's Capital. The Government will have charge of the area. They will do everything in connection with it in the way of furnishing light, water, and everything else. The Government policemen would have charge of the area. Then the people of the District of Columbia can go back to Maryland and there be allowed to vote. It is my understanding that all property released by the Government will automatically go back to Maryland in compliance with agreement made when Maryland granted the land for a National Capital. They can have their own city. They can be in a congressional district. They can have their own Congressmen, and they will have two United States Senators.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to my colleague from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. There are 100,000 people in the District of Columbia now who vote. Did my colleague know that?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes. They live in various States and maintain their residence there.

Mr. BLANTON. The original water conduit that partly furnishes water to this city now was built and is owned by the United States Government. It was paid for by this Government.

Mr. PATMAN. I agree with the gentleman that the people here have been treated very nicely by the Government.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. In 1871 the Congress gave the people of the District of Columbia the right to vote and conditions became so rotten, in fact, unparalleled in the history of this Nation, that in 1873 what few good people of Washington were left came and begged Congress to take them back.

DISTRICT RESIDENTS WILL BECOME MARYLAND RESIDENTS

Mr. PATMAN. It is my opinion at this time that I would never vote to allow the people of the District of Columbia to control the Nation's Capital, but I am willing for them to vote. We may have an area cut off and allow the Nation's Capital to be in this area and no one live therein. All people living in the area outside of that may vote. In other words, we will release from the District all of the area we do not need and without anything else being done the people who reside in the released area will become citizens of Maryland.

The intention in the beginning was that the people of the District of Columbia would not have residence here; that they would maintain their residence in their respective States; that they would exercise the rights of citizenship in their respective States; but since so many people live here who do not maintain a residence back in the States every year they put up a clamor for citizenship and for the right to vote. Of course, they should be allowed to vote some place. If they do not have a residence back in one of the States, they should be allowed to vote in some way or some place, it occurs to me. The only way I can figure it out is to have this area set apart and let that area be the Nation's Capital. Let the remainder go to the State of Maryland, and I am sure the people of the District of Columbia would be glad to be in Maryland. It is a great State. They could then be represented by two United States Senators and could have a Congressman of their own.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PALMISANO) there were—ayes 15, noes 37.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fuel, light, power, repairs, laundry, and miscellaneous supplies, $28,000.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, there is a very pronounced division among a number of citizens as to the advisability of public ownership. This question is debatable, but I am in favor of meeting this question, as we ought to meet every other question, honestly and not under subterfuge.

The Bureau of the Budget allocated approximately $87,000 for the Utilities Commission. In the bill now before the House that amount has been arbitrarily reduced to $50,000. I have gone over the testimony before the committee carefully and I can find no one word of evidence on which such a reduction is based. Every bit of evidence shows the need of $87,000 and even the justification for a larger amount.

I am convinced that such a reduction in the appropriation here for public-utilities supervision, if not intentionally thus designed, is calculated to so disorganize the supervision of utilities in this District as to strengthen the claim for public ownership. This may be all right, except that the District is going to have to suffer a great deal while it is going on.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. If the gentleman will yield, we have not yet reached that item.

Mr. HARLAN. I understand that item has not been reached. I am talking about the last three words in the pro forma amendment, "supplies for the District." I understand also Mr. COCHRAN will offer an appropriate amendment at the proper time, and I want to talk on that subject now because all available time may be used then, and I do not want my time taken up now, if the gentleman please.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Of course, we would like to have the discussion at that time, but we have no objection to the gentleman proceeding now.

Mr. HARLAN. In 1914 the Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia had 19 employees to supervise utilities aggregating $55,000,000 in value. If the committee recommendations are carried through, we shall have barely enough money in this year of 1934 to supply 16 employees at 90 percent of their base salary. In other words, this very drastic provision which is set forth on page 6 of this bill pertaining to the Utilities Commission of the District will reduce our force to supervise taxicabs, railroads, street cars, telephone companies, and electric-light companies with a value three times what it was in 1913, with an income three times what it was in 1913—this Utility Commission will be called upon to act with three less employees than they had in 1913.

The Bureau of the Budget had allowed for salaries of the employees of the Public Utilities Commission at 90 percent of their base pay, which is allowing for a restoration of but 5 percent in the District of Columbia instead of 10 percent which other Federal employees enjoy, but even with this allowance to the disadvantage of the employees of the Utilities Commission, it is utterly hopeless to maintain the force of 31 employees with less than the $87,000 recommended by the Bureau of the Budget.

Manifestly, if this arbitrary reduction is not designed to emasculate this Commission, the natural result of this act will be to emasculate the commission and bring on a very palpable argument for public ownership, and to me this looks like the purpose of it.

The job of the Utilities Commission is to employ expert men—engineers, auditors, and lawyers—to supervise the work. I have not time to go into the many things they have done, but they have saved the citizens of the District many thousands of dollars. Taking just one item, last year there were mistakes in the accounts of the lighting company discovered by the Utilities Commission that produced refunds of $65,000 to the citizens of the District. Now, when you are hamstringing and emasculating the Utilities Commission of this District, you are simply destroying an agency that will mean the saving of a great many thousand dollars in taxes and great savings to the people of the District themselves. As another item, there was $30,000 held by the gas company. When a citizen of the District signs for gas he has to make a deposit and these deposits were held by the gas company here for years.

They paid no interest on this deposit and yet were getting the benefit of interest from its use. The auditor of the Utilities Commission disclosed this and returned this interest to the people making the deposits.

Over the last 11 years there has been a constant reduction in the District of Columbia in electric-light rates, so that we have in Washington probably the cheapest rates of any city east of the Mississippi River. The continual appraisement of the utilities properties in the District, together with the constant audit of their books, is a perpetual protection to the citizens of the District from overcharge and other losses which would unquestionably occur if the citizens had no supervision at all over these agencies.

There has not been one word of reflection against the honesty, integrity, or the ability of this Commission, or any of its employees; nor, so far as the records show, is there any criticism of the amount of salary paid to any of these employees or the experts procured by the Commission. Arbitrarily to cut their appropriation 43 percent, based on no evidence and in the face of the long period of efficient service that this Commission has rendered the District, can carry but one import, and that is that some place there is a wish that supervision over utilities become a complete failure; that these utilities without supervision will so arouse the animosity of the people that public ownership will be the logical step. If you favor public ownership, let us meet the question like legislators and enact an express law for that purpose, or, even if you desire to achieve public ownership by the circuitous route suggested in this bill, let us meet that fairly and take away the entire appropriation. It is utterly absurd to lack the courage of our conviction either way and waste $50,000 of public money on an impotent Utilities Commission that will be able to accomplish nothing.

Mr. GUEVARA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment and ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the Commissioner from the Philippines?

There was no objection.

Mr. GUEVARA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in my place today to ask the Congress of the United States to pause and reflect on a series of contemporary legislative events which affect the Philippines in a manner that should prove disturbing to the conscience of America.

Less than a month ago this Congress did itself proud by disposing of the Philippine problem with the enactment of the Tydings-McDuffie Act, which was hailed as the crowning achievement of years of groping for a solution that shall at once be the most feasible and the least imperfect.

The act presents an elaborate formula which is calculated to meet the varied and complicated phases of a problem that has sprung from 35 years of intimate political and economic association between the Philippines and the sovereign country.

That formula, Mr. Chairman, encompasses in a carefully balanced fashion the diverse elements of time, economics, politics, psychology, national duty, and international policy.

Verily, the Tydings-McDuffie Act is the covenant which the American Government in its might and wisdom has promulgated as defining and governing the Philippine-American relations before complete Philippine independence becomes a reality. Not being a treaty, for a treaty would be a legal paradox under the present political status, the only sanction of that covenant is the majestic force and power of the conscience of the American Nation.

By the inspiring words of the President and of congressional leaders, upheld by American public opinion, and in consonance with the generous policy of this Nation in the Philippines, there exists in the minds and hearts of fair-minded men a solemn understanding that if the terms of the Tydings-McDuffie Act are altered in the future the alterations shall be on the side of more liberalism and greater helpfulness to the Filipino people.

But, Mr. Chairman, sadly, diffidently, but earnestly I am constrained to affirm on the floor of this House that by its action in the case of the coconut-oil excise tax under the revenue bill this Congress has, I like to believe inadvertently, disregarded the terms of the covenant in a manner adverse to the fundamental interests of the people of the Philippines.

I am not at this time setting forth the details of the cause of which I am loyally complaining. Already many Members of Congress know them by heart. They have been frank with their motives and outspoken in their deliverance.

Mr. Chairman, I have been privileged to be in this House for more than a decade. I have learned to admire the sterling character of the American people through my association with the men and women who make the laws of this mighty Nation. Without apology and without exaggeration, I declare that the American character is the paragon of fair play and the epitome of man-to-man integrity.

Therefore, notwithstanding the recent legislative events which are trying our souls, my faith in the essential goodness of the American character remains firm and unshaken, and I am hoping that this Congress will before long rectify and galvanize its attitude toward the Philippines in line with its traditional policy of unselfishness and generosity.

Mr. Chairman, I wish once more to express our gratitude to America, for the American flag has meant to the Filipino people political progress, material welfare, and social amelioration. That sentiment, sir, the Filipino people will cherish passionately throughout the unending procession of the years. [Applause.]

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUEVARA. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. May I state that I am very sympathetic with the gentleman's position, but is there any difference between the imposition of a processing tax on rayon or paper that are substitutes for cotton, which tax is imposed on the American people, and putting a tax on coconut oil, which is used in the manufacture of butter substitutes?

Mr. GUEVARA. There is a great difference.

Mr. CULKIN. I am unable to see it.

Mr. GUEVARA. The tax that is put on cotton or on rayon goes to the American people themselves.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

I will say to the gentleman that I am unable to distinguish between the two. In other words, it is my contention that the American citizen's rights are at least equal to the economic rights of the people of the Philippines. The American people subject themselves to a processing tax on these various substitutes, for cotton and other agricultural products. What is there that binds us in morals or in law not to subject the gentleman's people to the same process?

Mr. GUEVARA. Any excise tax on rayon or any similar commodity raised or produced in the United States to be paid by the American people will go back to the American people themselves in accordance with the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Mr. CULKIN. Let me say to the gentleman in that connection that under the Norris amendment the same thing is true with respect to the Philippines. These funds are to go back to the Filipinos.

Mr. GUEVARA. That is the greatest joker ever put in a bill, because under that provision neither the government of the Philippine Islands nor the Filipino people will get the 3-cent excise tax to be levied on coconut oil. Why? Because the price of coconut oil will be so raised in the United States that I wonder what factories or what industries in the United States will use coconut oil at such prohibitive prices. Therefore, that excise tax will prohibit and prevent the importation of coconut oil into the United States.

Mr. CULKIN. I may say to the gentleman that I have great sympathy and admiration for his splendid people. I voted recently for the Philippine independence measure, and on a former occasion I voted in the same way because of my great sympathy for their ambition to become their own masters. I felt they were entitled to their liberty and to work out their destiny in their own way.

Mr. GUEVARA. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CULKIN. But I hope the gentleman's people will not believe that America is being oppressive in this instance, because it is merely doing to the gentleman's electorate what it is doing to its own people under the administration of the A.A.A.

Mr. GUEVARA. If the Filipino people are going to be placed on the same level as the American people in the matter of protecting their commodities, then we will be pleased to accept the provisions of the bill.

Mr. CULKIN. This is not a customs duty, I will say to the gentleman, but an excise tax only.

Mr. GUEVARA. I suppose the gentleman from New York knows very well that the so-called "excise tax" on coconut oil is but a way of levying a duty on coconut oil coming from the Philippine Islands.

Mr. CULKIN. It is a processing tax on coconut oil.

Mr. GUEVARA. It is only a way of getting around levying a duty.

Mr. CULKIN. The purpose is to forestall competition with American butter and other domestic fats. Our people are in great distress and they are entitled to at least equal consideration by Congress.

Mr. GUEVARA. Yes; that is true. The object is to prohibit the importation of coconut oil into the United States, because the American people believe it is in competition with farm products. The United States promised independence to the Philippine Islands, and it is committed to help the Philippine people to achieve it.

Mr. CULKIN. Let me say to the gentleman that the British Empire, generally a free-trade nation, taxes in some instances the importations from its own colonies. We have never done that to the Philippines.

Mr. GUEVARA. But there is this great difference. In England it is reciprocal. England levies a duty on goods coming from the colonies, and the colonies levy a duty on goods coming from England.

Mr. CULKIN. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that we are only doing in this instance what we are doing to our own people.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUEVARA. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman from the Philippines stated a moment ago that no revenue would accrue to the Philippine Treasury because of the Norris amendment. He bases that on the belief that no coconut oil would be used in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from the Philippine Islands has expired.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words, and I shall occupy but a moment or two. The gentleman from the Philippines further stated that the people of this country believe that the coconut oil is in competition with the butter and other vegetable oils produced in this country. Certainly his statement that no revenue will accrue to the Philippine treasury is a confession, or affirmation, of the fact that the belief of the people of the United States is justified, and is it not a confirmation of the belief among many of us that coconut oil is not necessary for certain purposes in this country as we have been led to believe?

Mr. CULKIN. What the gentleman from Michigan states is true. It is my belief that the American dairymen have paid the price for Philippine independence.

Mr. WOODRUFF. That is my belief too.

Mr. CULKIN. That cannot be disguised. We never imposed any tax on the Philippines in any form until we had primarily imposed a similar tax on our own people.

Mr. GUEVARA. If the United States is to grant independence to the Philippine Islands, they are duty bound under moral principles to help the people get that independence. We have been demanding independence for 36 years and time and again the United States Government has denied its grant upon the ground that we are not economically prepared for it, and now that the economic interests of the United States demand the granting of independence to the Philippine Islands, everybody in the House and Senate is saying, "Give them immediate independence, in order to get rid of their competition." I do not believe that is fair. It is a reversal of America's noble policy in the Philippines during the last 35 years.

Mr. CULKIN. We are not a colonizing power, and we have never taxed the Philippines. The balance of trade has been $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 a year in their favor, and we are spending $15,000,000 a year for the upkeep of the Philippines. Incidentally the American farmer has been paying the price for that. Over the whole field of agricultural production a processing tax is being levied, and why should the Philippine people say they are wronged when they are being treated in the same fashion that the American Congress is treating its own people? I see no distinction in the matter.

Mr. GUEVARA. If the Philippine farmers are to receive the same treatment that the American farmers will, that would be all right.

Mr. CULKIN. That depends upon the action of the Philippine Legislature. Under the Norris amendment those funds go back to the Philippine Treasury.

Mr. GUEVARA. Let me stress that there is a world of difference between the position of the American farmer under the A.A.A. and that of the Filipino copra producer under the Norris amendment. The processing tax under the A.A.A. accrues directly to the American farmer while the excise tax that may be collected under the Norris amendment goes to the Philippine Government.

It would be a godsend to the Philippine treasury if that excise tax should materialize. But I am afraid it will exist only in the domain of illusion. The proponents of the excise tax declare that coconut oil is indispensable only in certain technical industries which use perhaps less that 5 percent of the total quantity of coconut oil now consumed. That would mean that our coconut-oil exports to America would be reduced to the indispensable minimum, and that, in turn, would mean piling up the copra surplus in the islands which will have to be disposed of at distress prices in the markets of the world.

Therefore, the net effect of the tax would be to reduce the coconut oil and copra exports of the Philippines to the United States and demoralize the prices of these two commodities, thereby depressing the world's price levels of vegetable oils, a fact which would have an adverse repercussion on the price structures in the United States. While these unwelcome results will ensue, the Philippine Government will not only miss the tax bonanza that the Norris amendment would bring but it will also most likely reduce its present substantial income from the sales tax on copra and coconut oil exports to the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following preferential motion, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Privileged motion by Mr. BLANTON: Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, of course, this motion is pro forma, to give me an opportunity to discuss the entire bill. Possibly, from the view that one minority member of the committee has about it, to strike out the enacting clause might be the best thing to do. In his speech yesterday the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER], in speaking of the bill, said:

I am not in accord with them, and that I do not accept the bill in the way in which it is framed is in no sense to be construed as a reflection upon them. I think the bill is a misnomer. I believe that instead of calling this the District of Columbia appropriation bill it should be called the District of Columbia tax bill. I believe that the motive—

And here, Mr. Chairman, he is referring to the motive of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] and the Democrats on his subcommittee—

I believe that the motive which prompted the majority group in studying and in preparing the measure was primarily the matter of reduction of taxes for the District of Columbia.

Then later on he speaks about the Public Utilities Commission and says:

Forty-three percent of the amount provided in the Budget has been deducted.

Also, that the Public Utilities Commission has been cast aside as an ineffective instrument of the Government.

I wish the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] had been present when we marked up the bill and had made some suggestions to us. We sent him a written notice that the bill was going to be marked up.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I am sorry I cannot. We also phoned him that it was going to be marked up, that we were going to mark the bill up, and we wanted him to help us. The clerk of the committee spent lots of his time writing and phoning him, but he did not come around us. He was not with us when we framed a single sentence in this bill, not one, and there are 78 pages in it, I think. Not a suggestion did he make to us. Then he comes on the floor here and, in his speech yesterday, says that the bill is a misnomer. If he wants to, he cannot only charge it with being a misnomer, but he can attempt to wreck it. The provision that was stricken out here, and it was subject to a point of order, was a wise provision, a provision that would help the poor home owners, a provision that reduced the tax rate to $1.20, what it used to be. When he had that stricken out he wrecked that part of the bill and caused the amount that the Federal Government was going to contribute to the District government to be reduced from $5,700,000 to $4,364,295. In other words, he took away from the District more than a million and a quarter dollars.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I cannot yield to the gentleman, after the way the gentleman has acted. I should have been glad if he had come in the committee and made some wise suggestions while we were preparing the bill. I should have been glad if he had given us the benefit of his suggestions and his long years of experience in handling municipal affairs. We worked for weeks posting ourselves upon it and then he comes on the floor and criticizes it and seeks now to tear it all to pieces.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DITTER. Reserving the right to object, if the gentleman will use a part of those 2 minutes to yield to me, I shall not object.

Mr. BLANTON. I will answer the gentleman's questions now while he is reserving the right to object because I don't want to have it taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and the gentleman is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to impress this upon your minds: The year the Public Utilities Commission did their best work for the people of the District of Columbia was 1927, the year when Congress gave them only $46,120, which is less than we are giving them now, as we are giving them $50,000 in this bill, yet they did more that year in an effort to provide relief to the people of the District of Columbia than they have done in any year since.

What have they done? Have they reduced the street-car fares? No; it took an act of Congress to do it; they did not do it. The gentleman from Ohio here, Mr. HARLAN, and others of us here worked several years to force them to reduce street-car fares and to get a 3-cent rate for school children. The Public Utilities Commission did not do it. We did it in Congress; something we have been fighting for for years.

Did they reduce the gas rate? No. They entered into an agreement which reduced the rate by just such amount as the gas company wanted, but the Public Utilities Commission did not go into court and make the gas company give us reduced rates. Did they secure any reduced electric rates? Only to the extent that the power company agreed to reduce them.

The Public Utilities Commission has not made any of the utilities of the District of Columbia do anything. We are paying the highest telephone rate in the United States. Hotels having 800 rooms, even, have to pay 50 cents per month for each room for an extension telephone to this telephone monopoly. The Public Utilities Commission have not made the telephone company do a thing. And it is the biggest monopoly in the United States.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman tell the House why?

Mr. BLANTON. It is because either they do not know how or do not want to do it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry, but I really have not time to yield.

I have confidence in Mr. Keech. I believe he will do more with $50,000 than many others could do with $500,000.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my pro forma motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. DITTER and Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania, a member of the committee.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion.

It is not my purpose, Mr. Chairman, to continue this unfortunate affair of the morning. I was sorry that the gentleman from Texas, because I happened to oppose him, felt that his only means of protection was to engage in personalities.

I wish the Members of the House would take the time to examine the committee hearings. I believe that after reading the committee hearings it will be agreed that some contribution was made by the minority side during the hearings. That we were not present when the bill was marked up is, as the Members know, rather beside the point, for marking up a bill is a formal matter which does not take weeks but is usually pretty well finished up when the formal hearings end, and, under the help and guidance of the clerk of the committee, is expedited.

In justice to the Public Utilities Commission of the District, I wish you would examine the hearings to see whether or not anything has been accomplished by that body. To my mind, it has accomplished much; and the fact that the accomplishment came ultimately as the result of stipulation in no sense lessens the value of the activity of the commission. The gentleman from Texas took exception to the work of the commission in that whatever relief has been provided was brought about as the result of agreement. If the gentleman from Texas recalls anything at all of his law practice, he will probably remember that frequently matters of litigation come into the courts and, after the litigation has proceeded and a great deal of testimony has been taken, ultimately there comes a time when as a result of stipulation the parties come to an agreement which avoids the necessity of a decree; and that is what happened here.

I believe that the Public Utilities Commission has tried to do a good job; but if it has not done a good job, if there has been any collusion or fraud or dishonesty or carelessness, if there has been a bartering away of the rights of the people by the commission, then let us bring pressure to bear and investigate to determine that fact, rather than to reduce the amount of the appropriation so that the commission is no longer rendered an effective instrumentality in the District.

The reduction that is made is 43 percent. With its funds so severely cut, the commission will no longer be a protective body, it will no longer provide the means whereby it can have skilled experts to aid it or where the commission can properly function to take care of the gas user, the electricity user, the telephone user, the street-car rider and the user of the other public utilities.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield.

Mr. HARLAN. Is the gentleman aware that right now the Public Utilities Commission is in the midst of a lot of litigation in regard to which the experts have already done a great deal of work; and that if this appropriation is cut as suggested, and as against the recommendation of the Budget, all this work that we have paid for will be lost, because there will be no money to pay for their further services, which are needed?

Mr. DITTER. I thank the gentleman for that observation. May I add that if the gentleman is acquainted in any way with public-utility litigation, the gentleman will recall that invariably the public utilities have at their command a corps of the best valuation experts in the country and, from the standpoint of accountancy, the best experts of the country usually fortified by a brilliant array of counsel.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUNN. Does the gentleman favor a public ownership of the various utilities, such as light, heat, water, gas, and other natural resources?

Mr. DITTER. Personally I do not.

I say that the Commission should have the opportunity of having experts along the line of investigations, whether it is in connection with accountancy, land valuations, or the best in the way of legal ability to contend with the public utilities as they come up for investigation. That is the reason I welcomed the observation of the gentleman a while ago. While this litigation is pending, the Commission should be armed with the best that can be provided and with the necessary money to carry on this litigation. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the motion may be withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE CONTROL BOARD

For personal services, advertising, printing and binding, streetcar and bus transportation, telephone service, and other necessary contingent and miscellaneous expenses, $28,352.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DITTER: Page 5, line 5, strike out $28,352 and insert in lieu thereof, $50,900.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take the time of the House for any great length of time in reference to this suggestion. This simply restores the Budget amount of $50,900 for the Alcoholic Control Board's operation. I believe if the Alcoholic Control Board is to properly function it should have the amount provided under the Budget estimate. I have nothing further to say except to ask that this suggested amendment receive support at the hands of the committee.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the committee considered this item very carefully. We determined, in the first place, that the staff provided by the bill is ample to take care of the requirements of the Board. We also elicited testimony to the effect that the work of the six inspectors could be as well, if not better, handled by the police department.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to what the chairman of the committee has said, I call attention to the fact that this merely reduces some inspectors that were provided for. These inspectors were taken out of the service here in the District. We have installed traffic lights all over the city, and whenever you do that you do away with a traffic cop at the intersection. I wish you knew just how many traffic cops at intersections with semaphores we have relieved from duty and put back into active service by putting in these traffic lights. They could not get better inspectors than the captains and lieutenants of each precinct to look after this matter. They have already drawn these employees from the District service and called them inspectors, but they are nothing in the world but former employees of the District. We are making use of these men we have instead of paying the six new salaries.

We are allowing them two special inspectors, which is enough. If they want a special inspector to do something in a precinct where they think a captain is not doing his duty, they can have one of these two inspectors do the work.

May I commend the chairman of this committee for the idea. This was his idea. This is his work. I claim no credit for it because he did it himself and he did it righteously and for the benefit of the taxpayers of the District. We will probably get better service by having the police officers, the captains and the lieutenants in the various precincts, superintended by these two special inspectors, do the work.

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. When the work was more difficult than it is now it was done by policemen?

Mr. BLANTON. Why, certainly; it has been done all the time by policemen. My colleague on the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS], knows that it was ridiculous in the first place for them to take a policeman out of the police force and merely shift him and call him an inspector. We are just putting six men back where they belong and giving them two special inspectors. I hope you will follow the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], who has done splendid work on this bill.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Texas called our attention to the fact that traffic lights had taken the place of traffic cops, I was wondering what effect it might have on the country to have traffic lights also take the place of Congressmen, with no personal reference to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you mean for them to take the place of Congressmen from New York?

Mr. BLACK. With no reference to the gentleman from Texas, with push buttons back home and having stop-and-go signals.

In connection with the original amendment, and being acquainted with the District work as I am on account of being on the committee, may I say that I really think it would make for better enforcement and at the same time result in a better distribution of money to people willing to work to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, whom I am afraid to talk about.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION

For two commissioners, people's counsel, and for other personal services, $50,000, of which amount not to exceed $5,000 may be used for the employment of expert services by contract or otherwise and without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri: Page 6, line 17, after the word "services", strike out "$50,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$86,823."

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, my amendment seeks to restore the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget.

I cannot find one word in the hearing or in the report that justifies the reduction in the appropriation for the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia. This Commission has saved the people of Washington millions of dollars. It is about to be reorganized. Hon. Raymond Keech, formerly people's counsel, has been named by the President as a member of the Commission. Mr. Keech received his appointment because of his untiring efforts in behalf of the citizens of the District and the record he has made. When he was appointed every civic organization in the District praised the appointment and looked forward to a "new deal." They realized Mr. Keech has the experience, and his past record warranted the prediction that his appointment would mean a further savings in their gas, light, and other bills. Mr. Keech has his eye on the telephone company, and with the cooperation of the Congress I expect a lower telephone rate within 6 months or a year. Now, the committee comes along and reduces the appropriation for the Commission. The recommendation is $32,500 less than was allowed for this year and $37,323 less than the Budget estimate.

In these days when regulation of public utilities is an absolute necessity, why cripple this Commission? I am in favor of restoring the figure to the amount asked for by the Budget, and I hope the Members will vote for the $86,823, the Budget estimate.

Frankly, if there was to be any change it certainly should not have been a reduction but an increase.

Only through effective regulation can the ultimate cost to the consumer be lessened. Opposed to the Commission and the people's counsel will be found the best lawyers that money can employ, as well as the best engineers and accountants. What chance will the Commission have if its force is to be so crippled that it cannot prepare the necessary data; how can you expect any beneficial results? Why not destroy the Commission entirely rather than make it useless?

You will render ineffective the regulation of utilities in Washington if you agree to this cut.

Do we want it to go out to the country that the Congress has so reduced the expenditures of its Public Utilities Commission that its value will be nil for the next fiscal year? That is something that I do not want charged to me.

There is no issue before the people of this country today in which the public is more interested than the regulation of public utilities. The methods adopted by some corporations, disclosed by the Federal Trade Commission, have shocked the people.

Through the efforts of this Commission the people of Washington are enjoying rates lower than other cities of equal size for the gas and electricity consumed; and since putting into effect the weekly pass on the street cars, I think I can say without fear or contradiction that the street-car rates are the lowest in the country.

I note in the hearings that if the Congress will amend the law so as to provide that the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission do not supersede the regulations of the Public Utility Commission this Commission can immediately get busy and provide a lower telephone rate in Washington, which is highly desirable. To adopt the amount recommended by the committee means you are placing the Commission at the mercy of the private corporations. There can be no other conclusion. I refuse to be a party to such a proposition. There is no argument that the committee can present that will make me change this view for I have read the hearings and they do not justify the reduction. If the committee is sustained, we will be held up to ridicule by the press of the country.

The amendment restoring the amount suggested by the Bureau of the Budget should be adopted.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. In just a moment.

If the action taken here today were taken by a board of aldermen in a city or by a State legislature, the people of the country would say they had sold out to the utility corporations, and I am not going to stand here and remain silent and let the people of my city think I am in favor of crippling the Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia. They do not want me to do this. They want the utilities commission of our own State to function and function properly, and when they want the utilities commission of my State to function properly I know they want me to do what I can to see that the utilities commission here functions in the same way. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas for a question.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman spoke of being able to ride on the street cars for 1 week for $1. Did my friend know that the street-car companies, in order to be allowed to make this $1 rate, had to go to the Commission and beg for this privilege?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I do not know half as much as the gentleman from Texas seems to know. That hardly sounds reasonable.

Mr. BLANTON. They had to beg for it. The Commission did not cause them to make this $1 rate per week.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. But I do know we should not cut this appropriation from $86,000 down to $50,000 just because some corporation counsel may have paid 25 cents to a chambermaid or 25 cents to a bellboy in a hotel. If that had not been brought out, I really believe this cut would not have occurred. Read the hearings.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Merely not to take it out of the gentleman's time, I reserve the right to object to ask a question.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. And I reserve the right to yield to the gentleman if I get the time. Now, I am either going to get the time without making any promises to the gentleman from Texas or I am not going to get it. If I do not get the time, the gentleman from Texas is not going to get any time during the consideration of this bill if I can stop it.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not asking for any time, and I am asking this under a reservation of objection, because I want to ask a question not to be taken out of the gentleman's time. I want to ask the gentleman if we did not give the Commission only $47,000 in 1927?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I insist on the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. I want to thank the gentleman from Texas for his interruption. I shall not characterize it, but I was querying the gentleman from Missouri at the time. Will the gentleman state, if he can, for the information of the House, what is the approximate amount that this Utilities Commission saves the people of Washington on these rates in the course of the year?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I do not know the approximate amount——

Mr. HARLAN. Will the gentleman yield to me to answer that question?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio for that purpose.

Mr. HARLAN. I will say that from the time of the war up to the present time the aggregate savings to the citizens here have been $11,000,000 in different installments, and every year for the last 11 years there has been a progressive reduction in the electric-light rate as a result of the appraisements and other activities of this Commission.

Mr. CULKIN. The saving, then, would be at the rate of approximately $750,000 a year?

Mr. HARLAN. That is approximately what it would amount to.

Mr. CULKIN. And we are asked to fix this appropriation at approximately $50,000?

Mr. HARLAN. We are asking in the amendment to fix it at $86,000.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is what the Bureau of the Budget recommended, and that is all we want. We want to give this new Commission an opportunity to function and function properly. If the committee has any information on which to base this reduction, I want to say it is not in the hearings. You cannot find anything to that effect in the hearings. You will find over 20 pages where an official had to explain in detail small expense account for attending meetings in various States. Because we do not like one Government official, we should not take the appropriation from such a useful agency as our Utilities Commission.

I am not going to be a party to the assassination of this Commission. I want my people back home to know I am fighting to restore this appropriation.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. I understood the gentleman to say something about the Missouri Utilities Commission. Does he say that that commission has ever reduced a rate that the company did not ask for?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. There has been a great deal of criticism of our commission, I will admit. That is not my responsibility.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. Eighty percent of the people would vote to abolish the commission and hang them. [Laughter.]

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The whole trouble in our State, as the gentleman knows, is that the corporations have control, or at least have had their way. Some day that will end. I do not know how the present commission is functioning. I have enough to keep me busy here.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. Absolutely; the corporations have control.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. But the corporations do not have control in the District of Columbia, and will not have control as long as Raymond Keech is there. His past record warrants that statement, so do not put the shackles on him by cutting this appropriation.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I simply want to make an observation. We have a new utility company in my State, and not one man will be appointed on that utility committee unless it is someone the companies want, because the whole thing was organized and directed from the office of the Governor.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I not only have a warm affection for my colleague from Missouri, Mr. COCHRAN, but the highest regard for his judgment. However, in this case he apparently has not had an opportunity to study this question. He is not as familiar with the facts as are the members of the committee who have been making a study of it for several years.

In the first place, he is not aware that the reduction in the various utility rates in the District has not been made as the result of the action of the Public Utilities Commission.

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Has the committee ever told the Utilities Commission to get rid of these horrible plow pits?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It is utterly impossible to get the Utilities Commission to instruct the local utilities to do anything they do not want to do.

The acting chairman of the Commission testified on the stand that there had not been a single instance in the history of the Commission in which they had secured a reduction in utility rates in the District, except by agreement, when the utility companies wanted to reduce them.

But this reduction in the Budget estimates is amply justified by a study of the work of the Commission for the last 10 years. In 1923, when the city was still crowded with the aftermath of the war activities, this Commission easily performed all its functions and discharged all the duties devolving upon it with a staff of 18 members, and a pay roll of $31,520. And again in 1927, the year to which the gentleman from Texas has just referred, they operated on a total expenditure of $46,120, and now that we are giving them $50,000 I am convinced that this amount will amply supply any legitimate need of the Commission.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. HARLAN. If this Utilities Commission has been so utterly ineffective as the gentleman has said, and all the work has been done by the committee here in Congress, why waste the $50,000 that is now in the bill?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Can the gentleman point to a single instance in which that statement is not justified by the facts?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri) there were—ayes 17, noes 36.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of the appropriations contained in this act shall be used for or in connection with the preparation, issuance, publication, or enforcement of any regulation or order of the Public Utilities Commission requiring the installation of meters in taxicabs until such regulation or order shall have been approved by Congress: Provided, That this prohibition shall not be construed to affect any order or part of an order of such Public Utilities Commission other than with respect to the requirement of the installation of such meters.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], the chairman of the subcommittee, closed the debate on the matter of the Public Utilities Commission before I had an opportunity to ask him a question about his views in reference to the Commission. The gentleman indicated that he knew a great deal about the history of the Commission, about what little work they were doing. The gentleman was in charge of the 1934 appropriation bill, and I call the attention of the House to the fact that with all of that knowledge which the gentleman had last year, still he came in here and reported a bill to the House that carried $82,000 for the Public Utilities Commission. The gentleman had all of that knowledge last year about this Commission and still gave it $82,000. If his argument is sound today, it was sound a year ago. Why did he waste $32,000 a year ago?

I call attention to the fact that there were 53 Members on the floor of the Committee here when my amendment was voted on. I want the Senate to know that, because the Senate is going to put this money back. I want the Senate to know that there were 53 Members present on the floor and that a couple of runners of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] went out to the cloakroom and brought half that number in, and they did not even know what they were voting on. That is how we legislate for the District of Columbia. We treat the District like it was a flag station on the plains of Texas rather than the greatest capital city in the world.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes. The gentleman is a useful Member sometimes, but this is one time he is not making the fight for the people of the United States. You have often heard him making that statement. This is the people's commission.

Mr. BLANTON. Last year, when we allowed $82,000, we did not know about these junkets all over the United States, down to Hot Springs and Boston and New York and Cincinnati and all these other places.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I do not yield further. I want my time to reply to that statement. I am glad it was made. That is exactly why this appropriation was cut down. The gentleman has let the cat out of the bag. He cut the appropriation down because one of the member's of the corporation counsel's office made a trip to Boston, Hot Springs, New York, and Chicago, and the gentleman did not like his expense account.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not have a thing to do with it. My chairman did it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Read the hearings and see how the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] took that official and examined him for nearly an hour. It is all in the hearings. I felt that was the reason the appropriation was cut down. I knew all the time that the gentleman from Texas simply got peeved because one man, in order to get information, attended conventions, and as a result of that you cut off $32,000 even below this year's appropriation. I knew why you cut it down. That is no way to legislate. The Senate will put it back; watch and see.

Mr. Chairman, under the leave granted me, I include the letter addressed to the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION
OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, April 11, 1934.

The Honorable JAMES P. BUCHANAN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN BUCHANAN: The Public Utilities Commission is greatly concerned at the reported action of the Committee on Appropriations in recommending to the House of Representatives an amount $36,823 less than necessary to provide salaries on a 90-percent basis for employees of the Public Utilities Commission during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935. Such a reduction will restrict the activities of the Public Utilities Commission to a degree which will make its work of regulation almost impotent. It will result in losses to the public aggregating many times that amount.

With such a reduction it will be impossible to keep up our work of checking the accounts of the utilities, one feature of which this past fiscal year alone resulted in the beginning of refunds to patrons of the gas and electric utilities that will amount to more than $65,000. Last year $30,000 of long-term interest on deposits was made available to patrons of the electric company through the activity of our accounting staff.

The commission has never had a staff of accountants adequate to check properly the accounts of the utilities. We have laid plans to investigate the rate base of the power company during the next fiscal year to determine the extent of the property included in the base which is no longer used and useful in furnishing service. Every million and a quarter dollars' worth of such property discovered would alone result in a saving to the people in electric light rates equal to the entire annual appropriation of the commission. We believe that there is a considerable amount of property so included in the rate base, but this can only be discovered by an accurate engineering and accounting check. Such a check cannot be made with the reduced staff contemplated by the Appropriation Committee.

In the matter of the annual accrual of depreciation, amounting to approximately $9 per year per phone through the rates charged users of telephone service, we expected to utilize our engineering and accounting staffs for the purpose of investigating the underlying data and detail to be submitted by the telephone company on the 1st of August of this year. If our judgment of the situation is substantiated by that investigation, we hope to reduce the amount collected from the patrons of the telephone service by at least $350,000 annually. We are firmly of the opinion that telephone rates can be reduced and still yield a fair return to the company.

We will be almost entirely at the mercy of the telephone company with such a staff as provided by the appropriation.

We believe that the street-car riders are entitled to better service at rates of fare lower than at present. Our efforts since the merger act was passed have constantly been directed to that end, and we indicated in one of our decisions early last year that we were dissatisfied with the method of operating the street-car lines, and stated that it was entirely possible under a proper plan of merchandising the car and bus service to offer lower rates at a profit. When the merger was effected the weekly pass was put into effect, as a result of which more than 50,000 patrons daily use passes, at an average cost per ride of less than 5 cents. This has resulted in the company making more money and the public saving more than $1,000,000 annually over the regular rates of fare. We believe that it is possible to have much better transportation service at rates lower for those who do not ride frequently enough to make a pass profitable to them. It was our expectation that after we got the car and bus lines rerouted, with constant engineering checks upon the operations and accounting checks upon the revenues and expenses, we could effectuate a real saving to the people and, at the same time, permit the company to earn a fair return. Such information cannot be secured satisfactorily except through the use of our own independent staff at least of its present size.

The merged street-railway company has attracted so many new customers that the mass-transportation problem of Washington has been greatly intensified.

Close day-by-day study of street-railway operations is essential if the commission is to reroute street cars for greater speed and efficiency, to open new lanes of street-car and bus travel, and to arrange for better and more modern equipment.

The Commission now is making a transportation survey to get the facts necessary to plan a better mass-transportation system for the District. The Commission desires to eliminate, as far as possible, the conditions which resulted in tie-ups and slow street-car service during the heavy snows of last winter.

The legislation providing for the merger of these street railway lines was before Congress for many sessions. The Public Utilities Commission initiated and advocated this legislation because it felt that better street-car service would result. It is certain that cheaper transportation already is a fact. Through the studies now being made by the engineering section of the Commission, better, faster, and more efficient street-car service will result. But the Commission will not be able to complete this work to regulate the street-railway company properly unless it has sufficient funds.

We have in effect a temporary rate of depreciation for the Capital Transit Co. pending an investigation this year into proper rates. This is a matter of exceedingly great importance to the car riders, and our inability to keep within reason the rates of depreciation concerns them greatly.

The patrons of the utilities in the District of Columbia as a whole are now paying lower rates for each and every kind of utility service than are in effect in any comparable community east of the Mississippi River, and there are only a few instances of lower rates in the United States. Our method of reducing electric-light rates year after year for 11 consecutive years is known and envied wherever utilities are regulated throughout the country. We hope to make a similar arrangement with our gas companies after our valuation is completed. To do these things which are beneficial to the public requires a staff at least as great as at present. We would have asked for more money this year if we had not been informed that such a request would not be honored.

Since the World War rate reductions have been effected in the District of Columbia which have resulted in savings to the patrons in the aggregate sum of $11,179,369.

Our engineering staff has never been adequate to attend to the business of this Commission. We have in mind that there should be a considerable enlargement so that greater supervision may be had of the actual construction and maintenance work of the utilities. As it is, we are not prepared to give that supervision which we should to the standards of construction for the utilities engaged in the District of Columbia, nor to investigate the needs from an engineering point of view of those construction expenses. The present appropriation reduces our engineering staff to where it is of little value.

The personnel of this Commission in 1914 consisted of 19 employees. In order to keep within an appropriation of $50,000, it will be necessary to reduce our personnel to not more than 16 employees. In 1914 the valuation placed upon the telephone, gas, electric, and street railway companies for the District of Columbia was slightly more than $55,000,000. An approximate value of these properties for the year 1933 aggregates $147,000,000. The gross revenues of these companies in 1913, when this Commission was created, was $11,440,000. Their gross revenues in 1933 were $33,680,000. Our present personnel comprises 31 employees. To reduce that number to keep within the $50,000 appropriation recommended would put this Commission back to where it was when it was regulating utilities of far less importance to Washington than at present. We believe that the appropriation requested of Congress is in itself inadequate and by no means should be reduced. This is not taking into account the many interstate bus lines which now enter the city and which are subject to our regulation, the licensing of public vehicles, which has been placed under our jurisdiction, and the licensing and supervision of more than 4,000 taxicabs, most of which are individually owned.

The Commission urges with all the force that it can that an amount sufficient to retain the present personnel strength be appropriated, and that an amount not less than $1,500 be appropriated for current expenses.

Very truly yours,

RILEY E. ELGEN, Chairman.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 7 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago I asked the gentleman from Missouri if he would yield for a question, and I made my observation about the recently created public utilities commission in the State of Kentucky. I want to make it clear for the sake of the RECORD that I meant no reflection on the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia or upon any of its past actions, because I do not know anything about this particular institution. But I do know that in my native State for a great many years the power companies have been trying to have created a public utilities commission for the purpose of destroying municipal ownership.

Two years ago, when I was speaker of the Kentucky House of Representatives, the power company wanted this bill passed. The speaker of the Kentucky House is chairman of the rules committee, and the rules committee has control of all legislation. During the last 15 days of the session of the legislature they were so insistent in their effort to get control of the municipal plants that they fought for 13 days before they got enough votes in the rules committee to get their public utilities bill out; and the last 2 days, when they did have enough votes they forgot that they had to have the speaker to call the committee together, and I refused to call it together. This year they went back to the legislature and got their bill out and got it passed, but they are not content with the Public Utilities Commission to regulate the plant owned by utility companies. So far as I know, Kentucky is the only State in the Union where municipally owned plants are under the supervision of the public utilities commission.

Mr. BLANCHARD. They are in Wisconsin.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. They ought not to be.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's request is not in order. Under the agreement the Chair recognized the gentleman from Kentucky for 2 minutes and the gentleman from Missouri for 4 minutes.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized and yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Down in Kentucky I charged on the radio not long ago—and it has not been denied and they cannot deny it—that the plans for the creation of that Commission were laid in the Governor's office by the lobbyists for the power companies; that the plans were directed from that office; and I now stake whatever reputation I may hope to have as a prophet that every member of that Commission will be somebody named, dominated, and controlled by the power companies now doing business in Kentucky. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Is not the gentleman's party in control in Kentucky?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. No. My party may be in control but in name only. A combination of interests which controls both Republicans and Democrats is in the saddle in the State of Kentucky.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, my colleague is usually very fair. He is carried away in this instance by the enthusiasm of the moment.

Any suggestion that the expense accounts to which he refers had anything to do with this reduction of the appropriation is wholly without foundation. It was not considered in this connection at all; and the motion to make this reduction was not made by the gentleman from Texas. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, every utility in this district is opposed to this reduction, and I am sorry to see my good friend from Missouri joining forces with them. It is accounted for by the fact that he has not had an opportunity to investigate the situation, and is not familiar with the facts.

Mr. Chairman, I understand this was a pro forma amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the pro forma amendment be withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks just made and to include for printing in the RECORD a letter written to the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee upon the subject I discussed.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to the gentleman extending his own remarks, but I did not understand what extraneous matter he desires to include; by whom is the letter written?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. It is written by a man who appeared before the gentleman's committee, Mr. Elgen, the vice chairman of the commission.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the member of the commission to whom the gentleman refers——

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE

For personal services, $72,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do this for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee two questions. I realize that probably we shall not be able to read the bill verbatim and complete it within the time the gentleman wishes.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; we shall.

Mr. TREADWAY. We shall take it for granted, however, that we will not, and I shall ask these questions.

I have looked through the report with some care but do not find any reference to the time of the expected completion of the connection between Rock Creek Park and Potomac Park. This work has been in progress for a good many years. It is completed, I believe, as far as P Street, but the work is still under way below there. I would like some information with regard to the time when it is expected the connection will be made. I think it is a very important one.

The other question I would like to have answered by the chairman of the subcommittee I brought up the other day in the course of the debate. It is relative to the disposal of refuse in the city. I notice in the report there is reference to cutting down appropriations, and of this we all approve; but it does not say that anything is being done with reference to the incineration of the refuse of this great city. So far as I know, not another modern city burns its trash on open dumps as we do here today. I think it is a disgrace to the city of Washington that just across the river there should be this continuous bonfire of Washington city refuse.

It seems strange to me that we have not progressed beyond that stage. Any time there is a wind blowing from the other side of the river in the direction of the city, the whole lower part of Washington is engulfed in that smoke and the odors reach as far as the grounds of the White House. It seems to me that this condition ought to be changed very promptly. Whether there is an item covering this in the bill now, I am unable to say, but I should be glad if the distinguished chairman would give us some information on these two subjects.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Answering the questions of the gentleman categorically, in the first place, the connection has not been made between Rock Creek Park and Potomac Park for the reason that it is not possible to construct those avenues until the bridge, which is now in process of construction, is completed.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I locate the bridge the gentleman has reference to?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The P Street Bridge. The money has already been provided for the purpose to which the gentleman refers, and just as soon as the bridge is completed the connection will be made. No further action on the part of the House is necessary.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask a further question? I notice there is a great deal of work being done below P Street on the Potomac Park side.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is that being carried on in connection with the work preparatory to the completion of the connection?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It is in anticipation of the program of establishing the connection.

Mr. TREADWAY. And the gentleman understands that in the comparatively near future the two parks will be connected?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes; as soon as the bridge can be completed.

As to the second proposition, the gentleman from Massachusetts observes that we are burning refuse on a dump over on the other side of the river instead of in an incinerator.

We were asked last year for $224,000 to operate these incinerators when we could do the same work for $18,000, as we are doing it now. We had before us a proposition of spending $224,000 in using these incinerators or of spending $18,000 and burning the refuse on the dumps. The pay rolls which they suggested to us and the estimates presented to us were so exorbitant that we decided to close down the incinerators and burn the refuse on the dump. We saved $209,000 by this action.

We had a close vote here on the floor on the item. On a vote by tellers we carried the proposition to close the incinerators by only half a dozen votes.

It illustrates the mistake of carrying partisanship into the consideration of an appropriation bill. With the $209,000 saved last year and the $285,000 we are saving this year on this item, a change of 3 or 4 votes would have cost the District government approximately half a million dollars, which they now concede would have been entirely unneeded.

The Appropriations Committee is a business committee and politics has no place in its deliberations. The bill that we have brought onto this floor is a well-considered bill and one which is so adjusted as to give the people of the District of Columbia the best government for the least possible outlay of money, and now we are faced with another political fight on items in the bill which mean just as much saving to the District as the half million dollars we saved last year on this one item alone.

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman will permit an interruption, I am sure the gentleman will acquit me of asking the question from any partisan or political viewpoint. I asked the questions purely for information.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am certain that is true in the gentleman's case, and I trust he will not attribute my remarks as a reference to him in any respect.

May I add that we are opening the incinerator this year and running it at a saving of $300,000 on the amount asked by the District officials for its operation last year.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be given 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. I judge from what the gentleman tells us that it is expected soon that either the incinerator the city now owns or other incinerators will be put into use. I should judge also from what the gentleman says that the present method under which he has made such big savings is temporary; and when we get these things properly adjusted, we may expect the refuse of the city to be cared for through incinerators?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That is true. We expect to burn the refuse in incinerators at an expense of $300,000 less than they asked for the same purpose last year. By applying ordinary common-sense business methods we will save approximately $1,000,000 every 3 years on this one item.

Mr. TREADWAY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object——

Mr. BLANTON. I hope that the gentleman from Missouri will allow our colleague to put his letter in. I think he has a right to put it in the RECORD.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I just want to extend my own remarks.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I shall be glad to have the gentleman put it in, but I trust he will permit me to make one statement.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I have never objected to anything the gentleman ever did.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I merely desire to identify the author of the letter which my colleague from Missouri proposes to print in the RECORD. The man who wrote the letter is the Acting Chairman of the Public Utilities Commission. He is the public official to whom has been entrusted the oversight of the public utilities of the District of Columbia. And he is particularly charged with the duty of protecting the public from excessive rates and extortionate charges by the various utilities under his jurisdiction. And yet he published in a recent edition of a public-utilities magazine the best defense and apology for the high rates charged by the local telephone company that could have been written by their own attorneys.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the reason the people will not pay any attention to the letter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For construction, maintenance, operation, and repair of bridges, including maintenance of nonpassenger-carrying motor vehicles, $65,000.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Virginia: On page 17 strike out the words on lines 13, 14, and 15 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "For construction, maintenance, operation, and repair of bridges, and not to exceed $10,000 for surveys, engineering investigations, and preparation of structural and architectural plans for a new bridge to replace the present Chain Bridge over the Potomac River, near Little Falls, upon a site to be approved by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and including maintenance of nonpassenger-carrying motor vehicles, $75,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, it will be noted, increases this item from $65,000 to $75,000, which means an increase of $10,000, the purpose of which, as provided in the amendment, is to furnish funds for the necessary surveys and plans for a new Chain Bridge at Great Falls in the District of Columbia.

I hope the committee will not see fit to make any objection to this amendment in view of the circumstances connected with it. In the first place, the fund provided comes out of the gasoline tax of the District of Columbia, in which there is already a surplus. In the second place, the Commissioners of the District, recognizing the necessity for this preliminary survey for the location of this bridge, which must and will be built, have asked for this fund in a supplemental estimate from the Bureau of the Budget.

We have appeared before the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee and, after hearing this item and several other items, those gentlemen were, as usual, kind and courteous and interposed no objection, but they did not include the item in the bill. I think the reason they did not include it in the bill was that no estimate had come from the Budget Bureau on it. I went with the chairman of the Board of Commissioners to the Budget Bureau and they interposed no objection, but the fact is the item has not yet come from the Bureau of the Budget. I have reason to believe, however, that before the bill is reported from the Senate committee certain supplemental estimates, probably including this one, will be sent up by the Budget Bureau. I see no reason why it should not be put in this bill if there is no objection to it being put in by the Senate. Certainly, it is a much-needed work which must be done preliminary to the construction of a bridge that must be constructed. The present bridge is in a dangerous condition and has been for years. The gentlemen of the committee will probably recall that in the last month or so when ice was on the river and the river got high there was very grave danger that the bridge would be carried away, and with it would be carried the water mains conducting water over into Arlington County and serving some 30,000 people.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have made a reservation of a point of order so our friend would have the right to make his remarks. I now make the point of order that his amendment is unauthorized legislation. The point of order is good for this reason——

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that the amendment is legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill. The gasoline funds are available for any street or bridge improvement within the District of Columbia.

The law does not provide for building bridges for the use of Maryland and Virginia. This Chain Bridge is not a bridge within the District of Columbia. It is a bridge that primarily was for the benefit of the people of the State of Maryland and the State of Virginia. Its western embankment, where one abutment of the bridge will be, is in the State of Virginia, and I make the point of order that it is legislation on an appropriation bill not authorized by law. While this amendment will spend only $10,000, it will later on, if we pass it now, force the Government to spend another $1,500,000 at least.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition on the point of order.

In reply to the statement of my good friend from Texas, that this bridge is in the State of Virginia, I am very sorry that his facts are not correct.

There has been a controversy ever since this country was inhabited by white folks as to whether the Potomac River is in Virginia or in Maryland. It has been decided, I think, beyond controversy that certainly the river itself is wholly within the District of Columbia and in Maryland.

Mr. BLANTON. I said the western bank of it is in Virginia, and that one abutment of the bridge would be in Virginia.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. The abutment, of course, would be in Virginia.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; the western abutment would be in the State of Virginia.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. But the bridge is going to be in the District of Columbia, just like all the other bridges built by this Congress, including the Memorial Bridge and the Highway Bridge and the Key Bridge.

Mr. BLANTON. They were built as a result of legislation authorizing their construction.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Of course, they have an abutment on the Virginia side of the river, but the bridges themselves are in the District of Columbia, and the same thing is true with respect to this bridge.

I respectfully submit that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. BLANTON. I insist, Mr. Chairman, on my point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Virginia cite the Chair to any authorization for the building of this bridge?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. This is not an authorization to build the bridge, but an authorization of an appropriation to make the necessary surveys, and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any authorization for an appropriation for this specific purpose?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. No, sir; I have not any in mind.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lighting: For purchase, installation, and maintenance of public lamps, lampposts, street designations, lanterns, and fixtures of all kinds on streets, avenues, roads, alleys, and public spaces, part cost of maintenance of airport and airway lights necessary for operation of the air mail, and for all necessary expenses in connection therewith, including rental of storerooms, extra labor, operation, maintenance, and repair of motor trucks, this sum to be expended in accordance with the provisions of sections 7 and 8 of the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1912 (36 Stat., pp. 1008–1011, sec. 7), and with the provisions of the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1913 (37 Stat., pp. 181–184, sec. 7), and other laws applicable thereto, and including not to exceed $27,000 for operation and maintenance of electric traffic lights, signals, and controls, $700,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for the payment of rates for electric street lighting in excess of those authorized to be paid in the fiscal year 1927, and payment for electric current for new forms of street lighting shall not exceed 2 cents per kilowatt-hour for current consumed: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the payment on any contract required by law to be awarded through competitive bidding, which is not awarded to the lowest responsible bidder on specifications, and such specifications shall be so drawn as to admit of fair competition.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 2, after the word "controlled", strike out the figures "$700,000" and insert "$837,400."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to make a suggestion that this is for street lights. I suggest the amount of $837,400 as provided for in the Budget estimate.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance and instruction of blind children of the District of Columbia, in Maryland, or some other State, under a contract to be entered into by the Commissioners, $10,000: Provided, That all expenditures under this appropriation shall be made under the supervision of the Board of Education.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, after line 24, insert the following: "Hereafter each blind person shall be entitled to receive each year for one dog owned or kept by him a tax tag as required by law, without payment of any tax or fee."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, while I am deeply sympathetic with every blind person and should like to see all of them have this privilege, we must protect this appropriation bill from legislative items; hence I make a point of order that that is legislation on an appropriation bill, and not authorized by law. The first word "hereafter" makes it legislation.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. I simply want to say that there are a number of blind people in the District who have to be led around by a dog, and they ought not to pay a tax.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly, that is true, and if the gentleman will go to the Legislative Committee, of which the lady from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] is chairman, he should have no trouble in getting his proposal approved. But this is not a legislative committee, it is an appropriating committee, and this is an appropriation bill.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. The gentleman from Texas has been here many years. I do not see why he has not got these blind people exempt from paying a dog tax. I am a new Member of the committee, but according to my idea they ought not to pay a tax.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DITTER: Page 31, line 23, after the word "miscellaneous", add a new paragraph to read as follows:

"For aid in the education of children (between the ages of 16 and 21 years, inclusive, who have had their domicile in the District of Columbia for at least 5 years) of those who lost their lives during the World War as a result of service in the military or naval forces of the United States, including tuition, fees, maintenance, and the purchase of books and supplies, $3,600: Provided, That not more than $200 shall be available for any one child during the fiscal year 1935: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be expended for such children while attending educational institutions of a secondary or college grade under rules and regulations prescribed by the Board of Education."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is out of order in that it embraces legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill, and it is a change of existing law and of the present school regulations of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, as a matter of expedition, I am glad to submit the decision to the Chair.

Mr. BLANTON. I insist, Mr. Chairman, on my point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is clearly subject to a point of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fuel, gas, and electric light and power, $225,000.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DE PRIEST: Page 32, line 12, after the figures "$225,000", insert a new paragraph as follows: "For the necessary reequipping, including repair and refinishing of suitable existing equipment, of the Shaw Junior High School, $15,000."

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Chairman, I am in hopes that the Committee will accept this amendment. It is for the appropriation of a meager sum to reequip the school on Rhode Island Avenue between Seventh and Eighth Streets. The furniture there has been in existence for about 31 years. It is completely dilapidated, and I hope the chairman will accept the amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the practice of the House does not permit the Member in charge of a bill to accept amendments without authorization of the committee. He is in duty bound to protect the bill at all stages of its consideration.

I will say in answer to the gentleman's suggestion that it is now the policy of the District to maintain a repair department. We provide them with all necessary parts and material and workmen, and they go from school to school repairing the furniture. For that reason we thought it unwise to make an exception in this one instance.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DITTER: Page 32, line 12, after the word "power", strike out "225,000" and insert in lieu thereof "250,000."

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to be heard upon this amendment. It simply reinstates the amount of the Budget estimate, and in my opinion the District schools will require this amount for fuel, light, and heat.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced himself in doubt.

The Committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 24.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs and improvements to school buildings, repairing and renewing heating, plumbing, and ventilating apparatus, installation and repair of electric equipment, and installation of sanitary drinking fountains, and maintenance of motor trucks, $375,000, of which amount $100,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to get some information. Lines 3 to 7, on page 34, exempt the children of Army, Navy, and Marine Corps parents from paying tuition, but on the previous page we find the words:

That no part of the appropriation shall be available for the purchase of such books for the free use of nonresident pupils.

Does that mean that these children are exempted from tuition, but they have to pay for their books?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It means that all of those who live outside pay for their books. We give them free tuition. They should provide their own books. If we could eliminate these nonresident pupils who pay no taxes, it would greatly reduce the congestion of the schools and the expense of operation. They certainly cannot with good grace ask the taxpayers of the District to donate also their textbooks.

Mr. GOSS. Of course, the gentleman is aware of the fact that in many of the Army posts we have schools for these children. To give them free tuition here and charge them for books looks like a silly thing to me, with all the bookkeeping involved, and finding out who these children are, and so on. I do not see why they are not exempted from the cost of books as long as they are exempted from the payment of tuition.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. If they were the only children involved, that might be true; but when you take into consideration the children from Maryland and Virginia——

Mr. GOSS. Are they exempted from the payment of tuition?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes. All we ask is that they pay for their books.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $568,000, to be immediately available and to be disbursed and accounted for as "Buildings and ground, public schools", and for that purpose shall constitute one fund and remain available until expended: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for or on account of any school building not herein specified.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEIDEMAN: Page 35, line 7, after the word "all", strike out "$568,000" and insert "$718,000", and after the word "specified" on line 12, page 35, insert the following: "except $150,000 to be used for the purchase of a site for the Jefferson Junior High School."

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is adopted, $150,000 will be added to the bill to cover a prior appropriation that lapsed in 1932, owing to the fact that it was not used to purchase land for the Jefferson Junior High School.

The Jefferson Junior High School is located in the southwest section of the city adjacent to a railroad switchyard. The building itself is about 62 years old. In 1908 it was condemned. And at that time it was recommended that it be not further used for school purposes.

The building is a U-shaped affair; and between the two main wings, space which normally would be used for a corridor is now used for classrooms, and to get from one part of the building to the other one has to go through the classrooms. The playroom of this school is only 20 by 40 feet in size and has to accommodate all these pupils in this junior high school. I have visited this school three times and have seen the effect of the railroad on the school. The windows cannot be opened in the summer because the soot gets in. The pupils cannot study there. The noise is unbearable, and classes are interrupted.

The $150,000 additional asked for will take care of the money necessary for the purchase of approximately 3 acres of land for this school. This amount was once provided, but owing to delay incident to two condemnation suits arising over this land, the appropriation lapsed.

I do not think the House of Representatives could do anything that would be more beneficial to that particular section of the District of Columbia. The school auditorium is on the third floor. The floor bends when one walks across it. I have been in the room; it is not in a good condition. I do not think the addition of this item would harm the bill very much, and I hope the committee can see its way clear to accept this amendment. I feel that it is for a good cause, and it merely makes again available the amount which once before was appropriated for this purpose, but which lapsed because of the facts I have stated.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Has somebody spoken to the gentleman about this item? Who got the gentleman interested in this item?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Oh, the citizens' association, parents of children, and so forth, in that district; and in addition I went to all the schools in the District for the purpose of seeing the conditions. The condition of this school is particularly offensive. It is just across the street from a major switching operation of the railroad. We as Democrats should not let this kind of monument to Thomas Jefferson stand over there. It was said yesterday that we have not a memorial to Thomas Jefferson in the District of Columbia. I do not think any more fitting memorial could be erected to his memory or one more in keeping with his ideals for the youth of this country than a modern school building. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, no Budget estimate for this school was submitted to the committee. We were therefore not in a position to pass on it. I may say, however, that the gentleman's criticism is not well founded. We have one of the finest school plants to be found in the United States, if not in the world. In the last 10 years we have spent more money per capita on school construction than any other city in the United States. Detroit is the great city in the gentleman's State, and it is a model municipality. And yet in the last 10 years they spent only $16 per capita for school construction, while here in Washington we spent $44 per capita. In other words, for every $16 spent by the people of Detroit in school construction we spent $44 in Washington. The gentleman's suggestion that we are not maintaining school construction is not borne out by the facts.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. We know how to spend our money; we get more for the dollar.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. One of the prime purposes of this bill is to give the taxpayers of the District 100 cents on the dollar for their expenditures. So far as the present item is concerned, the committee did not feel warranted in providing for construction not endorsed by the Budget Bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WEIDEMAN) there were—ayes 8, noes 20.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

METROPOLITAN POLICE

SALARIES

For the pay and allowances of officers and members of the Metropolitan Police Force, in accordance with the act entitled "An act to fix the salaries of the Metropolitan Police Force, the United States Park Police Force, and the fire department of the District of Columbia" (43 Stat., pp. 174–175), as amended by the act of July 1, 1930 (46 Stat., pp. 839–841), including compensation at the rate of $2,100 per annum for the present assistant property clerk of the police department, $2,790,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the salary of more than one assistant superintendent.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CANNON of Missouri: Page 37, line 14, after "$2,790,000", strike out the colon and the rest of line 14 and all of lines 15 and 16 down to and including the word "superintendent."

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, may we have some information as to the effect of this amendment?

Mr. BLANTON. The language stricken out would have been subject to a point of order anyway, being in the nature of legislation.

Mr. GOSS. The gentleman does not want more than one assistant superintendent?

Mr. BLANTON. We are merely leaving the present law as it is now.

Mr. GOSS. What does the existing law provide?

Mr. BLANTON. It provides for this very officer whose position we started to strike out.

Mr. GOSS. The language reads:

That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the salary of more than one assistant superintendent.

What is the existing law?

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. The situation is this: There is but one assistant superintendent as such now. However, my information is that one other official of the police department is now receiving the pay of an assistant superintendent. Whether or not the clause in question could affect such official I am not prepared to say. I think this matter should be given further study.

Mr. BLANTON. We thought perhaps we had made a mistake.

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. The striking out of the language does not add one dime to the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs to apparatus, motor vehicles, and other motor-driven apparatus, fire boat and for new apparatus, new motor vehicles, new appliances, employment of mechanics, helpers, and laborers in the fire department repair shop, and for the purchase of necessary supplies, materials, equipment, and tools, $42,217: Provided, That the Commissioners are authorized, in their discretion, to build or construct, in whole or in part, fire-fighting apparatus in the fire department repair shop.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the proviso. Does that mean that the Commissioners are authorized to build or construct, in whole or in part, all kinds of fire-fighting apparatus? Does that permit the repairmen therein to buy all sorts of parts and assemble an automobile, whether it be of an approved type or not?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. This is merely a precautionary provision.

Mr. GOSS. What is the idea of the proviso?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. If we can construct it cheaper than we can buy it, then it will be constructed by the District.

Mr. GOSS. You will construct a fire-fighting apparatus. Does it have to be of an approved type already in existence?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. If we can buy it cheaper, we will buy the apparatus.

Mr. GOSS. Regardless of the efficiency of the apparatus?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. They must always be of equal efficiency.

Mr. GOSS. I know that. We have a certain number of types of fire apparatus and trucks, like the La France and various others, on the market. If this language remains in the bill, it will permit the repair shops to build any improvised type of fire apparatus. May I ask what the object of the language is? I can see the reason for the repair part of it, but for the District Government to go into the automobile-assembling business seems to me ridiculous.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman is not familiar with the appropriation bills. For many years a similar provision has been carried in the other supply bills. A similar provision is made, for example, for the Navy and the Army.

Mr. GOSS. The Army and Navy where?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. In the Army and Navy appropriation bills.

Mr. GOSS. Where do they construct their fire-fighting apparatus?

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. All, or practically all, of the fire engines used by the Army are built at the depot at Holabird, Md.

Mr. GOSS. The ones for the Army posts?

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Yes; they build magnificent trucks.

Mr. GOSS. But those are only for Army posts?

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. They find they can repair and build them by utilizing war-time equipment as much as practicable and save considerable money.

Mr. GOSS. They can rebuild and repair without this proviso's being in the bill.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. This is just a precautionary proviso which is included in all these bills.

Mr. GOSS. What is it put in there for? In case you get a bid that is too high you can have this threat over them?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Bidders who otherwise might be tempted to submit collusive bids know we can avail ourselves of this provision if prices are too high, and we are insured competitive bids and the lowest market price.

Mr. GOSS. Are we using that as a policy or just as a protection to the District?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Merely for use in an emergency. As a matter of fact it has never been necessary to invoke the right conferred by the provision.

Mr. GOSS. I am perfectly willing to withdraw my point of order on that basis, but I should hate to see this adopted as a policy, I will say to the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses, furniture, fixtures, oil, blacksmithing, gas and electric lighting, flags and halyards, medals of award, and other necessary items, $20,000.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DITTER: Page 41, line 14, after the figures "$20,000", insert a new paragraph, as follows: "For 3 combination hose wagons and 1 pumping engine, triple combination, all motor driven; in all, $30,000."

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain the Committee other than to make the observation that this $30,000 is for the purpose of providing new equipment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Does the gentleman propose to debate this amendment?

Mr. DITTER. No. I am simply making the statement as to the purpose of the amendment, which is to provide for new equipment.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUPREME COURT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Salaries: For the chief justice, 8 associate justices, 9 stenographers (1 for the chief justice and 1 for each associate justice), and other personal services, $112,000.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CANNON of Missouri: Page 47, line 25, strike out "$112,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$125,575."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered for the purpose of remedying an error occasioned by a misapprehension upon the part of the committee, due to an erroneous impression inadvertently given us by the witnesses. The auditor of the District, Chief Justice Wheat, of the District Supreme Court, and the secretary representing the Supreme Court, informed us that this increase was merely a salary restoration item. It developed subsequently that it was due to the decision by the Supreme Court exempting the District court salaries from the operation of the Economy Act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For board and care of all children committed to the guardianship of said board by the courts of the District, and for temporary care of children pending investigation or while being transferred from place to place, with authority to pay not more than $1,500 each to institutions under sectarian control and not more than $400 for burial of children dying while under charge of the board, $230,000.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DITTER: Page 51, line 21, after the word "board", strike out "$230,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$270,000."

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, this is the sum that is provided in the Budget estimate, and I believe the conditions which the welfare organizations face warrant and demand the increase I have suggested.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. GOSS. May I ask a question in reference to the $400 allowance for the burial of children? May I say to the gentleman that in some of the appropriation bills we are trying to bury veterans of the United States for $75, which includes a complete funeral? This does not give them as good a funeral as the ordinary pauper would have. What does this item allow for each funeral for these children; can the gentleman tell us?

Mr. DITTER. The amount provided is $400.

Mr. GOSS. For the whole business?

Mr. DITTER. No; for each individual burial.

Mr. GOSS. For each individual burial there is allowed $400?

Mr. DITTER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. No. That is not correct.

Mr. GOSS. I am trying to find out.

Mr. DITTER. Four hundred dollars in all for children who are wards of the District.

Mr. GOSS. I want to find out how much is allowed for each individual burial on the average?

Mr. DITTER. There is no restriction.

Mr. GOSS. But there is a restriction here to not more than $400. Maybe it is ample and maybe it is not.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The amount provided is more than ample. We have always had a surplus at the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. GOSS. What is allowed for each individual burial?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It is sufficient. There have been no complaints as to the amount or the service provided.

Mr. GOSS. I think we ought to get the information. In the independent offices appropriation bill the burial expense was cut down to $75 a person so far as concerned the veterans.

Mr. BLANTON. The $400 is not for one funeral. It is the total. It is the same as the regular Government funeral which comes within that provision.

Mr. GOSS. The $75?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. The Government has established a regular rule, and I think this is embraced in the rule, and the Government gets the same kind of a funeral for $75 that some people get for double that sum.

Mr. GOSS. I see the gentleman here from South Carolina, and he is interested in the matter. We had testimony come before us that they could not even bury these veterans for $75.

I have had $75 cases in my district, I will say to the gentleman, where the body was not even embalmed and the casket was falling apart, and, as I recall it, this amount was built up at one time from $75 to $100.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman know what the Government gets for $75?

Mr. GOSS. We get very little, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I admit the amount is too small; but the Government gets the body embalmed——

Mr. GOSS. Maybe, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. No, it is embalmed; and it gets a burial suit of clothes, a shroud, a coffin that has what are called "standard handles", not the handles that break off, but standard handles that are secure in every way, and the usual burial box.

Mr. GOSS. I am sure the paupers in the gentleman's district are treated better than the ones who are provided for under this provision of $75.

Mr. BLANTON. Unfortunately, I do not think they are.

Mr. GOSS. They are in my home town, and I hope the Government sometime will provide these children, as well as the veterans, a decent burial.

Mr. BLANTON. I am in favor of granting more, and I am in favor of granting our veterans more, but this is what the Government has been doing for years.

Mr. GOSS. We had it at $100 until this Executive order was issued cutting down the amount. I hope the President will change that order and restore the amount to $100.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I will say to the gentleman from Connecticut that, fortunately, we have very few deaths to be cared for under this item. This provision has always been found ample, and we have had a surplus. There has never been any complaint whatever about the manner in which this has been administered.

Mr. GOSS. I hope the committee will look into the matter like we did with regard to veterans.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

REWARD OF $25,000 FOR CRIMINALS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

We have just read the paragraph relating to pursuing escaped convicts and rewards for their recapture in the District of Columbia.

I would like to have permission to insert in the RECORD, Mr. Chairman, a copy of a bill which I have introduced along this line. It was suggested to me by a constituent, Mr. C. C. Crump, of De Kalb, Tex., a gentleman who has served on grand juries and knows much about criminals.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

H.R. 9133

A bill to appropriate money to facilitate the apprehension of certain persons charged with crime

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as a reward or rewards for the capture, dead or alive, of anyone who is charged with violation of criminal laws of the United States or of more than one State or of the District of Columbia who is designated by the Attorney General of the United States as a public enemy, the sum of $25,000 to be apportioned and expended in the discretion of, and upon such conditions as may be imposed by, the Attorney General of the United States. That there is also hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as a reward or rewards for information leading to the arrest of any such person who has been designated by the Attorney General of the United States as a public enemy the sum of $25,000 to be apportioned and expended in the discretion of, and upon such conditions as may be imposed by, the Attorney General of the United States: Provided, That not more than $25,000 shall be expended for information or capture of any one person.

If the said persons or any of them shall be killed in resisting lawful arrest, the Attorney General may pay any part of the reward or rewards in his discretion to the person or persons whom he shall adjudge to be entitled thereto: Provided, That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any official or employee of the Department of Justice of the United States.

NEGLIGENCE OF ANOTHER OFFICER

Mr. PATMAN. This bill provides that the Attorney General of the United States may pay up to $25,000 for the arrest, dead or alive, of anyone whom he has designated as a public enemy. Most of these criminals are at large by reason of the negligence of some officer.

I cannot see why the local peace officers should unduly run the risk of their lives to apprehend these criminals when they know it is a life-or-death proposition, when the criminals have not violated any law in their jurisdiction and are at liberty by reason of the negligence of some other officer. For instance, take this man Clyde Barrow, who is going around over the country killing various people, or "Pretty Boy" Floyd down in Oklahoma, Texas, and Arkansas, and other States, or this man Dillinger—all of them are out by reason of the negligence of some other officer.

If the United States Government will offer a proper and a suitable reward for the apprehension of these criminals, dead or alive, then these local peace officers will go to work and try to find them. They will try to capture them. They will be captured in 3 days' time.

REWARD FOR INFORMATION

The Attorney General under this bill will have permission to use a part of this money for securing information. A reward for information may be paid in addition to paying a reward for their capture dead or alive.

One of these criminals at one time had 80 Department of Justice agents after him. Think of this tremendous expense, whereas if we just had one good-sized reward for him local peace officers and local people where they are located would pick him up very quickly and save the Government a lot of money. Their associates will give them up for a good reward. You would receive the cooperation and assistance and sympathy of all the local peace officers.

PEACE OFFICERS OUR HEROES IN TIME OF PEACE

As it is now there is not much incentive for a local peace officer to run the risk of his life in order to capture some criminal who is at liberty by reason of the gross negligence of some other peace officer in some other section of the country. I have never known more patriotic, unselfish, daring, and useful citizens than the constables, rangers, deputy sheriffs, sheriffs, and other peace officers of this country. I have served with them, been guarded and protected by them when I was a district attorney in Texas and know something about their nerve, courage, and devotion to duty. Too little is said and too little is known about the great contribution the peace officers of this country make toward organized society and government. It is not unusual for one of them to give up his life without a murmur in performance of his duty, and about whom little will be said and a very few lines written. They are our heroes in time of peace.

I asked for this time in order to call this to your attention and I am hoping this bill will receive the approval of the Judiciary Committee and will become a law.

Mr. HENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. HENNEY. Is the Attorney General asking for this legislation?

Mr. PATMAN. I am not authorized to quote the Attorney General, I will say to the gentleman, but I am quite sure the Attorney General will not oppose the legislation.

Mr. HENNEY. I am very much in sympathy with it myself, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. PATMAN. I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries: For personal services, $68,823.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 53, line 8, strike out the figures "$58,823" and insert in lieu thereof "$77,823."

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, this amendment which I have offered increases the appropriation for the District jail by $9,000 in order to eliminate the 7-day week which the employees of the jail are now forced to work.

The $9,000 will provide 4 additional guards at $1,500 per annum, 1 additional assistant engineer at $1,630 per annum, and 1 additional matron at $1,320 per annum.

Rather extensive information concerning this matter can be found on pages 701 to 718 of the hearings of the subcommittee.

When I first came to Washington as a Member of Congress my interest was immediately challenged by conditions under which certain employees of the District of Columbia were forced to work. You will recall the system which was then in effect with respect to the firemen in the District of Columbia. That, I am happy to say, has been given rather serious attention, and there are two other items which I would like to ask the indulgence of the committee to discuss very briefly this afternoon.

We all realize, of course, that the correction of these situations in the District of Columbia can be of very slight import, if they have any importance at all, in our relationships with our constituents back home, who are, of course, unfamiliar with specific conditions here in the Nation's Capital. I have, however, taken my assignment as a member of the District of Columbia Committee seriously, and whatever may be the outcome of my efforts this afternoon, I do feel that it is my duty to call to your attention very briefly these matters for which we are responsible.

The District of Columbia jail and its operation are discussed by Mr. Thomas M. Reeves, its superintendent, on pages 474–478 of the hearings. These pertinent statements are made by the superintendent:

Under present conditions it is necessary to employ prisoner help on types of work which it would be advisable for them not to handle. * * * The first 6 months of the fiscal year 1934 showed a marked increase in the commitments. * * * Recommendations showing the need for additional guards have been frequently made without favorable results. * * * The number of guards on duty in this institution is such that all are required to work regularly 7 days a week; they are allowed time off only for a limited space of time. * * * The proper performance of duties of guard personnel requires strictest attention to duty; they must be constantly vigilant and on the alert. Having to work under such conditions, it is difficult for them to maintain the necessary standard of efficiency without having 1 day a week off, as they should have.

In the face of these statements, Mr. Reeves also made the following statement:

The fact that additional employees are not requested is no indication that more employees are not needed.

No one can advance a single reason why workers for the District of Columbia government should be required to work every day without any day of rest and without a reasonable opportunity to absent themselves for even limited periods. The new deal certainly should hold forth some encouragement for these men.

The employees at the jail, organized in the American Federation of Government Employees, have respectfully petitioned for a day of rest a week. They are not asking anything excessive and their plea must arouse sympathy in the heart of any person who gives it the time to consider it.

I ask you now to stop a moment and consider this situation. Here are men and women required to work every day without any stop. What can be their home life? What can be their participation in the good things of life? Theirs is a fate very little better than the fate of the delinquents who are sent to the jail. After all, are not these people behind the bars, too? Are not they behind the bars every day? These men and women should have an opportunity to get out into the sunlight. We might forget for a moment the guards themselves and think of the effects of this system on the people sent to the jail for correction. It is my own belief that society at large would profit by having the guards and other people working in the jail conscious of the fact that we up here have not forgotten them, that we have not consigned them to a humdrum day in and day out everyday contact with prisoners, that we regard them as people. Let us not forget that these are our employees in a sense. Let us not forget that we owe them a responsibility. They have no voice or vote. No one can be said to represent them any place on this floor.

It may be said by opponents that it is the custom in jails in certain parts of the country to require that the guards actually live all the time in jails and work 7 days a week. While it is true that this is done in many places, we cannot clear our consciences by following such an example.

In the final analysis, what is involved? Just $9,000; $9,000 which the people of Washington will pay in taxation; $9,000 which will give all of the people at the jail 1 day a week in which to live as free citizens.

Just a few days ago we very proudly voted to put more than 50,000 of the Government's employees on a 5-day week. These were employees living out in the States. Today I am asking you to place a few politically unimportant employees, whose lives are confined behind bars for our service, on a 6-day week.

Every righteous instinct in me makes me plead with you to grant this small measure of justice and make this change and adopt this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, we have provided in the bill the full Budget estimate. We gave them every dollar they asked, and I regret that I must oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the lady from Indiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For personal services, $280,000.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 53, line 18, strike out the figures "$280,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$324,000."

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this amendment relates to the pay of the personnel at Lorton Reformatory. The purpose of the amendment is to restore the amount which, I understand, was approved by the Budget Committee, $324,000.

I made some observations on yesterday with respect to the conditions at the Lorton Reformatory. I want the committee to realize that you have down there approximately 2,000 prisoners, sent there from the District of Columbia, convicted of every offense from bootlegging to murder—all kinds of criminals.

There is no jail there. There is no wall around the place. There is no method of confining the prisoners, except with the use of guards put there for that purpose.

I want the committee to know, so they may vote deliberately on the amendment, what the result of voting down this amendment will be. It will require the discharge of 20 of the prison guards that are there now. It means that they will be discharged unless the Senate—which I think it will do—restores the increase allowed by the Budget.

Now, I have two other amendments which will follow immediately. One of them is in line with this. There is a wall partly completed at this reformatory. I will offer the amendment at the proper time for a sufficient amount of money to complete the wall. I hope the committee will realize that conditions at that institution are dangerous to the public, because the prisoners are not adequately guarded.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, we provided the same amount for next year that we are spending this year. We are giving them every dollar next year that we gave this year. We are not reducing the appropriation. We have had one of the most strenuous years down there that we may reasonably expect to have in the next 50 years to come, and if this amount has been sufficient for this year it will certainly be sufficient for the next year.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance, care, and support of inmates, rewards for fugitives, discharge gratuities provided by law, medical supplies, newspapers, books, books of reference, and periodicals, farm implements, tools, equipment, transportation expenses, purchase and maintenance of livestock and horses, purchase, exchange, maintenance, operation, and repair of nonpassenger-carrying vehicles and motor bus; fuel for heating, lighting, and power, and all other necessary items, $320,000.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Virginia: Page 54, line 3, strike out "$320,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$378,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SMITH of Virginia: Page 54, line 4, strike out the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For continuing construction of walled inclosure, permanent buildings therein, and other permanent buildings, including sewers, water mains, roads, and other necessary utilities, and for equipment for new buildings, $402,800."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For provisions, fuel, forage, harness, and vehicles, and repairs to same, gas, ice, shoes, clothing, dry goods, tailoring, drugs and medical supplies, furniture and bedding, kitchen utensils, medical books, books of reference, and periodicals, not to exceed $200, temporary services not to exceed $1,000, maintenance of motor truck, and other necessary items, $60,000.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. NORTON: Page 57, line 15, strike out "$60,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$63,744."

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take much time of the committee. This will restore the original amount of $63,744. I addressed the House yesterday upon the great necessity for many items in this tuberculosis hospital which have been neglected, and I sincerely hope the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the lady's amendment, it refers to the personal-service item.

Mrs. NORTON. No; it is on page 57, line 15, striking out $60,000 and inserting in lieu thereof $63,744. It merely restores the original amount.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. But $60,000 is the full Budget estimate.

Mrs. NORTON. Is it not true that $63,744 was the amount in the bill last year?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. No.

Mrs. NORTON. That was my understanding.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentlewoman from New Jersey has confused that with the item for personal services. The $60,000 on line 15 is the full Budget estimate. We gave them every dollar they asked.

Mrs. NORTON. I understood it was that item. I am glad to have the gentleman correct me. My amendment refers to line 8, page 57.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am very sorry, but we have already passed that item.

Mrs. NORTON. My understanding was that we were on that item.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. No; this $60,000 is the full Budget estimate.

Mr. BLANTON. The personal service estimate is on line 8.

Mr. KELLER. It is in the same section, is it not?

Mr. BLANTON. But we are reading the bill by paragraphs. That is the rule respecting all appropriation bills.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment and ask unanimous consent to return to line 8, page 57, for the purpose of offering the amendment at that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to return to line 8, page 57. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry, but we must pass along with the bill. I object.

Mr. KELLER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the $60,000 if the gentlewoman from New Jersey does not and I offer the amendment now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KELLER: Page 57, line 15, strike out "$60,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$63,744."

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard upon that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I got in a little bit late. It seems to me that when the Chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia asks to go back to line 8 we ought to go there. I see no justification for making objections like that. It seems to me that out of decency to the lady and other people interested in this House we ought to go back to line 8, and I should like to ask whether the gentleman is not willing to do that.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, we have here a bill consisting of 78 pages which we must read and pass today. It is the business of the Nation. We are operating under certain rules and regulations, and this item of $60,000 is the full Budget estimate——

Mr. KELLER. I understand that.

Mr. BLANTON. And we cannot waste time to return to paragraphs already passed.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield.

Mrs. NORTON. Does the gentleman think it quite fair to pass an appropriation bill of this size with only 28 Members on the floor? Does the gentleman think this the proper method of transacting the business of the Nation?

Mr. KELLER. We will just call them in if they are not here.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, this House has been doing that for 18 years, ever since I have been here.

Mrs. NORTON. It is the first time that I have ever seen such discourtesy shown a Member.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I have seen this House pass two-billion-dollar bills with not many more Members present.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman wants to interrupt the public business, all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. KELLER (interrupting the count). Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order that there is no quorum present and shall continue my time. I want to say that the lady is quite right in saying that this is a piece of discourtesy, and any man ought to be ashamed of it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to have the gentleman lecture me. The philosopher can lecture himself but not me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will desist. Gentlemen in debate will please not refer to others in offensive language.

Mr. BLANTON. Let him be decent, then.

Mr. KELLER. Be what?

Mr. BLANTON. Be decent.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen should first address the Chair. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed in order.

Mr. KELLER. I have never heard of a thing like that being done before; and I hope I never hear it done again. We have under consideration a bill of the utmost importance; the people suffering in this city. To pass this bill a few minutes quicker ought not to be more important than the consideration of a proposal to prevent suffering. We are transacting the Nation's business today and we ought to do it right. We should not transact it by refusing to return to the preceding section; and we should treat one another courteously.

In this instance we are cutting out something like $3,000. If you will question a single one of the physicians in this House, Dr. LARRABEE, Dr. HENNEY, Dr. SIROVICH, or any of the others, he will tell you that to compel one nurse to take care of 34 patients is a disgrace.

Mr. Chairman, we ought to go back to line 8; and I hope the chairman of the subcommittee will permit that to be done and give the committee an opportunity to say whether it will accept or reject the amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. We are not eliminating any employees; that is an entirely new item. And these are new employees. No additional appropriation was included in the Budget estimate.

Mr. KELLER. It was included in the Budget, according to my recollection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The Budget estimate was $60,000, and we provided $60,000.

Mr. KELLER. But I am referring to line 8. That amount originally was $80,000.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That relates entirely to new employees who have never been on the rolls.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield.

Mrs. NORTON. There is very grave need for new employees. They are greatly undermanned in that hospital. It is pathetic to see the neglect these patients are obliged to endure purely because of the undermanning of the hospital staff.

Mr. KELLER. I thank the lady for her contribution. I think it is a shame to pass bills in this way; and I am ashamed to see it done.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

GALLINGER MUNICIPAL HOSPITAL

Salaries: For personal services, including not to exceed $2,000 for temporary labor, $323,928.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana: Page 58, line 7, strike out "$323,928" and insert in lieu thereof "$372,528."

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, this amendment increases the appropriation for the Gallinger Hospital by $48,600. It will provide 10 additional graduate nurses at $1,620 per annum, and 30 additional attendants at $1,080 per annum gross salary.

Members of the committee are respectively referred to pages 510–517 and pages 701–718 of the committee hearings, where the needs for these additional employees are discussed by the Superintendent of Gallinger Hospital, Dr. Edgar A. Bocock, and the president of the American Federation of Government Employees.

The official testimony shows that the patient load has increased from 167 in 1923 to 662 in 1934. This is the daily average.

The committee, in its report and in the pending bill, has made provision for an increase in the personnel at the hospital. This increase consists of 31 additional employees, 20 of whom are to be student nurses, 4 internes, 4 attendants, 2 graduate nurses, and 1 associate medical officer.

This increase was accorded in order to partially accommodate for the increased number of patients.

My amendment has for a purpose an amelioration of the condition at the hospital.

The growth of the patient load has been extraordinary. The increase in personnel has been insufficient to take care of that increased load without resorting to hospital hours which are downright cruel.

If you passed my amendment, you will permit the hospital to go on an 8-hour day. It is now on a 12-hour-day basis.

The nursing profession is one which is exceedingly trying. We have come to look on our nurse when we are really ill as an intimate and personal helper; one who is safeguarding us against the evils which we often do not even realize.

The profession at large has been retained on the highest ethical basis. It is not unusual for nurses to work hours which for any other person would be considered as nervous-breakdown hours and they do not complain. I think it can be said that throughout the Nation the nursing profession has never received the attention which it merits, and I believe that this is true because nurses have been so unselfishly taking care of the rest of us that they have not taken the time to think of themselves. This very factor makes it our duty to think of them.

I do not believe that we should pay any attention to an objection to this amendment based on the false theory that it is the custom to work nurses 12 hours a day.

I suppose that some of you are familiar with the work being done at Gallinger Hospital in our Nation's Capital. It includes for the nurses and ward attendants some of the most difficult work that falls to the lot of hospital workers. Without desiring to reflect in any way upon anyone, I must not fail to call to your attention the fact that the nurses and attendants at the hospital are called on to handle cases of mental disabilities and cases of moral disintegration. I do not mean that this is all that is done at Gallinger Hospital, but it is true that it is a part of the load and it is the part of the load which is particularly nerve wracking. If you have spent any time in the inspection of hospitals where nervous patients are treated, as I have done, I am sure you will agree with me that 12 hours a day is too long for a nurse or an attendant to carry these responsibilities.

My individual contacts with individual nurses at Gallinger Hospital convinced me that we are not giving them a fair deal. I do not believe that there are many Members of this body who would be willing to vote against my amendment after spending just 1 hour within the walls of the Gallinger Municipal Hospital.

I have not time now, but I hope you will stop and think yourself of the effects, particularly on women employees, of a daily 12-hour tour of duty in relationship to their homes. We must not adopt the attitude that nurses are not entitled to homes. We must go ahead until they have a reasonable benefit from life. The new deal promised that, and I hope the new deal will heed the appeal of these forgotten men and forgotten women.

Some of the members of the committee may think that $48,600 is a large sum. I should like to have you think of that sum, not so much in terms of pennies as in terms of human lives and human values.

The nurses and attendants need a reduction from the 12-hour basis. The patients, our wards, need a reduction of the 12-hour day for their nurses and attendants. Better care of the sick, a higher humane attitude, simple human compassion, all speak to you in favor of my amendment. The amendment will permit placing the hospital on an 8-hour basis. I personally believe that this is still too high, but I ask you to go at least this far. Now, if you do so you will not be doing it for votes. You will be doing it because it is the right thing to do. When we are thinking in terms of ameliorations of buildings and building construction, let me ask you to think for just a moment in terms of these people. People who are giving their lives for the satisfaction of doing this job, this social job, and who are paid low wages and carry on, and who will continue to carry on in spite of what you may do to my amendment. These nurses are now being paid $28.03 per week after years of preparation to serve us. We are requiring them to take care of mentally sick people for 12 hours every day.

In the name of the new deal I am asking you to adopt this amendment and reduce their hours to 8 a day.

It seems to me that this is worthy of consideration by the House: The nurses there are worked 12 hours a day in many cases; and to my knowledge the families of some of these nurses take eggs and milk into those women who are giving their lives that the babies coming into the world may have a better start.

In this hospital one nurse was responsible for 27 maternity cases. In other words, one nurse had to take care of 27 beds, 27 bassinettes, and give 54 baths a day.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. Did I understand the gentlewoman correctly to say that this one nurse was responsible for the care of 27 mothers and 27 infants?

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Investigation was made this year and that was the report.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, we gave Gallinger this year 31 additional employees. We have given Gallinger Hospital in this bill the greatest number of employees, the largest staff, and the largest appropriation in the history of the institution. It is rendering exceptional service and is entitled to these added facilities.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mrs. NORTON) there were—ayes 12, noes 25.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

EMERGENCY RELIEF

For the purpose of affording relief to residents of the District of Columbia who are unemployed or otherwise in distress because of the existing emergency, to be expended by the Board of Public Welfare of the District of Columbia by employment and/or direct relief, in the discretion of the Board of Commissioners and under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Board and without regard to the provisions of any other law, payable from the revenues of the District of Columbia, $1,300,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That not to exceed 8 percent of such amount shall be available for administrative expenses, including necessary personal services.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the chairman of the subcommittee inform us whether this amount is for the full fiscal year or for a 6 months' period? As I recall it, a year or two ago when this item was up the amount was double that carried in the pending bill, and, as I recall, there was some arrangement made that the relief was for a 3 months' period.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. This is the amount requested. Should there be any deficiency, a deficiency appropriation will be requested later.

Mr. GOSS. Was it not last year that we appropriated $2,000,000?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. This is the same amount we appropriated last year.

Mr. GOSS. But was that not for a 3 months' period only?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That was for the entire year. This is the same amount that was carried in the bill last year; the same amount covering the same period of time.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the Commissioners and other responsible officials, in expending appropriations contained in this act, so far as possible, shall purchase material, supplies, including food supplies and equipment, when needed and funds are available, in accordance with the regulations and schedules of the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department or from the various services of the Government of the United States possessing material, supplies, passenger-carrying, and other motor vehicles, and equipment no longer required. Surplus articles purchased from the Government, if the same have not been used, shall be paid for at a reasonable price, not to exceed actual cost, and if the same have been used, at a reasonable price based upon length of usage. The various services of the Government of the United States are authorized to sell such surplus articles to the municipal government under the conditions specified, and the proceeds of such sales shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts: Provided, That this section shall not be construed to amend, alter, or repeal the Executive order of December 3, 1918, concerning the transfer of office materials, supplies, and equipment in the District of Columbia falling into disuse because of the cessation of war activities.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the proviso on page 77, lines 5 to 9. What is the purpose of the proviso?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. There is an Executive order under which one department may transfer to another department material which is deteriorating, or which may become obsolete, or which may be better utilized by the other department. We desired to reserve that right.

Mr. GOSS. The gentleman is exempting it here?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes; in order not to interfere with its operation.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SEARS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H.R. 9061, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? [After a pause.] If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TENLEY SCHOOL

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, in supporting the bill which I introduced Tuesday authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to sell to the accredited agent of St. Ann's Parish in the District of Columbia the Tenley School on Wisconsin Avenue, I desire to put on record the following information:

On April 2, 1902, parcel 35/130 was sold by St. Ann's Parish to the District of Columbia through James Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop of Baltimore. On August 31, 1881, parcel 35/131 was sold to the District of Columbia by Mary J. Foertsch and her husband. Upon this property the District erected a public school, and this building, so erected, known as the "Tenley Public School", was used for that purpose until approximately 3 years ago, when a much larger and more commodious building was purchased and is known as the "Janney School."

When the Janney School was built the old Tenley School was entirely dismantled and abandoned. The heating and lighting apparatus were removed and in all likelihood sold by the District of Columbia. It had no custodian, and the boys in the neighborhood practically romped through it at random. Every windowpane in the building was smashed. It was practically worthless, and eventually the Commissioners were advised by the Board of Education that—

It had no further use for the Tenley School building; that it was without a heating apparatus and that it could not be reasonably put into condition for school purposes without the expenditure of more money than seems justified.

As reported in a letter from Mr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, on April 5, 1933, to the Board of Education and now on file in its archives.

The board, according to Dr. Ballou, thereupon recommended that the Commissioners demolish the building. It was said by Mr. Ballou, and coincided in by the board, that the cost of putting the building into proper use for public-school purposes would be so much that it would appear undesirable to expend public funds for that purpose.

After the sale of this property by St. Ann's Parish to the District of Columbia, the parish erected on parcel 35/126, now lots 800 and 801 in square 1774, a parochial school. The exact date when this building was erected is not ascertainable, but it is safe to say that it was at least 20 years ago. The territory by which this parish was covered was very large and very sparsely settled. This frame building was quite ample for the purposes for which it was intended. In the meantime, Wisconsin Avenue has been widened to its present magnificent boulevard proportions. Yuma Street and Nebraska Avenue and Albemarle Street, all encircling these particular properties, have been cut through and improved. In fact, the territory now occupied by this parish has become one of the most beautiful and interesting sections in Washington. Consequently, the parochial school became more and more important, until now approximately 250 children attend. The old building became impossible. It was old, it lacked modern improvements, it was frame; in fact, it was dangerous. It is remarkable that the District government permitted its use for the 225 to 250 children who were housed in it for several years prior to October 16, 1933.

It was the purpose and intention of the parish to erect a new school, and the matter was considered for perhaps a year or more before the above-named date, October 16, 1933. But the economic conditions and the world-wide financial depression hit this locality as badly as any other, if not perhaps worse than many. The result was that it was impossible to erect a new parochial school, the estimated cost of which would have been not less than $100,000. So the idea was conceived of purchasing from the Government parcels 35/130 and 35/131, together with the old Tenley School building. The parish was met, however, with the difficulty that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, by law, are not permitted to sell real estate without the consent of Congress. But after some negotiations it was finally agreed by the Commissioners, upon the recommendation of the Board of Education, that the old Tenley School building be rented, or leased, to St. Ann's Parish for a period of 2 years at the rental of $500 a year. This lease was duly and properly executed, effective on the 16th day of October 1933, and the parish is now in possession of the school.

To put the school back into usable condition, it cost the parish approximately $10,000. As a matter of fact, there was nothing there but the shell. When this lease was made to the parish by the District Commissioners, their course in doing so was approved by both of the citizens organizations represented by a delegation from each. The citizens organizations in this neighborhood are the North Cleveland Park Citizens Association and the Friendship Height Citizens Association.

Among other things, it was demonstrated to the District of Columbia that maintenance of this parochial school was a saving to the District of $14,785.55 per annum, merely for the estimated salaries of teachers and supplies. These figures were furnished by the District government. This estimate does not include costs of maintenance, or any kind of overhead, and the request that the lease be granted was signed by 21 Members of the House of Representatives District Committee, and by Senator CAPPER, then Chairman of the Senate District Committee.

I feel it would be good business practice on the part of the Government to sell this property, as the Government has no further use for it, and it could be put to useful purposes and the Treasury of the United States would have the use of money which our Government needs so urgently at the present time.

Therefore, I trust that my colleagues will give this measure every consideration when it is reported to you.

I thank you!

POSTAL SUBSTITUTES

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 7483) to provide minimum pay for postal substitutes, with Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out all after "paid" down to and including "law", in line 10, and insert "for a minimum of 100 hours of service in each calendar month at the rates fixed by law. Where the needs of the service require the employment of such substitutes in excess of 100 hours in each calendar month, they shall be paid for the number of hours they have been actually employed at the rates now fixed by law: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent the reinstatement of former employees to regular positions in the Postal Service."

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us what this is?

Mr. MEAD. I may say to the gentleman and to the Members of the House that this is the postal substitute bill that was passed by the House sometime ago guaranteeing a minimum wage of $15 a week to postal substitutes. It was amended in the Senate at the suggestion of the Department and 100 hours a month were prescribed instead of the $15 a week.

Mr. SNELL. This applies merely to substitutes in the Post Office Department?

Mr. MEAD. Yes. The amendment suggested by the Department was for bookkeeping purposes only. The bill otherwise remains practically the same.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE TOMBIGBEE RIVER AT NAHEOLA, ALA.

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3296) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to Meridian & Bigbee River Railway Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Naheola, Ala.", approved January 15, 1927.

This is a bridge bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has this been reported out by the committee and agreed to?

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MILLIGAN] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN] said they considered it and found the bill satisfactory to them.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved January 15, 1927, granting the consent of Congress to the Meridian & Bigbee River Railway Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Naheola, Ala., be, and the same is hereby, revived and reenacted: Provided, That this act shall be null and void unless the actual construction of the bridge herein referred to be commenced within 2 years and completed within 4 years from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—CHANDLER v. BURNHAM

Mr. GAVIGAN, from the Committee on Elections No. 2, submitted a report in the contested election case of Claude Chandler v. George Burnham, from the Twentieth District of California (Rept. No. 1278), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. SWICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a set of resolutions from some C.W.A. workers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWICK. Mr. Speaker, it has been my purpose during the present session of Congress to do everything in my power as a Member of Congress to support legislation intended to extend aid and assistance to the millions of unemployed workers and at the same time support legislation that will make it possible for industry and agriculture to resume normal activities, thereby making it possible to look forward to the day when men will again resume their places in the field of gainful employment.

Through the channels of the Civil Works Administration thousands of unemployed men in my district were given an opportunity to earn the necessities of life for their families during the past winter; their faith in government was restored. It is true this activity did not provide relief for all who were entitled to it, but it was a step in the right direction and, in my opinion, should be continued on an even larger scale so long as there is need for it.

I have just recently had an investigation made of the situation prevailing in one of the counties of my district, in order that I might know the conditions under which the unemployed are laboring at present and, if possible, to determine what steps might be taken to solve their problem.

Lawrence County, Pa., is truly representative of our country as a whole, being divided almost equally between industry and agriculture. It has a population of about 98,000 people. At the time the C.W.A. was inaugurated last November about 12,000 men were on relief rolls or were eligible for same. The maximum quota of the C.W.A. was 3,600; at the time of the discontinuance of C.W.A. there were about 3,400 employed; under the R.W.D. a maximum quota of 1,840 is allowed, but I am informed that at the present time little more than 1,400 are at work. This has resulted in a great increase in the number of families thrown back on the relief rolls. Under the regulations governing R.W.D. a man must have been on the relief prior to November 21, 1933, in order to be given employment.

Considerable difficulty has been experienced since R.W.D. began in securing pay for the men, due apparently to poor management on the part of the disbursing machinery of the organization. It became necessary therefore for the men whose pay was delayed to apply for relief orders to provide food for their families, which in many instances presented another problem for them to solve.

The Federal Emergency Relief, having taken over the local relief work, is managed by one who is a total stranger in the community, does not know the local situation, and, even though he might have the best intentions, is handicapped by the lack of such understanding. That this is so is borne out in the statements that will appear as part of these remarks and which are authentic cases.

The men who are on relief and on R.W.D. represent a cross section of every American community; they come from every walk of life—bankers, business men, salesmen, executives, artisans, farmers, and laborers. No task is too difficult or too menial for them to perform. They are good citizens and represent the backbone of our social structure. For the purpose of presenting their case to Congress and the President they have perfected an organization, which will undoubtedly become a force that must be heeded. I am in full accord with their purpose. They are first of all American and will repel all efforts of those opposed to our Government to exploit the sufferings of the unemployed for un-American purposes. They deserve the utmost consideration from Congress. I find that it sometimes costs more to maintain an unemployed man with his family on the relief roll than it would to continue him on C.W.A. as was formerly done. Certainly it is better for the morale of the country to have men at work than idle.

We will do well to consider this situation seriously; let us not make a mistake. I am certain if each Member of this House will investigate the situation in his district, Congress will appropriate necessary funds to carry on the C.W.A., even at the expense of less important recovery projects.

In order that you may understand the situation as described by the men most vitally affected, I present herewith a resolution recently forwarded to the President, Members of the House and Senate, Governor of Pennsylvania, and the local, State, and National administrators, also a letter from one who has been selected to represent the unemployed and R.W.D. workers in this action. I believe the situation described is typical of the state of affairs throughout the country. Let us correct this deplorable condition before we adjourn this Congress.

(Copy of protest to be sent to the President of the United States, United States Senators from Pennsylvania, Congressmen from said district, Governor of Pennsylvania, Federal C.W.A. Administrator, State C.W.A. administrator, local C.W.A. administrator)

Resolved, That we, as C.W.A. workers, prospective C.W.A. workers, and unemployed workers of Lawrence County, Pa., now organized as a body of honest, determined citizens for the purpose of self-preservation, do, as a body and individually, commend President Roosevelt for inaugurating the Civil Works Administration, the only direct aid to the unemployed and a great act of humanity; and be it further

Resolved, That the new plan, the R.W.D., is an outrage against the man who has, by forced economy, self-denial, and sacrifice, remained off the relief rolls. The man who has weathered the storm has, under the new plan, little or no opportunity to secure paid employment; his only hope is to follow his less fortunate brothers and go on relief. It compels the complete destruction of individual morale, and places him in the last deep ditch of discouragement; and be it further

Resolved, That in order to retain our self-respect and hold our places in the various communities in which we live, we demand that the work plan as under the C.W.A. be continued until industry shall have absorbed the majority of the unemployed. We demand the right to earn an honest living and to receive a more substantial return for our labors. The new plan, the R.W.D., offers little except pauperism. We will not permit this burlesque to prevail. We demand our constitutionally guaranteed heritage, which has been despoiled by political corruption and international financiers. We demand the right to work and live as Americans should live. We are awake to the issues. This colossal outrage, the R.W.D., has awakened not only the unemployed but the merchant, the lawyer, the doctor—everyone. And the time has come when a travesty cannot be foisted upon us. We have been patient and have backed up every move of the administration, but we will not stand idly by and see this farce enacted. The plan must be changed. We demand that it be changed to include all, and not favor those alone who were forced to the lowest depths of poverty and onto the relief rolls. The majority of us have lost or have been legally robbed of our homes, businesses, and savings, and if we accept these damnable conditions, without protest, we would be admitting that we had lost our self-respect. This must not be. We represent every walk of life—workers, business men, professional men. We make these demands not as hotheads but as radical, thinking men.

NEW CASTLE, PA., April 17, 1934.

Hon. J. H. SWICK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with the request of Mr. Howard C. Hunter, we are presenting a copy of statements of persons having occasion to call upon the emergency relief office for assistance. In connection therewith we attach notes of other cases in lieu of signed statements. The above-mentioned signed statements are in our possession, having been typed and read to those concerned.

Statement of Oscar Heath (no. 1995), employed at Ray Street quarry: "I sent to the emergency relief office and asked for a grocery order Saturday, April 7, 1934. I received it Tuesday morning, April 10, through the mail. The envelop was marked '5:30 p.m., April 9.' I was in need of this order Saturday when I asked for it."

Statement of James Robinson (no. 3936), employed at Ray Street quarry: "I arrived at the relief office Tuesday evening, April 10, shortly after 5 p.m., and asked for a grocery order. I was asked how many more were coming and I replied I did not know. I was then asked if I could not wait until Wednesday morning, and I said I could if necessary. I returned Wednesday morning and I was told that it would take some time to make up orders, and, as I had to come to work, I could not wait. I have received no pay and no grocery order as yet."

Statement of Nick DeRosa (no. 100) and E. Daltorio (no. 1827) of Ray Street quarry: "We, the undersigned, arrived at the emergency relief office Saturday night (Apr. 7) at approximately 7:10 p.m. and were informed by the people there that the office was closed and we could not get our order. We had been informed by the R.W.D. office, through our timekeeper, that the relief office as well as the auditorium would remain open until midnight. We returned to the relief office Monday morning at 9 a.m. and were kept waiting, cooling our heels, until 10:30 a.m. before we received our orders."

Statement of Ralph DiMuccio (no. 3655), employed at Ray Street quarry: "I arrived at 107 N. Mill Street at approximately 1:30 p.m. (Apr. 9). I was put in a line of other men in order to secure a number, which I did, and was given no. 142 and then was compelled to wait until 4:45 p.m. before being given an order."

Statement of L. J. Morgan, no. 2026, and Thomas A. Kelly, no. 2029, Norman Hanna, no. 65, and Guiseppe Magno, no. 2021: "We, the undersigned, were compelled to wait from 2 to 4 hours in order to secure our orders."

Statement of Frank Patterson (no. 1337), and Patsy Magno (no. 2025): "We, the undersigned, were compelled to wait approximately 3 hours, after which we were informed that our order would be mailed to us. At this writing same has not been received." (Notation: Patterson order received Apr. 14.)

Statement of Mr. Frank Henry, employed at Snakes' Rest project: "Mr. Henry states that he applied at the Emergency Relief office this morning (Apr. 16) and asked for assistance in having a prescription filled, due to the fact that he had not received a pay since the inauguration of the R.W.D. program. The nurse at the Emergency Relief office told him that he would have to wait until Wednesday, April 18, which is the day he is to receive his pay, to have this prescription filled. Mr. Henry is physically in bad condition."

Statement of Doc Mahone: "I have been employed on C.W.A. and R.W.D. for some time, and, due to the failure of R.W.D. to pay me on the regular pay day, I applied to the relief office for a food order on Saturday morning, April 14, 1934. I had 2 days' pay ($5) coming that day, which I must spend for coal and medicine and milk, as my baby is sick with pneumonia. I talked to Mr. Hall, and, after explaining these things to him, he absolutely refused to give me a food order, saying I would be paid Monday or Tuesday, and I would have to get along until then."

Statement of Mr. John Vonderau, first-aid man at Ray Street Quarry: "Edward Gardner, who works on this project, came to me on Wednesday, the 11th of April, and asked me to make him a request for a coal order. I wrote this request, which was approved by Mr. Tyler and Mr. Doerr, and it was then taken by Gardner to the C.E.R.B. office. When I went to that office about 2 hours later, Gardner was still standing there, and he then told me that his wife was in the last stages of pregnancy and was at home in bed, and two young children were in the house with no one to care for them. Mrs. Gardner expected her baby that afternoon, and there was no fire in the house, and Gardner had no money for medicine or doctor."

"With Gardner I approached Mr. Hall and was told by him after some argument that he would send coal but could not give a medical order. I asked him why, and he said that the committee of the Lawrence County Medical Board would not approve the order and that it could not be paid. He [Mr. Hall] asked Gardner whether it was not just as well that he [Mr. Gardner] run a bill with the doctor and not pay as it was for the C.E.R.B. to do the same thing. I called Dr. J. D. Crawford, president of the Lawrence County Medical Society, and explained the case to him. He said that the rules would not permit the order, but because of the circumstances he could see no reason why Gardner could not get an order. He referred me to Dr. Womer, the chairman of the committee, which passes on the relief's medical orders. Dr. Womer could not be reached that day, but late the next afternoon Gardner received the medical order in the mail."

The following are notes or parts of verbal statements of others who came in contact with the local executive director while in quest of relief orders:

John Hogue: Told to wait a few days.

Harry Welsh: Told the State could not furnish coal. Advised to go to a dealer and get some on credit or borrow from neighbors.

James Ginnocchi: No coal for C.W.A. or R.W.D. men this week.

Carl Hawkey (two children sick at home): Was told no coal at present.

Notation: Six others who applied for coal were refused.

H. C. Mattheys: Applied for relief groceries April 10. Received an order by mail April 16.

Emidio Dettore, no. 1441: Laid off in the transfer from C.W.A. to R.W.D. Applied for relief April 3. Secured same April 12.

We could proceed indefinitely, reciting cases of need which were refused or delayed, for no apparent reason, from 3 to 9 days. Further, the curtness of the office is anything but a credit to our much-vaunted civilization.

As if it were not sufficient humiliation to be forced to beg for provisions to keep body and soul together, these men are compelled to wait submissively at the relief office from 2 to 5 hours in order to be interviewed, with the possibility of being delayed or refused.

We are of the opinion that a great amount of this difficulty could be eliminated were the personnel of the Emergency Relief Office persons of mature mentality, endowed with enough humanitarian instinct to visualize some of the problems of these men and the ability to fully appreciate the responsibilities of their positions.

We also wish to protest against the substitution of the R.W.D., with its many imperfections, for the C.W.A., which had been perfected from a vision to a real benefit to a great number of people. Why our statesmen would permit an organization functioning as smoothly and performing a service as C.W.A. did to the millions of persons depending on that service as a means of keeping body and soul together and substituting the confusions to and interruption of that service is beyond our understanding.

Under the C.W.A. men from all walks of life were generally assigned as common laborers for 30 hours per week at the rate of 50 cents per hour for the defined purpose of providing them with the necessities of life for themselves and families. To further please (?) and aid (?) us, we were reduced from 30 hours to 24 hours per week. Was it because $15 per week is too much for a family of 4, 6, or 8? Was it for the reason that any of these men could possibly be banking money, buying homes, automobiles, or living on the fat of the land? Apparently it was only for the purpose of further pauperizing, humiliating, and dissatisfying these citizens.

Does the administration, and legislators of these United States of America, realize the dissatisfaction and unrest prevalent in every home and every individual outside of the special-privileged class? Do they realize this constantly changing program, for the worse, is a breeding ground for further unrest; leading to riot and possible revolution with its attendant horrors?

We wonder if our statesmen can visualize the men and women of tomorrow who, being born of parents lacking in the very necessities of life, are even denied the privilege of being born normal. Our mothers of today delivering and nursing their offspring from undernourished bodies and worried, tortured minds cannot tend to reproduce a physically and mentally normal race.

In conclusion, we call your attention to the appended copy of statements of Mr. Albert Colucci and W. V. Tyler. We wonder, Dr. SWICK, what your reactions and the reactions of your colleagues are to the plight of this man, or rather these men, as these and similar cases are more than numerous.

We trust that these statements of facts will enable you to more clearly understand the tense situation which exists here in Lawrence County and that something may be done to alleviate same in the interest of all.

Very truly yours,

H. E. DOERR,
Timekeeper, Pro. 37–1003.

STATEMENT OF ALBERT COLUCCI, NO. 3523, EMPLOYED AT RAY STREET QUARRY PROJECT, NO. 37–1003

NEW CASTLE, PA., April 17, 1934.

Not having received pay since April 2, 1934, at which time I received $4, which was the last of the C.W.A. money due me, I applied to the emergency relief office for an order on April 9 for a family of four persons. On April 10 I received a commissary order, for which they supplied the following: 2 cans peas, 2 cans corn, 1 pound coffee, 2 pounds sugar, 1 box salt, 4 oranges, 1 sack flour, 2 cans salmon, 1 can Karo sirup, 2 bars soap, 1 peck potatoes, 1 soup bone, 2 cans tomatoes, 1 pound rice, 1 pound macaroni, 2 bars laundry soap, two 1-cent boxes matches, 1 small jar peanut butter, 1 small jar apple butter.

On April 14, 1934, I went to the relief office for the purpose of getting another order, only having drawn 1 day's pay, amounting to $2.50, from the R.W.D.

The man preceding me was so treated by the young lady attendant I chose to not ask for an order rather than be humiliated as he was. He was told he was working and asked what more did he want.

ALBERT COLUCCI.

Witnessed by—
H. E. DOERR.

STATEMENT OF W. V. TYLER, SUPERVISOR RAY STREET QUARRY PROJECT 37–1003

APRIL 17, 1934.

On April 16, 1934, at approximately 9.30 a.m., Mr. Albert Colucci was injured by having a finger pinched between stones. During first-aid treatment he fainted and was revived and taken to Dr. James Crawford for treatment. I, personally, when he had been revived, spoke to him about the accident causing him to faint, and he told me that he had eaten no breakfast, owing to having no food at home, which statement brings about this statement and presentation of facts.

W. V. TYLER, Supervisor.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Leave of absence was granted to Mr. WOOD of Georgia, for a few days, on account of serious illness in his family.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Then we will just have to meet tomorrow and adjourn. The gentleman will not accomplish anything by that. There will just be a perfunctory meeting tomorrow.

Mr. BYRNS. I may say to the gentleman that the House is far ahead of its business on the calendar. The Senate has a number of bills that will have to be considered and if we meet tomorrow we will only have to meet to adjourn. Many Members want to get away and some of them wish to leave tonight.

Mr. SNELL. I had supposed that we had met at 11 o'clock during most of the week for the purpose of rushing the work so we could get a little time off.

Mr. BYRNS. Yes; we have had several sessions this week beginning at 11 o'clock and have also sat rather late, with the understanding on the part of most of the Members that we adjourn over until Monday. Of course, if the gentleman wants to bring us back tomorrow that is his privilege.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. It is understood that when we meet tomorrow we will just be in session a few moments and then adjourn?

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman from Michigan is so anxious to come back I would not want to make that statement until I see what they want to propose for consideration tomorrow.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is going to make the promise that we will attend to no business tomorrow?

Mr. SNELL. They cannot make that promise if they insist on meeting tomorrow.

Mr. BLANTON. If the majority leader makes that statement, I feel sure that is what will happen.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It will be up to the majority leader whether we transact any business or not.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that objection came too late. The Chair had called for objection and had stated that the Chair heard no objection prior to the time the objection was made by the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman was entitled to make the objection. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman from Michigan insists upon his objection, Mr. Speaker.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, 2 or 3 days ago the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] submitted certain figures from the Agricultural Department and the Treasury Department with reference to receipts and expenditures under the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. I promised him and the Senate to procure the exact figures. I now have a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, together with a statement from Mr. Howell, the financial expert of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, which sets forth the facts.

Before submitting the letter and statement I wish to make a brief reference to the remarks of the Senator from Iowa. He stated, among other things:

> The Treasury, prior to April 10, 1934, has already advanced to the Secretary of Agriculture $455,885,000, which in addition to the amount already appropriated of $100,000,000 makes a total of $555,885,000.

That statement is correct, but it should be clearly understood as shown by the figures I am about to submit that, while this amount has been made available to the Secretary of Agriculture, only $239,816,732.51 of the total had been expended on April 10, 1934. The balance of $316,068,267.49 was on that date and still is in the Treasury and available for future expenditure. In other words, there was not a deficit, but that surplus remains in the Treasury for the use of the Department under the act.

I now ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the letter and statement to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the letter and statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D.C., April 20, 1934.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR MCKELLAR: I am sending you herewith a statement prepared in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration giving the true situation regarding receipts from processing taxes and expenditures on the various adjustment programs to which we are committed. If there is any other information you desire on this matter, I shall be glad to furnish it.

Appreciating your interest, I am,

Sincerely yours,

H. A. WALLACE, Secretary.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D.C., April 19, 1934.

FINANCIAL STATUS OF THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

The following information is submitted for the purpose of clarifying the apparent misunderstanding which Senator DICKINSON has with regard to the present and prospective financial status of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration:

A BRIEF STATEMENT OF THE ACTUAL SITUATION

1. Summary of entire program as now approved: Total anticipated expenditures for all production control and removal of surplus programs which have been adopted to date by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration are estimated at $1,003,602,714.

This total includes all rental and benefit payments, all purchases of surplus products, all tax refunds, and all administrative expenses which have already been made or which it is estimated will be made during the life of the programs now in effect.

Total anticipated revenues for meeting the above expenditures are estimated at $1,007,722,850. This total of estimated receipts consists of $970,722,850 from processing taxes and related sources and of $37,000,000 allocated from funds appropriated by the National Industrial Recovery Act by the President for the specific purpose of supplementing processing tax collections in financing the corn-hog program.

Total receipts as estimated above will exceed total estimated expenditures by $4,120,136.

Expenditures for purposes other than for control of basic agricultural commodities, consisting exclusively of general administration, are not included in the above estimate. They are charged directly against the $100,000,000 appropriated in the Agricultural Adjustment Act. It is estimated that the total of such expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, will not exceed $3,251,205, and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, will approximate $5,123,323. Thus it is anticipated that on June 30, 1935, only $8,374,528 will have been expended from this fund.

The above estimates include all of the anticipated expenditures by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, either from funds directly appropriated, from processing and related taxes, or other sources. If our estimates are correct, when all our present programs are completed we will have a balance on hand from processing taxes of $4,120,136 and will still have approximately $90,000,000 available of the $100,000,000 appropriated in the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

2. A summary of actual receipts and expenditures to April 14, 1934: Expenditures by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration to April 14, 1934, according to the daily statement of the United States Treasury for that date, to which Senator DICKINSON referred in the Senate on April 18, consisted of two items, as follows:

General expenditures	$234,578,421.54
Emergency expenditures	60,574,167.69

The first item is correct and reflects expenditures to that date charged against processing-tax collections.

The second item is misleading, as will be seen from the following statement of items making up the total:

(1) Department of Agriculture	$4,749,677.69
(2) Department of Agriculture (special deposits)	[1] 6,863,110.56
(3) Farm Credit Administration	60,000,000.00
(4) Commodity Credit Corporation	2,716,010.21
(5) Undistributed adjustments	[1] 28,409.65
Total	60,574,167.69

The first item of $4,749,677.69 represents expenditures actually made by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration for rental and benefit payments, removal of surplus, or administration. None of the other items are actually expenditures by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

The second item is not an expenditure at all but a credit balance in the special-deposit account through which payments and receipts in connection with cotton options are cleared. These payments are not financed by Government funds but rather through the sales value of optioned cotton.

The third item represents the expenditure of funds by the Farm Credit Administration allocated to it by the President in accordance with provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

The fourth item represents funds made available in the same way for financing the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Therefore, when the daily Treasury statement for April 14 is properly analyzed, it will be seen that total expenditures reported to that date by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration were as follows:

[1] Credit balances.

(1) General expenditures	$234,578,421.54
(2) Emergency expenditures	4,749,677.69
Total	239,328,099.23

In addition to these expenditures, refunds of processing taxes had been made in the amount of $488,633.28, making total expenditures plus refunds of $239,816,732.51.

The same statement shows that total processing-tax collections to that date were $265,758,881.85.

Thus, on April 14, receipts exceeded expenditures plus refunds by $25,942,149.34.

3. Summary of anticipated receipts and expenditures during the fiscal year 1934: Although tax collections to date have exceeded expenditures, it is anticipated that as a result of heavy rental and benefit payments soon to go out total expenditures by the end of June 1934 will exceed collections to that date by approximately $100,000,000. It is expected that this excess of expenditures will be offset by an excess of collections in later periods during the life of the programs now in effect.

A brief summary of anticipated collections and expenditures involved in these programs, by fiscal years, will serve to indicate this situation:

	Fiscal years
	1934[1]	1935	1936	Total
Basic commodity programs:[2]
Estimated collections	$409,019,450	$416,402,300	$145,301,100	$970,722,850
Allotted under N.I.R. Act	37,000,000			37,000,000
Total available for expenditure	446,019,450	416,402,300	145,301,100	1,007,722,850
Estimated expenditures	542,910,441	386,629,383	74,062,920	1,003,602,714
Surplus or deficit	[3] 96,890,961	29,772,917	71,238,180	4,120,136
Administrative expenses chargeable to $100,000,000 appropriation	3,251,205	5,123,323	(4)	8,374,528

[1] Includes receipts and expenditures made to date.
[2] All present programs will be completed before or during the fiscal year 1936.
[3] Deficit.
[4] No estimate made as to fiscal year 1936.

4. Analysis of Budget statements as printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 18, 1934: The Budget statements printed in the RECORD are taken from the Budget for 1935 sent to Congress on January 3, 1934, and reflect estimates made early in December 1933. To properly interpret these statements, it is necessary to understand the basis on which they were prepared, and what they are intended to reflect.

In the first place, these estimates are estimates of obligations and not of expenditures. Obligations incurred, or to be incurred, in the fiscal year 1934 will far exceed expenditures during the same year for when contracts involving rental and benefit payments are signed by the Secretary, all payments to be made under those contracts then become obligations, whereas the actual expenditure of funds in payment of those rentals or benefits may occur a year later. Hence, although there have been some changes of a relatively minor character in our estimates since the Budget was prepared, the figure of estimated obligations for the fiscal year 1934 of $855,379,811, referred to by Senator DICKINSON, still fairly accurately reflects the true situation and is not out of harmony with the estimates of expenditures already set forth herein.

The estimates of obligations for the fiscal year 1935, as shown in the Budget, frankly are not closely in harmony with our current estimates of receipts and expenditures because the basis used in preparing the two statements was necessarily different.

The current statement is based upon the various programs (cotton, wheat, corn-hogs, tobacco, and dairy surplus removal) now approved and in effect. It reflects estimates of receipts from taxes now being levied and expenditures in connection with contracts now offered producers. It does not reflect receipts from additional taxes which may be levied or payments on new contracts which may be offered producers.

In preparing the Budget estimates for 1935 it was necessary to look ahead and try to reflect the results of future activities not yet entered into. We, therefore, assumed that current production control programs would be repeated. This would involve additional obligations as indicated in the 1935 estimates. It should be understood, however, that as yet there has been no definite decision to actually repeat the present programs, and if they are repeated the period of tax collections will be correspondingly extended. In that event these additional expenditures will be financed by additional tax collections, just as the current programs are being financed.

5. Analysis of advances from the Treasury: Senator DICKINSON has stated that "* * * the Treasury, prior to April 10, 1934, has already advanced to the Secretary of Agriculture $455,885,000, which, in addition to the amount already appropriated of $100,000,000, makes a total of $555,885,000." This is correct, but it should be clearly understood that, while this amount has been made available to the Secretary of Agriculture, only $239,816,732.51 of the total has been expended on April 10, 1934, and the balance of $316,068,267.49 was on that date still in the Treasury and available for future expenditure.

REPORT OF CHICAGO WORLD'S FAIR CENTENNIAL COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretaries of State, Agriculture, and Commerce, submitting, pursuant to law, a detailed statement of expenditures, together with other reports concerning the character and extent of Federal participation in A Century of Progress Exposition in Chicago during 1933, and stating "In view of the fact that Federal participation in this exposition is contemplated during the year 1934, the attached report is necessarily not final", which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. CAPPER presented the petition of Local Union No. 1445, Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, of Topeka, Kans., praying for the passage of the bill (S. 2616) to raise revenue by levying an excise tax upon employers, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. METCALF presented a memorial of citizens, being employees of the Valley Lace Co., Inc., of Riverpoint, R.I., remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H.R. 8637) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, particularly as it might affect the tariff duty on imported laces, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LEWIS (for Mr. TYDINGS) presented a resolution adopted by the Old Town Merchants and Manufacturers Association of Baltimore, Md., favoring the passage of legislation granting, in the interest of national recovery, substantial extension of credit to small manufacturers and business men, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also (for Mr. TYDINGS) presented a memorial of citizens of Baltimore, Md., remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. 2926) to equalize the bargaining power of employers and employees, to encourage the amicable settlement of disputes between employers and employees, to create a National Labor Board, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

In brief, the resolution authorizes and requests the President of the United States to issue a proclamation calling upon our citizens to express on Mother's Day this year our love and reverence for motherhood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be placed on the calendar.

S.J.Res. 70. Joint resolution to provide for the reappointment of John C. Merriam as a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BACHMAN:

A bill (S. 3418) to provide for the protection and preservation of domestic sources of tin; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Br. Mr. LEWIS (for Mr. TYDINGS):

A bill (S. 3419) to exempt articles of machinery belting from the tax on floor stocks imposed by the Agricultural Adjustment Act; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(Mr. FLETCHER introduced Senate bill 3420, which appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. MURPHY:

A bill (S. 3421) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES

Mr. FLETCHER introduced a bill (S. 3420) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. FLETCHER subsequently, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which Senate bill 3420 was referred, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 792) thereon.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H.R. 9061) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MANAGEMENT OF SHILOH NATIONAL PARK, TENN.—CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, some days ago there was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs Senate Resolution 198, submitted by me on February 27 last, referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and then that committee was discharged from its further consideration and the resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. It provides for the appointment of a committee to examine into certain charges with reference to the management of the Shiloh National Park at Pittsburg Landing, Tenn. The Committee on Military Affairs holds that it has no jurisdiction of this particular resolution and suggests that it should have gone to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs may be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the Committee on Military Affairs joins in the request made by the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Committee on Military Affairs is discharged from the further consideration of the resolution, and it will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

ENLARGEMENT OF SCOPE OF INVESTIGATION OF RACKETS AND RACKETEERING

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Resolution 196.

There being no objection, the resolution (submitted by Mr. COPELAND on Feb. 20, 1934), which had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate without amendment, was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That in addition to the authority conferred by Senate Resolution No. 74, Seventy-third Congress, first session, agreed to June 12, 1933, upon the Committee on Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, to investigate so-called "rackets" and "racketeering" practiced in the United States, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, shall have authority to investigate criminal practices and crimes generally, and all the powers of the committee or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, under such resolution as thus extended shall continue in force until the expiration of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

Resolved further, That the limit of expenditures under such resolution is hereby increased by $25,000.

EXPENSES OF INVESTIGATION OF BANKING AND SECURITIES EXCHANGES

Mr. BYRNES. I also ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Resolution 208.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (submitted by Mr. FLETCHER on Mar. 14, 1934), which had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment: In line 7, to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$40,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency, or any subcommittee thereof, authorized by Senate Resolution 84, agreed to March 4, 1932, and extended by subsequent resolutions, to investigate dealings in securities, effects of same, the business of banking, and the practices of securities exchanges, hereby is authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate $40,000 in addition to the amount heretofore authorized for such purpose.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On April 17, 1934:

S. 163. An act for the relief of Capt. Guy M. Kinman.

On April 18, 1934:

S. 1091. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and render judgment on the claims of Edward F. Goltra against the United States arising out of the taking of certain vessels and unloading apparatus;

S. 2315. An act to provide for the settlement of damage claims arising from the construction of the Petrolia-Fort Worth gas-pipe line;

S. 1934. An act conferring jurisdiction upon certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim by the owner of the four-masted auxiliary bark Quevilly against the United States, and for other purposes; and

S. 1935. An act to amend the act of March 2, 1929, conferring jurisdiction upon certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim by the owner of the S.S. W. I. Radcliffe against the United States, and for other purposes.

On April 19, 1934:

S. 1075. An act for the relief of Walter Thomas Foreman.

REGULATION OF FOODS AND DRUGS

Mr. FESS obtained the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I hope sometime next week, or very soon thereafter, to call up the so-called "food and drug bill." We have had long hearings before a subcommittee and afterwards by the full committee. A number of Senators have spoken to me about amendments which they have in mind. I and the subcommittee would appreciate it very much if those amendments might be formulated so that we could give them consideration before bringing the bill to the floor of the Senate. My thought is that, by reason of the long hearings and many conferences held, it may be possible, if the bill can be passed at all, to pass it within the brief space of an hour or so, but that would not be possible unless the amendments contemplated are brought to us in advance. We would appreciate it greatly if they might be presented and printed and referred to the committee for its consideration.

EXTENSION OF NATIONAL MOTOR VEHICLE THEFT ACT

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me to enable me to call up a bill which may be passed without delay, and I am sure it will lead to no debate.

Mr. FESS. I have no objection, if it will not lead to any debate.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, among the so-called "antigangster and antiracketeering bills" reported favorably from the Committee on the Judiciary is a bill to extend the provisions of the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act to other stolen property. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be now considered; the Senator who once objected has withdrawn his objection. Gangsters who now convey stolen property, except vehicles, across the State line, with that immemorial gesture of derision, thumb their nose at the officers. This bill extends the provisions of the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act to other stolen property described in the bill.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I have had to decline a request from my own colleague who wanted to submit a conference report——

Mr. ASHURST. Very well; I withdraw my request.

Mr. FESS. If it does not lead to any debate, I shall not object to granting the Senator's request.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator. I am sure it will lead to no debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio object?

Mr. FESS. I have no objection provided the bill does not lead to debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio has the right to object at any time. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2845) to extend the provisions of the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act to other stolen property, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 2, line 1, after the word "stock", to insert the word "certificate"; in line 2, to strike out the words "Treasury stock"; in line 3, to strike out the words "order, money order"; in line 4, to strike out the words "bill of sale"; in line 24, after the words "value of", to insert the numerals "$1,000"; on page 3, line 5, after the words "value of", to insert "$1,000"; and after line 13, to insert the following new section:

SEC. 6. Nothing herein shall be construed to repeal, modify, or amend any part of the act of October 29, 1929 (ch. 89), cited as the "National Motor Vehicle Theft Act."

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "National Stolen Property Act."

SEC. 2. That when used in this act—

(a) The term "interstate or foreign commerce" shall mean transportation from one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to a foreign country, or from a foreign country to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia.

(b) The term "security" shall mean any note, stock certificate, bond, debenture, check, draft, warrant, traveler's check, letter of credit, warehouse receipt, negotiable bill of lading, evidence of indebtedness, certificate of interest or participation in any profit-sharing agreement, collateral-trust certificate, preorganization certificate or subscription, transferable share, investment contract, voting-trust certificate; certificate of interest in property, tangible or intangible; instrument or document or writing evidencing ownership of goods, wares, and merchandise; or transferring or assigning any right, title, or interest in or to goods, wares, and merchandise, or, in general, any instrument commonly known as a "security", or any certificate of interest or participation in, temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for, warrant, or right to subscribe to or purchase any of the foregoing, or any forged, counterfeited, or spurious representation of any of the foregoing.

(c) The term "money" shall mean the legal tender of the United States or of any foreign country, or any counterfeit thereof.

SEC. 3. Whoever shall transport or cause to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce any goods, wares, or merchandise of the value of $1,000 or more, or any security or money, knowing the same to have been stolen, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment of not more than 10 years, or both.

SEC 4. Whoever shall receive, conceal, store, barter, sell, or dispose of any goods, wares, or merchandise of the value of $1,000 or more, or any security or money, moving as, or which is a part of, or which constitutes interstate or foreign commerce, knowing the same to have been stolen, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment of not more than 10 years, or both.

SEC. 5. Any person violating this act may be punished in any district into or through which such goods, wares, or merchandise, or such security or money, has been transported or removed.

SEC. 6. Nothing herein shall be construed to repeal, modify, or amend any part of the act of October 29, 1929 (ch. 89), cited as the "National Motor Vehicle Theft Act."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I cannot let this incident pass without thanking the able Senator from Ohio, who has been so gracious, and telling him he has performed a distinct public service in permitting this bill to pass.

OCEAN-MAIL CONTRACTS

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, a few days ago a very startling article was published in the syndicated column prepared by Drew Pearson and Robert S. Allen, under the date line of Washington, April 14. It is very brief, and because of its importance and its bearing on a number of matters now before the Senate, and one in particular about which the able Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] is to speak this afternoon, I should like to read the article. It reads as follows:

By Drew Pearson and Robert S. Allen

WASHINGTON, April 14.—This may be the last trip Roosevelt takes on the yacht Nourmahal if his close friends have anything to say about it. There are three reasons for their violent aversion to Presidential cruising with Vincent Astor:

1. The ground lost by the new deal while Roosevelt had his hand off the helm.

2. On the yacht were polo-playing socialities—George St. George, from Tuxedo; Lyle Hull; and William Rhineland Stewart, who bicycles in Bermuda. A President of the United States associates better politically with earthy folks than with horsey folks.

3. Finally, the yacht Nourmahal is going to figure big in the forthcoming Senate shipping investigation of the International Mercantile Marine.

This is what really worries Roosevelt's advisers. Vincent Astor is director and big shareholder in the I.M.M. Kermit Roosevelt, cousin of F. D. R., is vice president. The I.M.M. holds enormous Government mail contracts; has received other Government favors.

Senator BLACK's committee has unearthed copies of radiograms sent by P. A. S. Franklin, head of the I.M.M., to Kermit Roosevelt, its vice president, aboard the Nourmahal.

These radios instructed Kermit what he should tell his cousin, the President, regarding the I.M.M. Whether Kermit carried out instructions is not known.

The committee has a number of such radios sent during previous voyages of the Nourmahal when Kermit was aboard with his cousin. Unless some have been obtained within the past few days the committee has none from the trip just closed.

In any case, the messages play directly into the hands of the Republican opposition. And unless terrific restraining pressure is brought on the Black committee they will be made public soon.

Mr. President, that is a startling statement. Since it has been given wide circulation over all the United States, I think it only fair for the chairman of the investigating committee to tell the Senate whether or not the statements made in the article are true.

I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], who is now in his seat, if it is true that his committee has unearthed copies of radiograms sent by P. A. S. Franklin, head of the International Mercantile Marine, to Kermit Roosevelt, its vice president, aboard the Nourmahal?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, does the Senator from Ohio desire to yield to me long enough to enable me to make a statement in reply to what the Senator from Indiana has said?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BLACK. I shall be very glad to make the statement.

Mr. President, I stated a few days ago that the attempt to divert the Senate committee from its investigation of ocean- and air-mail activities in order to convert it into a semipolitical committee was for the express purpose of protecting ocean- and air-mail contractors. I stated then that so long as the committee could be kept from investigating the real facts with reference to ocean- and air-mail activities by going off on a trail that led to nowhere, the ocean- and air-mail contractors would be happy. I state further now that had it not been for the fact that the committee has been diverted from the real purposes of the investigation, the officers of the International Mercantile Marine would already have been called before the committee. I will state to the Senator further that the International Mercantile Marine will be investigated by the committee.

The committee's funds are getting low; and I stated several days ago that I did not intend to permit any more delay than I could help on extraneous matters for the benefit of ocean- and air-mail contractors, including the International Mercantile Marine.

I will state to the Senator from Indiana that just so soon as we have examined the witnesses whom the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] has asked to have present, it is my express purpose, if the committee will concur with me, to summon the shipping interests rather than to take any chance of delay and of not getting the additional appropriations needed.

I hope to be able to do that next week. At that time I expect first to summon the officers of the International Mercantile Marine. I shall be very glad, indeed, as the chairman of the committee, to accord the Senator from Indiana the privilege of coming to the sessions of the committee and asking Kermit Roosevelt or Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., or any other person he desires, any questions he may wish to ask.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will Vincent Astor be called?

Mr. BLACK. I shall be very glad, indeed, to call him at the Senator's request, and permit the Senator to come and ask him questions.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does not the Senator believe that Mr. Vincent Astor ought to be called?

Mr. BLACK. I will state to the Senator that never since I became chairman of the committee have I announced in advance those whom I expect to call and those whom I do not expect to call. I have found out that for several reasons it was not wise to let the various people who are interested in concealing facts, instead of bringing out and exposing fraud, have the names of the witnesses. I will state to the Senator again, so far as I am concerned, that I shall be very glad to have him present at the committee hearings, and with his adroitness and his skill I shall be very glad to join the other members of the committee in permitting him to ask any witness any question deemed to be pertinent or relevant to the issue.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That answers the question, Mr. President. I am very glad the Senator intends to investigate the International Mercantile Marine, and I assume that the hearings will be held as soon as possible.

Mr. BLACK. May I state to the Senator further that the reason of my going back, if I get the committee to do so, into the shipping question so soon as the witnesses who have been presently summoned have been interrogated, is because, as I stated, the funds of the committee are getting low, and I do not want any of those interested in any air-mail or ocean-mail contracts to divert us from the real issue, which is to find out what has been done, and whether or not fraud has been committed by anybody, of any party or of any group. They all look alike to me, so far as I am concerned. I wish I could say that for some others.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. FESS. I think I had better not, Mr. President.

Mr. LONG. Will not the Senator permit me to ask just one question before we get away from this subject?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. FESS. I will yield for a question.

Mr. LONG. I wanted to find out from the Senator from Alabama——

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I think I will not yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am very grateful to the Senator from Ohio for permitting me to occupy this much of his time.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8861) to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. JONES, Mr. FULMER, Mr. DOXEY, Mr. HOPE, and Mr. KINZER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 2084. An act granting and confirming to the East Bay Municipal Utility District, a municipal utility district of the State of California and a body corporate and politic of said State, and a political subdivision thereof, certain lands, and for other purposes; and

S. 3296. An act to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to Meridian & Bigbee River Railway Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Naheola, Ala.", approved January 15, 1927.

THE AIR MAIL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3170) to revise air-mail laws.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I very freely yielded to the many interruptions, largely because they were rather important, especially some of the legislation that was acted upon, and also because discussion of the subject upon which I am about to enter is bound to consume a good deal of time.

I desire to have it understood at the outset that the interest I have in this matter is not in the consumption of time. That is a practice in which I have never indulged, either in the Senate or in the House. While I can understand the background of what is sometimes called the filibuster, and while I do not condemn it except as a general practice, I hope no one will regard me as entering upon that practice, or of speaking because of a desire to consume time.

Rightly or wrongly, I regard the issue which occasions this debate as involving the most important single incident since the days of the Civil War. The cancelation of the air-mail contracts in the wanton manner in which it was done, with the background of accumulated events, and with the fatalities involved in the result, constitutes a very important subject of discussion. For that reason I am going to have to ask the indulgence of my colleagues as well as their patience, especially those who from time to time find themselves in their seats, in order to discuss the subject from rather a broad fundamental basis.

I can fully understand the degree of intensity displayed by some of those who were active in securing the cancelation of the air-mail contracts.

I can fully understand and appreciate, I think, the attitude of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. I was intimately associated with him while we were Members of the other body, and also have been in this body, having a very close relationship with him in work on committees and otherwise, and I want to exculpate the Senator from Tennessee from any motive other than a desire to correct what he believes to be a wrong. Whatever we might say of the Senator, we must admit that he is intense in his zeal for and against certain things. One of the things which is exceedingly offensive to him is the payment of subsidies by the Government. He has been an outstanding opponent of that policy ever since he has been a Member of either House of Congress. If I may be permitted to say so, I think the Senator is somewhat prejudiced in the matter, but, be that as it may, his opposition to the principle of subsidy payments is the chief motive in his unusually militant action on the issue we now have before us.

I have always believed that, under certain circumstances, we would either have to abandon an industry or would have to subsidize it. I have supported the principle of subsidy with a good deal of trepidation. I know it does involve objectionable features which all of us wish could be avoided. But when it comes, for example, to competing on the sea, over which we have no control, our laws not extending to the control over the seas as they do over the land within our boundaries, when we are in open competition with countries where not only are wages lower, but where conditions of labor are not as desirable as they are here, and where other governments subsidize their own services, it is not possible for the United States to compete under those circumstances, on the open sea, without laws granting assistance to our shipping.

All of us recall that when we entered the Great War we heard the cry, "Ships, ships, and yet more ships." Everybody who remembers those days will recall what a campaign of shipbuilding was inaugurated. That was justified, I think, but it was a very expensive performance.

When the war ended, we had a fleet of ships of various characters, and the question was what was to be done with them. Some people thought they ought to be junked; others thought, in view of the very great importance of the merchant marine, that we ought to operate them as a Government agency, while still others thought that it would be better for the Government to make some sort of an adjustment whereby these Government-owned ships could be utilized in the merchant marine, the difference in cost to be made up by the Government.

We recall our experience prior to what is known as the "Jones-White Act." When that measure was discussed on the floor of the Senate, I openly made the statement that, while I was much opposed to the Government operating a merchant marine, yet the importance of a merchant marine as an adjunct to national defense was so great that rather than have the merchant marine abandoned, I would vote for the Government to operate it as well as to own it. Prior to the Jones-White Act we tried that experiment, with a result with which everyone is conversant, namely, great losses.

We were faced by these alternatives: If we were to follow the course of maintaining a merchant marine, it had to be done in one of two ways, the Government must either operate it and pay the losses due to the increased cost of operation in competition with foreign countries, or we would have to resort to subsidies. After some experience, we decided on the latter.

The question was as to what form the subsidy should take. I felt that the thing to do was to call it a direct subsidy, and not in any way to cover up the fact that it was a subsidy. But there was so much popular opposition to the word "subsidy" that it was decided to call it a mail subvention. It was a subsidy, and should have been so called from the beginning.

It seemed to me that it was very unwise to enter upon a policy of paying subsidies under the name "mail subventions", for the simple reason that if a subsidy is paid to a company, and it is stated that it is payment for service in carrying the mail, and the subsidy amounts to $100,000, and the mail carried amounts to a hundred pounds, the cost per pound is so exorbitant that a Senator, as has been done by the Senator from Tennessee, can hold up to criticism the exorbitant pay for carrying mail on the ocean, until it appears simply ridiculous.

The Senator from Tennessee never lost an opportunity to comment on the disparity between the amounts received by the shipping companies and the number of pounds of mail carried. I have heard him speak here about the thousands of dollars that were paid for carrying 4 pounds of mail. He was right, except that it was not a mere mail subvention; it was a subsidy paid in order to make up the difference between the cost of operation of the American merchant marine and the foreign, with which we were in competition. The Senator from Tennessee has waged a consistent warfare against the policy of paying subsidies. He assailed it with tremendous power in the last Congress, and he exposed it in the way I have suggested.

Mr. President, we shall either have to abandon the idea of having an American merchant marine, which action, in my judgment, would be indefensible, because of the need of such a service in national defense, or we will have to resort to subsidy of some form or other.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Ohio if it is not a fact that it has long been disclosed that about half of the shipping lines which are receiving subsidies from the United States Government are owned in England?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I cannot answer directly the question of the Senator, as I have not looked up the matter. I assume he has the facts to support the implication he makes, or he would not ask the question. I do not know.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator is familiar with the fact that the International Mercantile Marine controls almost all the lines running between the United States and Europe and is owned largely in England?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I rise for the purpose of correcting the statement just made by the Senator from Missouri. The International Mercantile Marine is owned by citizens of the United States, with the exception of a very small percentage of the stock.

Mr. CLARK. It sails under two flags and receives subsidies from two nations, does it not?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I am of opinion that the idea of the Senator from Missouri is a laudable one, that if we pay a Government subsidy it ought to go to American citizens. I sympathize with that. I also wholly sympathize with the idea that if we pay subsidies, there ought to be a very rigid regulation of the expenditure of such subsidies; that is, I should not want them wasted on bonuses, or high salaries, or items of that sort. In other words, I am of opinion that there are abuses in connection with the payment of subsidies which must be corrected; but I am just as certain as that we are in this Chamber that we must either adhere to the principle of subsidies or we will have no merchant marine on the high seas.

As evidence of that, Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a statement by a man whom I regard as a very outspoken as well as outstanding citizen, who is a member of the present administration. I refer to the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Roper. In a recent article, which was given wide publicity, he makes this statement:

> As an economic necessity, the foreign-trade development of the United States depends largely upon the use of American ships for carrying American goods. It is essential that we maintain an American flag tonnage on important trade routes, to serve the needs of our commerce and to safeguard against war and other emergencies which might disturb the normal flow of American commerce.

I think that is a sound statement. It cannot be successfully controverted. Then he proceeds further:

> But it is not alone from the competitive and essential economic standpoint that we must view the development of our merchant marine. The merchant marine is an important and, we may safely say, an indispensable factor in our national defense.

That statement, in my judgment, cannot be successfully contradicted. Then the Secretary of Commerce, speaking officially, makes this statement:

> The practical question in view of these conditions, which early arose and is still before us, is the way in which the labor and other extra-cost inequalities, as previously described, can be met or equalized so as to permit the building and sustaining of a requisite merchant marine. An equally important aspect of this question is the necessity of fixing the amount of the subsidy at a point where it will equalize these differentials and stimulate rather than discourage private initiative.

Mr. President, that is in my judgment a sound statement. What the Secretary of Commerce there advocates is fundamentally necessary if we are to maintain a merchant marine, and at the same time maintain in that service our standard of living.

Mr. President, the last statement I read is worthy of repetition:

> An equally important aspect of this question is the necessity of fixing the amount of the subsidy at a point where it will equalize these differentials and stimulate rather than discourage private initiative.

I desire to say to my good friend from Tennessee, who has been assailing the methods pursued with regard to aviation, the present issue before us, largely, if not entirely, on the ground that there is a subsidy provided, that he is bound to subscribe to the principles of his own administration, or else he will be compelled to abandon wholly the merchant marine.

The Secretary of Commerce says further in his statement:

> We all insist that we must maintain our standard of living as against the lower living standards of other countries, and, by so doing, we automatically impose a handicap upon American shipowners. The best answer that Congress has worked out to this problem of meeting differential costs and expenses is to have the Federal Government supplement the larger costs for our country with money from the Federal Treasury.

> Even with the much lower costs existing in other maritime nations, our chief competitors have found subsidies necessary in order to build and maintain their merchant marines. Great Britain, France, and Japan, with their much lower costs, have found subsidies necessary to maintain their commercial fleets for both economic and national-defense purposes. It should not be difficult to understand, therefore, that a subsidy policy is essential in the building and maintenance of our merchant marine, at least until a better method is developed.
> When we have accepted the necessity for a merchant-marine subsidy, we then face the question of how this money is to be most wisely spent, how the Treasury is to be safeguarded in these expenditures, and just what form these subsidies should take.

> It seems to me that the present system of aid in the form of compensation for the carrying of ocean mails might properly be replaced by specific subsidies granted for the maintenance of essential services. The subsidies granted should be based on differentials in building and operating costs but should be flexible enough to permit adjustments as changes in conditions and circumstances may warrant. Furthermore, subsidies should not be granted to more than one line competing in the same trade route.
> In order to facilitate the proper handling of subsidies, two broad classifications of subsidies might be made: First, a subsidy to cover the differences in shipbuilding costs so long as governmental policy provides for compensation for this differential; and, second, a subsidy to offset the difference in operating costs with competing foreign companies.

> Since the war, rapid strides have been made in ship construction, particularly with regard to more economic propulsion, coupled with a definite trend toward increased speed. For instance, when compared with the general run of machinery installed during the war period, a modern high-pressure, superheated-steam-engine installation would operate, if at the same speed, on 35 to 40 percent less fuel.

Mr. President, I have called attention to the particular item which has formed the basis of the opposition of the Senator from Tennessee to air-mail subsidies, or air-mail contracts which recognized subsidies; but I want to state to him that the subsidy principle must either be embraced, or else, as it applies to the merchant marine, we shall have to go off the sea, which, in my judgment, is unthinkable.

Mr. President, there was a special committee appointed by the House of Representatives in 1932 to study the subject of air-mail subsidies. That special committee was presided over by our distinguished and much-beloved Presiding Officer of the Senate, the Vice President. That special committee made a survey of the whole air-mail situation. After months of consideration it made its report and later submitted a proposed bill. That bill included the principle of subsidy. I do not wish the fact to be overlooked that that action was taken by a committee of the House of Representatives, the House being adverse to the administration which was then in power.

Mr. President, not only was that true, but the bill which is now pending before the Senate does not deny subsidy, but permits subsidy, so that the basis of the terrific opposition on the part of the Senator from Tennessee against both the air-mail subvention and the ocean-mail subvention is bound to fall, because in his own bill he permits such subventions, and necessarily so, of course. The air-mail business has not sufficiently progressed to the point where we can avoid assistance being given the industry by the Federal Government.

I admit, Mr. President, that there might be a question of whether the Government would be justified in giving a subsidy in the case of a domestic industry such as the air-transportation industry, which does not operate on the sea, over which we have control by law, and can determine the cost of labor, and so on, not embarrassed by the competition of a country which has a different rate of wage. In such a case there might be a question of whether we ought to exercise the principle of subsidy, but I think there is no doubt that we must do it. We are justified in doing it. It was done under the Watres Act. It was started even before the passage of the Watres Act. That principle is recognized, and, I think, justifiably so, in the pending bill, which is intended to amend the Watres Act or to be a substitute for it. It must be so.

Every Senator will recall the interest that was manifested in the possible development of aviation in its early days. I addressed the Senate some days ago, at which time I gave the genesis of the interest in aviation. I called attention to the National Aircraft Board headed by Dwight Morrow. I indicated at that time the purpose as well as the importance of building up a great aviation industry in the United States first as a means of national defense, the importance of which is unquestioned; and second, as a domestic industry for the employment of labor and the investment of capital.

I do not care to go over that phase of the subject at this time; but, the industry being quite young, when it was realized that it was important to build it up the Government followed the recommendation of the Aircraft Board and began to encourage the development of a great aviation industry in the United States, and I think very properly so.

At first the prospects for the industry of aviation were somewhat uncertain because of the concomitant hazards. Flying by airplane seemed to involve the almost absolute revocation of natural laws. The flying of a heavier-than-air vehicle involved the accomplishment of a feat which many people thought was absolutely impossible. Most of us have been amazed at what has been achieved in the face not only of adverse legislation but also of the opposition of natural laws. Aviation, however, is here, and it is here to stay. I know of no industry which has aroused so much enthusiasm on the part of those who were building it up as has this industry. I myself recall most distinctly the conferences which I personally enjoyed with my good friend Orville Wright, who only last fall spent an afternoon at my home talking over the possibilities of aviation. He recognizes, of course, that there still are hazards in connection with the operation of the industry; in fact, he said to me, "I would not fly over the Allegheny Mountains too often until at least there shall be greater safety in the operation of airplanes." Although he is the man who knows more about aviation, and especially the beginning of the industry, than does any other living man, he still has some doubt as to its safety under all circumstances.

I want it understood from the beginning that, while I have been interested in aviation, that interest has been only because it is an American achievement. It has not been because I have any interest of any character whatsoever in any aviation company of any kind. Outside of my acquaintanceship with Orville Wright and a casual acquaintance with Col. Paul Henderson, I do not know the persons about whom we are talking in connection with aviation. I have no acquaintance either with the president or with any member of the board of any of these aviation companies, so far as I recall.

Certainly I have no financial interest of any character in them, nor have I a dollar of stock in any kind of aviation company. I am not interested in them personally in any way, otherwise than that I have an ardent desire for the uninterrupted growth of the industry of aviation, of which we all ought to be proud. Therefore my interest in aviation, as displayed in the discussion of this question, has no personal element in it.

I regret that when my good friend, the leader of the majority in this body, in speaking on the subject some days ago, referred to a person who bears my name, it was the only time my name has been brought into the discussion in connection with aviation matters. I regret it was done, because I know the Senator from Arkansas and I know his motives; or, at least, I think I do. It seems to be rather a far-fetched conclusion that the strength of an argument in this body can be weakened or broken down by injecting anything personal into the debate. It so happens that the young man whose name was brought in has lived most of his life on the edge of Wilbur Wright Field. Nobody could live in that atmosphere without being interested in aviation. It so happens also that he is at the head of the aviation division of the Ohio Bar Association. It likewise happens that he is a student of aviation; and when a friend of his, associated with an aviation company, was flying a route that crossed the State of Ohio and needed legal advice, it was natural that he should employ the firm a member of which was the head of the aviation division of the Ohio Bar Association. If that is to be dragged in here, in order to weaken either the argument against the un-American act of canceling the air-mail contracts or to bolster up a contention that cannot be supported, it can only reflect upon the one who employs it and not upon the one against whom it is employed.

Mr. President, aviation, especially in its rights or in the conflict of its rights, presents a new problem. For instance, the important question is involved as to just what rights any company may have in flying over a man's farm. It used to be that the owner of a farm in America was regarded as the owner not only of the surface of the land but also of all above it as far as the sky and of all below it down to the center of the earth. Aviation involves that principle.

The question finally reached the courts, and the first comprehensive decision involving a discussion of these rights to be rendered by a Federal judge was delivered from the bench in Ohio 4 years ago. That decision is, by all odds, the most comprehensive statement of the rights of citizens of the country involved in a subject of this kind. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks a copy of that decision. It is headed "Rights of owners of property adjoining aviation field are defined by decision. Injunction against airport company sought on grounds of trespasses and maintenance of nuisance denied. Certain restrictions favoring complainants imposed." In view of the fact that this is such a comprehensive discussion in the form of a judicial opinion handed down from the bench, it becomes very important.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERTON in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio? Without objection, the decision will be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit A at the conclusion of Mr. FESS' remarks.)

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, my only interest in connection with this controversy is as to how far the Government shall be permitted to go in breaking down the contractual relations between citizen and Government. The circumstances surrounding the cancelation of the air-mail contracts, as detailed not only in the testimony before the special committee but also by the press, make it very important that all the facts be brought to the attention of the country. I know of nothing ever occurring in our history that has done such violence to American ideals, not only as those ideals are written in the law but also as they are embodied in judicial decisions, until they have become axiomatic of the rights of American citizens. Every one of those rights has been violated and wantonly violated. To me that is the most serious aspect of the entire situation.

All those who are acquainted with the beginning of American history will know upon what basis two parties developed in America. There were two schools of thought, and those two schools found their expression first in the Constitutional Convention. One school wanted to put the emphasis upon the rights of the citizens and the States. The other school wanted to emphasize the authority of the Federal Government. The central idea of those two philosophies may be expressed, in the first instance, by the word "liberty", which was the biggest thing in the minds of some of the members of that Convention, while the other may be expressed by the word "power", which was the biggest thing in the minds of certain other members of the Convention representing a different school of thought.

Based upon that difference a debate was waged in which the finest talent in the world was engaged. It is true that Jefferson was not in the convention. He was in France, but his great representative, James Madison, was there. George Mason, the author of the first civil rights bill in America, was there. George Mason better exemplified the principle of liberty than did Madison, because Madison did have a modified conviction on the question of order as against liberty; so that Madison, coming between as sort of a mollifier of the two ideas, not in the degree that Washington was, became known as the "Father of the Constitution", and rightly so.

Mr. President, as all students of our political history know, that conflict took two forms. One demanded a bill of rights, the other refused to accept the bill of rights. After a conference the Bill of Rights was omitted. The leading advocates against putting the bill of rights in the Constitution were Hamilton and men who thought like him. He reasoned in this way: A bill of rights is a decree of certain rights of the sovereign power to the people, but in the United States the sovereign power is in the people and if the sovereign power should grant to the people certain rights, it would be the people granting to themselves those rights. That argument was sustained by Madison, by Marshall, and men of that type prevailed, but not until they agreed that each State legislature, which was to act upon the ratification of the Constitution, should be permitted to submit, if it wanted to do so, amendments in the form of a bill of rights.

While it is true that this question was discussed in the Constitutional Convention as if it had never been up to that time discussed anywhere, the debate in Philadelphia on the Constitution does not compare with the debate in the Virginia Legislature when they came to ratify the Constitution. It will not be found in the Madison Papers, which are the minutes of the Constitutional Convention, but it will be found in Elliott's Debates, which record the debates in the various legislatures on the ratification of the Constitution. There is where we get the real contest between the idea of liberty, on the one hand, represented by a bill of rights, and authority, on the other hand, as represented by the Constitution itself.

Senators will recall that there were couriers running back and forth from Virginia to New York carrying news relating to the question of ratification. Three States had ratified in 1787, but in 1788 came the fight. The two pivotal States were New York and Virginia. The great voice in New York was Hamilton. The great voice in Virginia was not alone Madison, but was John Marshall as well, who afterwards came to be Chief Justice of the United States. As fast as events in the Virginia meeting took place, they would be carried to New York, and vice versa, and, as the Presiding Officer will recall, the action of the two conventions came pretty close together.

It is stated by biographers that probably no single achievement on the part of one individual in arguments ever surpassed that of Hamilton in New York where he had two thirds of the delegation against him led by the famous Melancthon Smith. Mr. Hamilton, with James Madison and John Jay, had written a series of manuscripts, taking individual articles of the Constitution and commenting upon them to the number of 85, which later have been published under the title of "The Federalist." The Federalist is regarded today as one of the three great authorities of all history on constitutional law or political science, the first being Plato's Republic, the second being Montesquieu's Spirit of the Laws, and the third being the arguments of Hamilton, Madison, and John Jay, published under the title of "The Federalist."

That same argument was carried into the ratifying meeting at New York, and it reached the point that Mr. Melancthon Smith, representing two thirds of the delegation against the Constitution, rose and admitted that Hamilton's argument was unanswerable and that he would vote for the ratification. He was the leader of the opposition. That led to favorable action in New York, but the great fight was in Virginia.

I hold in my hand a copy of Elliott's Debates, the volume that deals with Virginia. The great argument against the Constitution was made by Patrick Henry. That is very easily understood. Anyone who knows the background, the spirit, and the character of Henry, knows why he would oppose it. He was afraid first that the States were entirely eliminated, and that was very offensive to him. Secondly, he was afraid the liberty of the individual was entirely suppressed, and that likewise was very offensive to him. Thirdly, he believed there was too much authority given to the Executive rather than to the legislative. That was also very offensive to him. So we have what appears to be the anomalous fact that the father of the Revolution, the natural orator of the Republic to whom we owe more for the success of independence than probably to any other orator, found himself the bitter enemy of the Constitution and the leader in the Virginia convention against its ratification.

I have here some of Mr. Henry's objections. He speaks of the axioms of liberty. He calls for the adoption of the Bill of Rights. He demands assurance that there shall be no interference with religious freedom, or the freedom of the press, or the right to assemble and petition for the redress of grievances. He demands that every person shall be free from unreasonable searches and seizures. He makes a demand that excessive bail shall not be required. He states that no man is secure in his property rights under the Constitution as it is written without the Bill of Rights. He demands that there be a trial by a jury of peers. He demands that no person shall be charged with an offense without first being confronted with the charge in the form of an indictment, and that he shall not only have the privilege of having witnesses but shall have compulsory process to compel them to attend. He demands that every poor man unable to employ counsel shall have counsel provided for him at public expense, so that he may be assured that his rights shall not be jeopardized, and that he shall not, under a sham process, be denied a hearing.

It would be interesting to every American citizen to reread this argument of Patrick Henry on behalf of the Bill of Rights, in which he refused to vote for the ratification of the Constitution until the Bill of Rights was written into it, stating that that was more important than the mere authority of the Government to maintain order.

I shall not take the time of the Senate to read these statements. Mr. Henry mentions them in the form of axioms. Please note that this is the man who made the astonishing speech in Richmond on the famous occasion when he wrote the resolution and asked for its adoption, and then used the expression:

> As for me, give me liberty, or give me death!

In other words, the great word in the vocabulary of Patrick Henry was "liberty", as expressive of human rights.

Mr. Henry was followed by James Madison. Madison conceded all that Henry had said about the importance of the Bill of Rights; but he maintained that the rights of individuals would not be in jeopardy if the Constitution should be ratified, and I think he made a very strong argument in reply to Mr. Henry.

Madison was followed by the famous Randolph, who in many ways was next in oratorical ability to Mr. Henry. Randolph, in his debate in answer to Henry, made this statement.

> It has too often happened that powers delegated for the purpose of promoting the happiness of a community have been perverted to the advancement of the personal emoluments of the agents of the people; but the powers of the President are too well guarded and checked to warrant this illiberal aspersion.

Referring to the assertion made by Mr. Henry in his argument that the Constitution, unmodified and unaffected by a bill of rights, would lead to denial of the rights of the citizen.

Randolph continued:

> Let us candidly consider the consequences of the favorite plan of requisitions, and see whether, instead of imaginary or problematical, there be not real, palpable dangers.

Mr. President, the fact ought not to be overlooked that Mr. Randolph was one of the few men who refused to sign the Constitution when the convention adjourned; but, notwithstanding the fact that he refused to sign it, he undertook to refute the argument of Mr. Henry, and, I think, did a good job.

I think, however, that the greatest speech in reply to Henry was made by John Marshall. He employed a talent with which at that time the country was not familiar, but which later on it recognized when he became the Chief Justice of the United States.

Mr. President, here is the volume including the words of the famous members of that convention in Virginia, arguing pro and con on the ratification of the Constitution. The only objection which had been made to it was that it did not include a bill of rights to protect the citizen against the incursions of his Government. The argument to indicate the danger was made by great thinkers. The argument to refute the danger was made, I think, by greater thinkers.

Among that group were such men as George Wythe, a professor of law in the College of William and Mary, and, by the way, the teacher of James Madison, Thomas Jefferson, and later, Henry Clay. George Wythe took the position that the fears of Mr. Henry were not well founded; that under the Constitution these rights would be preserved.

The debate went on. It lasted for months, and finally the question came to a vote. The significant thing is that the vote was taken upon the question whether the convention would require the incorporation in the Constitution of a bill of rights as a condition of ratification. Patrick Henry forced a vote on the question, and while the proposal did not carry, it lost by only 8 votes.

A convention of the ablest group of men in America debated whether the State of Virginia should refuse to ratify the Constitution unless there was an agreement that a bill of rights should be incorporated in it as a condition of its ratification. The fact ought not to be overlooked that while the members of the convention voted down making the inclusion of a bill of rights a condition of ratification, they did endorse the submission of the Bill of Rights in the form of amendments to the Constitution.

So while Virginia did not refuse to ratify unless the Bill of Rights was incorporated as a part of the body of the Constitution, it placed its ratification on the basis that amendments involving the Bill of Rights would be offered to the Constitution.

So the first Congress which met under the new Constitution submitted to the various State legislatures amendments embodying a bill of rights; and those amendments, coming from various States—very largely copies of George Mason's bill of rights for Virginia of 1772, the first draft of such an instrument in America—were taken up by the various States, and were ratified at once. So the first 10 amendments to the Constitution of the United States were recommended by the first Congress which met under the Constitution, submitted at once to the legislatures, and ratified by three fourths of the legislatures without hesitancy and without delay, so that they became virtually a part of the Constitution; but they are in the form of amendments.

Mr. President, we must not overlook what those amendments are. They are our Bill of Rights, for which this fight was made. The fight was started in the Constitutional Convention. It was not ended until the amendments were added to the Constitution as an addendum. Let us see how they differed from what was demanded in Virginia.

No. 1:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

I think I am within the bounds of accuracy when I say that while sometimes we have come very close to infringing upon that amendment, it may be said as a fact that it is a part of the Constitution that has not been broken down. On the question of freedom of the press there has been bitter controversy now and then; but we have always held that it is better to permit anybody, whether by voice or press, to speak his own convictions and be responsible for any offense that may grow out of the statement, than to interfere in any degree with the freedom of speech or the freedom of the press.

I mean by that that not only do we pass laws limiting the freedom of the press, but we do not permit any practice looking to a limitation of the press.

I thought at one time that the adoption of codes for the regulation of business would lead to interference with the freedom of the press, and I suggested that we write an amendment to the National Recovery Act specifically exempting from the operation of any code the right to print whatever was thought wise or of importance. I had that in mind because, if codes were to operate on industries, of course the mechanics of getting out a newspaper, the employment of the staff, and so on, would fall under a code. But such regulation should never extend to interfering in the slightest degree with the utmost freedom of the press to express any opinion an editor might entertain. I am convinced that freedom of the press, even under the rigidity of any applicable code, will not be interfered with. If interference were attempted, it would not be very long-lived, I am certain.

When I speak of freedom of action as long as it is within the law, I refer to the fact that every man in the Senate and out of the Senate ought to be perfectly free to express himself without any effort toward duress, or any threat of vengeance or threat of being called to order merely because he might say something not in accordance with a program that is regarded as emergent. I do not care whether it is in the press or on the screen or over the radio; all of these facilities must be open to the men and women who do not believe that everything that is said and recommended is wise. The way ought to be open to citizens to fearlessly and courageously call attention to proposals which are unwise. That freedom is written in the very organic law and the make-up of our people.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BONE in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the able Senator from Ohio whether he has in his mind at this time the thought that there has been any violation, where, under the assumption of a code, or for any other reason, there has been any action by the administration or its officers that has tended to restrain the press or restrain speech? I notice the able Senator said that he feared such could be done, and was on the eve of tendering an amendment. I should like to ask my able friend whether anything happened to justify his fears.

Mr. FESS. The matter arose when we talked about how far the code could extend toward regulating newspapers.

Mr. LEWIS. I asked the Senator whether he had noted any action on the part of the administration tending to violate the right to which he has referred.

Mr. FESS. I have heard fugitive statements, but nothing official.

Mr. LEWIS. I am glad to have the Senator's viewpoint, because, if there were anything in it, I would join with him in protesting against it.

Mr. FESS. I know the Senator would.

Another particular of the bill of rights refers to the maintenance of a militia for each State. That was one of the subjects that was fearlessly discussed by Henry, who claimed that the President, under the Constitution, was the Chief of the Army and Navy and, as such, could make the local militia of no value. Of course there is not much force in that statement, although we have it here.

> No soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

All of our citizens who are familiar with that particular period of history know why that was put in. It was because the British Government had quartered its soldiers in the homes of citizens in many places in New England and in other sections of the country. That was one of the objectives that was very bitterly discussed.

Next comes an amendment I want the country to note:

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated; and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized.

That provision looks not only to securing the citizen against unreasonable seizures and searches but especially to arm the officers to secure the evidence necessary for the purpose for which he wants to employ it.

The fifth amendment is the one that is the most important:

No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia—

Which is a purely military matter, and there is another provision to cover that—when in actual service in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property—

With special emphasis in this time on the words "or property"— without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

Mr. President, that is as instinctive in American life as the instincts of the human being. It is an inalienable right, that no person can be deprived of his property without due process of law. Property does not mean merely physical property, but it includes rights. Whether these are political rights, natural rights, or civil rights, it matters not.

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation.

He is—

To be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense.

Mr. President, the lowest criminal in the lowest level of human existence, if he is under the American flag, knows that he cannot be found guilty without a trial. There can be no such thing as a court rendering a decision against him without opportunity being afforded to refute the charges made against him. There is no violation of an American right that is so poignant as finding a man guilty without giving him a right to appear to reply to the charges that are made against him.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. The very interesting argument the Senator is making ought to be accurate as to the law which he states. The law which he is reading, of course, has no application to civil matters; it applies to criminal matters. I do not understand that the Senator wants to take the position that a man is always entitled to a trial before the cancelation of a contract.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I do take the position that no contract can be canceled on the ground of fraud unless the fraud is first established.

Mr. LOGAN. Then what is the remedy given by the Constitution in the event a contract should be canceled improperly? Do not the Constitution and the laws afford a plain and adequate remedy for such a wrong as that?

Mr. FESS. One could recover damages provided the party canceling the contract could be brought into court; but the Senator knows that no person can sue the United States without its consent.

Mr. LOGAN. Let me ask, if the Senator will be so kind, because I know he is always careful about accuracy in his statements, is he unaware of the fact that the bill now under consideration particularly and specifically confers upon the Court of Claims the authority to hear any claim any of these air-mail companies may have against the Government and authorizes them to go into court and recover damages for any injury that may have been done them?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, that is a feeble attempt to redress a wrong which has been committed, which should never have been committed, and I feel sure the Senator from Kentucky agrees with me.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not arguing the point about whether it was proper to cancel or not without notice. That is a matter in the past. But since it has already been done, and the Senator says there is but one remedy left, I want to point out the fact that that remedy is made available if this bill shall be passed; and if any wrong was done, then the wrong may be remedied.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I agree with the position stated by the Senator. The thing is done. It ought to be undone. The Senator will not make that statement, but I know he believes that it ought to be undone. But since it is not undone, then the only thing left is to go to the courts for damages. The pending bill proposes to give authority to sue the United States. In that degree it is of value.

Mr. LOGAN. We are agreed on that, but I should like to call to the Senator's attention the contracts themselves. When the airline companies signed the contracts, they agreed, without any requirement that they should have notice, that the contracts might be canceled upon the happening of certain contingencies. Therefore, is not the Senator of the opinion that the companies perhaps waived any right of notice of hearing?

Mr. FESS. No, Mr. President; I do not agree to that proposition. I do agree to the proposition which the Senator stated a moment ago, that the court is open under the authority given in this bill, if it shall pass. That much is an effort to cure a wrong that has been committed.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator, of course, as a former professor of law, is familiar with the proposition that when fraud is discovered by one party to a contract, that party has the right to cancel the contract; and that if cancelation is not made by the party after knowledge has come to him of fraud in the initiation of the contract, that may be considered as a waiver.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator does not mean what he stated. If a fraud in a contract is discovered, the party who is harmed is not held to the contract. It does not mean that such party can cancel the contract without a hearing, but he can refuse to abide by the contract, and then if there is a damage resulting, the other party can be brought into court.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I used the wrong term. I used the word "cancelation" instead of "rescission." There is an undoubted rule which every lawyer recognizes, and which every court from time immemorial has recognized, that where there is fraud in the initiation of a contract the party defrauded has the right to rescind the contract and throw the burden on the other party to go into court and ask for damages. By the terms of the bill which is now before the Senate for consideration, the right is guaranteed to the contracting parties with the Government, if they feel that they have any claim which they can sustain in court, of going into court and sustaining their claim.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I agree with what the Senator meant to say. There are two kinds of contracts.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to stand on what I say, and not on what the Senator from Ohio thinks I mean to say.

Mr. FESS. It is what I think the Senator means to say. There are two kinds of contracts. The void contract can be abruptly ended because it is void, in that it never was legal; it is void because it was not legal from the beginning. And any contract that is voidable, as the Senator knows, stands until it is voided, but it cannot be voided without establishing that it is a fraudulent contract.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Of course the Senator is perfectly familiar with the principle that the ordinary weapon of a party who has been defrauded is to rescind the contract, to refuse to conform to it, and then to throw on the other party the burden of going into court and establishing his damages, a right which is guaranteed by this very bill in the interest of the principle contended for by the Senator.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the proposed legislation is an effort to cushion the injury which has been committed by a government which cannot be sued except upon its own consent, and which ought to be the first and last to see that no man's rights are denied him. There is not a Senator on the other side of the Chamber who is free from bias who would agree to the committing of such a wrong. I know that if we could strip this whole performance of what lies back of it, there is not a Senator in this Chamber who would justify what has been done. It would be undone at once if it were not so embarrassing to undo it. The only reason why I feel hurt at the President of the United States is that whereas at any moment he could have redressed this wrong, he has not done so, and for that reason we will have to hold him responsible for the wrong which has been committed. If it were out of his hands so he could not rectify it, that would be an entirely different matter, but it never has been out of his hands. He could have rectified it at any moment.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I rise only to observe that, in my judgment, there is little or nothing added to the law by the proposed bill insofar as concerns the right and opportunity for one aggrieved to go into the Court of Claims. It is my position that that right already exists, and that nothing more is offered by the terms of this bill than the right already existing.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I am impressed with the statement of the Senator from Nevada—not only because it seems perfectly clear to me but also because of the background of a judicial mind of recognized ability.

I have taken the time, Mr. President, to call attention to the importance of the Bill of Rights from the very beginning of our Government. The only justification that I could possibly have in taking the time of the Senate is to indicate with all the emphasis that I can command that the thing that was done, and the way it was done, will never admit of any justification, and I am afraid it will become a precedent which ultimately might deny the very principles that were adopted in the Constitutional Convention, which principles the great State of Virginia, before she would ratify, provided must be written into the Constitution.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator speaks of the action with respect to the air-mail contracts becoming a precedent. From the beginning of our Government, I am told, contracts conceived by a department as being fraudulent have uniformly been abrogated and the contractor left to such remedies as the law would give him. That it has been done constantly not only in one department but in every department of the Government, and even in the Post Office Department, and even about the very matter under discussion, air mail, and even by a Republican Postmaster General, Mr. Harry New, who used to serve in the Senate with us before he became Postmaster General, who canceled an air-mail contract because he conceived that it was fraudulent.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee in attempting to weaken or dilute or lessen the intense feeling of resentment of the American people over the death of 10 of our Army pilots rose in the Senate and referred to the great number of boys who had been in training in the aviation fields for the Army and Navy, as well as commercially, and then stated that concerning them I had never raised my voice in protest; that I had no feeling whatever about the lives of those poor boys.

One can understand the extremity that anyone is in who undertakes to break down the effect of such a wrong committed by our Government by making such citations. The Senator undertakes to defend an indefensible act, a wanton wrong, conceded to be a wrong by everybody, and undertakes to make it seem less reprehensible by stating that some other Postmaster General has done the same thing. Of course, that is not true. No Postmaster General ever committed any such wrong as that which the present Postmaster General has committed.

All I need, Mr. President, is to ask the Senator from Tennessee to read the editorials, Nation-wide, from every locality in America commenting upon this performance, editorials written by men who have no interest and who are in no way influenced by any particular interest. I think, Mr. President, there is no better way for us to get a general cross section of opinion on a question of this kind than by the editorials which are written on the subject we are now discussing. For that reason I am going to ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks some editorials from newspapers throughout the Nation in regard to the cancelation of the air-mail contracts.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BONE in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Of course, Mr. President, I have no intention of objecting to the request of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I do not want the Senator to object, because if he does, and they are not ordered printed in the RECORD, I will have to read them.

Mr. CLARK. I have, of course, no intention of objecting to the Senator from Ohio putting anything he pleases in the RECORD in the way of editorials, but the Senator has been making an argument here, claiming that there has been a violation of the Bill of Rights of the Constitution and a violation of the universal law of contracts, and when the Senator from Tennessee asked him a specific question as to where that violation lies the Senator from Ohio attempts to put a lot of editorials in the RECORD.

Mr. FESS. No.

Mr. CLARK. As I say, I have no intention of objecting to his doing so, but I should like to have the Senator from Ohio come back to his proposition of demonstrating wherein a violation of the Constitution, or of any recognized law of contract, lies in the rescission of the air-mail contracts.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I will do that now. On loose testimony, assumed to be conclusive proof, without any chance to refute it, without a hearing, the Postmaster General cancels these contracts and breaks or destroys an industry that cannot be built up at once. I am not so much concerned about the industry that is broken down, for it can, in time, build up again, if conditions are made so that it may rebuild, but what I am complaining about is the procedure based upon testimony—I assume that was it, because that is what Postmaster General Farley said—that was from the very beginning made up of loose utterances that could be refuted, but to refute which no opportunity has been afforded. Now, when we talk about taking time to bring in witnesses to refute these allegations we are charged with killing time and going outside the realm of the investigation. I will admit that that is not within the realm of the investigation as it is being carried on, but it would be within the realm of an investigating committee whose business was to get the facts on both sides as well as on one side.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the Senator speaks of "loose testimony" before the committee. I am frank to say that I have not read the whole record of the testimony before the committee, but I have listened to a good deal of loose argument here today from my distinguished friend from Ohio. The Senator is talking about the Bill of Rights and the law of contracts. I should like the Senator specifically to point out the provision in the Bill of Rights that is violated by the rescission of the air-mail contracts by the Postmaster General of the United States or the principles of the law of contracts well recognized by all the courts of the United States and England which are violated by that action. If the Senator wants to attack the advisability of the action, that is one thing, but he cannot interweave, to any logical mind, the advisability and the legality of the action of the Postmaster General.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, it is perfectly obvious that the conduct of the Postmaster General will be approved by those who are interested in preventing breaking down the morale of the administration. The Postmaster General will have advocates on the floor of the Senate no matter what his conduct may be. I need no further evidence than what is now demonstrated here.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I think it is perfectly apparent, what has been apparent in the Senate for several weeks, that, so far from there being any political motive for support of the action taken by the Postmaster General of the United States, there is a very determined drive on the part of certain Senators on the other side of the aisle—and I do not include the whole Membership on the other side of the aisle—to undertake to use this matter as a political leverage to restore purely political prestige which has been very well and very long lost. There has been an attempt in the Senate to take advantage of certain unfortunate accidents which have occurred outside the ordinary operations of the Army aviation service but to no greater extent than in ordinary course to make a political condemnation of the President of the United States and the Postmaster General.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I do not intend to interrupt the Senator from Ohio for more than a passing comment. The remarks of the Senator from Missouri certainly invite the reply, that we on this side of the aisle undertook to postpone the consideration of the pending legislation in order that it might be dealt with nonpolitically and on the facts and on evidence, not as yet completely taken. When that position was overridden by a vote, thereupon I stated that I thought the most recent suggestion in reference to this matter was that of the President, to the effect that a commission be created by legislation for the purpose of making a broad study of all features, civil as well as military, of aeronautics. I then announced that I favored that procedure, and would try to submit here a resolution which would embody that plan but which would in the meantime prevent any prejudgment of the issue by simply leaving the situation in the status it was before the cancelation. Mr. President, did I get any reaction from any Democratic Senator on that subject? I have to confess that I did not. In view of that circumstance, I wonder whether it will be possible for me to submit a resolution without being charged with putting the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle in an embarrassing position and doing it for political purposes, when, God knows, that my objective is in some way to save the institution of aviation.

Unfortunately, there can be no discussion, apparently, of this matter without a keen political feeling being aroused over it; and there are many of us in a state of mind where we believe that, instead of now enacting sound, constructive legislation, we are likely to make a hasty judgment in this matter and come to a wrong conclusion, whereas if we will retain the status quo and put it over until the next session, as suggested by the President, we may make some real contribution to the legislation on the subject. That is what I should like to see done.

I should like to see the day come when the committee which has been investigating this question will talk things over with reference to some legislation. Have we done that? Not at all. Not one word about legislation has passed in our committee. Why? Because we have not finished our study. We commenced only a few days ago upon the contribution of evidence to this subject by the minority. There is more of it to go into the record involving very constructive information. There is no evidence whatever upon which any Senator may tell the Senate today exactly what the net effect of the cancelation of the air-mail contracts was upon the public service. I think we are having that material gathered together in form so that perhaps in a week's time it can go into the record. There is no evidence upon which we can argue to the Senate what the institution was before the cancelation took place. I think we have that material all gathered together by the Department of Commerce and ready to be introduced in evidence, and it will in due season be introduced, as soon as we can possibly arrive at it. Yet we are about to try to enact some permanent air-mail legislation. Is it not possible we may arrive at a temporary adjustment of this matter which will not prejudge anything and which will enable us to follow the suggestions of the President, in which I believe?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senator from Ohio in the pursuance of his speech, but will he yield to me for the purpose of asking the Senator from Vermont a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I happen to know the Senator from Vermont is an excellent lawyer. I should like to ask him if he knows of any violation of the Bill of Rights or the Constitution or the well-recognized law of contract by the rescission on the part of the United States Government of the air-mail contracts. If so, I should like him to point it out.

Mr. AUSTIN. On the record I am obliged to answer "yes" to that question. On the evidence as I have heard it there is not a diffused suggestion of collusion or fraud or any other cause that would justify a private person or a sovereignty in cancelation or rescission.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Vermont of course knows that this is a matter of the adjudication of private rights which can be adjudicated in damages in exactly the same way as an individual who felt himself damaged by rescission of a contract.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to enable me to make a comment about the last statement of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Has the time come when a contract has no other sacredness, no other binding effect, except to furnish an action at law for damages? If it has, then the Bill of Rights might just as well be scrapped, and if that doctrine were applied, it would be scrapped.

Mr. CLARK. That has been the rule from the earliest dawn of Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is a remedy, of course, but the idea that contractors enter upon their contracts with the notion that they have a right to breach the contracts is entirely in conflict with our theory of justice.

Mr. CLARK. It has been my understanding of the theory of Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence that a party who felt himself aggrieved or defrauded, as the Government of the United States had the right to feel in this case, could rescind his contract, and that the other party, if he felt himself aggrieved by the rescission, had the right to go into court and maintain his rights, which, with one exception, the complainants in these cases have notably failed to do.

Mr. AUSTIN. The situation described by the Senator from Missouri is not the situation of the parties here involved. Here was a sovereign power which stepped in, which could not be sued like a private individual who violates a contract——

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Vermont will not deny that there has not been any complaint?

Mr. AUSTIN. May I finish? I trust I am not taking too much time in answering the claim made by the Senator from Missouri, but I should like to finish my statement.

The right to bring a suit to recover monetary damages in the Court of Claims is an imperfect remedy and is not an adequate one. These parties have tried the equitable remedy, and what has happened? They have been excluded from it under the claim that they were suing the United States Government when they undertook to enjoin the official who went outside of his authority and undertook to perform an act which the law did not authorize him to perform, under the guise of his office and under the guise of an ancient statute. That is the situation according to the facts.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to enable me to answer that suggestion as a legal proposition?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. In response to what the Senator from Vermont said, I should like to place in the RECORD section 250 of the Judicial Code, title 28, United States Code, which reads:

> The Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the following matters:
> Claims against the United States. All claims (except for pensions) founded upon the Constitution of the United States or any law of Congress, upon any regulation of the executive department, upon any contract, express or implied, of the Government of the United States, or for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort, in respect of which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States either in a court of law, equity, or admiralty, if the United States were suable.

Mr. President, the answer to what the Senator from Vermont has said is not that there is not a court in which the complainants may have a fair presentation of their claims but the fact that they do not wish to go into a court of competent jurisdiction and have adjudicated the actions of Postmaster General Brown and some of the air-mail companies in arriving at the contracts.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. The situation presented by that statute is that all these parties can recover, if they elect to proceed under that statute, is monetary damages, and that is entirely inadequate. It does not meet the situation. It does not prevent the destruction of this great institution. It does not restore the good will. No litigant ever would be able to recover monetary damages in the Court of Claims that would remedy the great havoc and destruction that was created by this breach of contract.

Mr. CLARK. The proposition just advanced by the Senator from Vermont amounts to this, that having claimed they had no tribunal of adequate jurisdiction into which the companies could go, he now shifts ground and says there is no adequate measure of damages which they could establish in that court. The fact is they are afraid to go into court for very obvious reasons.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think the Senator from Missouri did not understand my previous remarks. I have never claimed there was no tribunal. I pointed out to him there was that very tribunal under that very statute, and made the claim originally that it was an inadequate remedy. The Senator from Vermont has not shifted his position. He stands right where he did at the start.

The contractors whose contracts were canceled have no adequate remedy. The amendment proposed in the nature of a substitute for the pending bill provides such a remedy, for it enables them to go into the district courts of the United States in the usual way and as other contractors may, as well as to seek the benefits of section 250. It is obvious to any lawyer that if they elect one of these remedies they are probably barred from the other, and therefore we have the explanation why these parties have not sought a remedy under section 250.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to have the Senator from Vermont explain why the aviation companies or the airline companies of the United States should be placed in a different position than any other corporation or any other individual in the United States, having a special remedy created for them and a special right to elect the tribunal in which they desire to try their cases.

Mr. AUSTIN. It is because they are the first citizens of the country since the days of George III and his oppressive governing of the colonials who have ever been so treated. They have been singled out. They need some special legislation, and it is for this purpose that such legislation is offered.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the colloquy initiated by the Senator from Missouri indicates the very unfortunate position into which the Government of the United States has gotten itself. He defends an indefensible wrong, a violation of the most instinctive right in America; and he undertakes to soften that offense by saying that those who have been injured can go into the Court of Claims seeking damages by authority of the pending legislation. He entirely ignores the unfairness of a sovereign power, acting as its own prosecutor, court, and dictator, by its own ipse dixit committing a wrong against its citizen, knowing that the citizen cannot have redress except by the assent of the Government through the slow process of the Court of Claims; and the Senator undertakes to palliate an offense that never before has been committed against American citizens up to this good hour by making that sort of a rejoinder. To me it is pitiable that our Government—the promoter of rights among men, the defender of the liberty of its citizens—is itself taking advantage by its own dictum, knowing there is no redress except by the consent of the Government committing the offense or the wrong. It is a pitiable situation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I asked the Senator a while ago if the rescission of these contracts was not in exact accord with the precedent set by Postmaster General New.

Mr. FESS. No; it is not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator permit me to give him the exact case?

Mr. FESS. The Senator may do that in his own time.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator declines to let me state the exact facts with reference to what was done by Harry New as Postmaster General?

Mr. FESS. The Senator may do that in his own time.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will do it in my own time; but I should think the Senator in fairness, when he makes the assertion that this never had been done before, and that it was unfair, ought to be willing to have the precedent in the case of Postmaster General New set forth.

Mr. FESS. The Senator can have all the time he wishes when he takes the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. FESS. I have been an observer of the methods employed by the special committee in the examination of witnesses—police methods. That sort of thing can be done in a committee, but it cannot be done in the United States Senate; at least not with a Senator. Senators may take what time they need, but they cannot put another Senator on the witness stand and conduct a controversy with him as if the Senate were a divorce court or a police court.

I state again, and nobody is going to contradict the assertion, that there never has been such a performance—arrogant, wanton, and indefensible—as the cancelation of 34 contracts on the allegation of fraud on the part of a Postmaster General who let only 2 or 3 of the 34 contracts.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. There never has been such a performance in our Government as that indefensible transaction; and no amount of defense or argument in the Senate or elsewhere in commendation of that indefensible act will be able to convince the American people that it was just.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to state to the Senator that it is not my intention to interrupt him during his speech, and I would not have done so now had he not made the statement—as I understood him—that no one would deny that there had never before been such action as the Postmaster General took. That is what I understood the Senator to say. I desire to state to him that I shall show later that contracts have been canceled in exactly that way by the Post Office Department since the formation of the Government, many of the cases having gone to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama has a chore before him. I shall be glad to be present when he performs it. This colloquy indicates the extremes to which apologists for an act for which there can be no apology are willing to go in order to escape the contempt of the American people for such conduct. It is pitiable to me.

We have been told that this performance was due to fraud and illegality; that fraud was charged against the companies. If fraud had been charged against them in the proper way, and the statement had been made, "You will be given time to show why your contract should not be canceled", so that the companies could have been heard in court, nobody would have raised any question about it.

The distinguished leader of the Senate took occasion to speak on this subject, confining himself entirely to one of these companies which he charged was the chief offender. I have examined for the second time the testimony given about that company under adverse examiners. I have no interest in that or any other company except to see that it has fair play. I have taken the time to get the facts about the company which was the subject of indictment by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I mention him only because he made the address, and confined his speech to that company. Since he is the leader of this body, anything he says of course is regarded with great weight.

I propose to take the time to give the facts about that company, and we will see whether or not the charges that were made are sustained. Those charges were based upon what the Senator called documentary evidence which had been secured by the Special Investigating Committee.

The Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation was organized in December 1928 as a result of months of effort on the part of a few civic-minded Pittsburghers to enlist local support for a substantial aviation company. The primary purpose of the proposed company was to secure for Pittsburgh the position on the air transportation map which its importance as a commercial center justified, and further to foster and develop such allied aviation activities as would benefit the community. This purpose may be summed up by the phrase which was adopted by the company at its inception: "To make Pittsburgh an aviation center."

This company was organized not alone for the purpose of using the air, but for the purpose of creating subsidiaries upon which a successful air service could be built, including not only airports but training schools and other units upon which an aviation industry must depend.

Preliminary efforts to secure local support were, for a number of reasons, drawn out over a considerable period of time. First, because of the inherent difficulties of weather and terrain, western Pennsylvania was far behind many other localities in aviation development. Consequently, there were no real activities from which the public could derive an impression of the possibilities of this new industry. There was also an attendant and apathetic ignorance of what was developing nationally in the aviation field.

That was true not only with reference to Pittsburgh but generally.

In order to demonstrate that the business held promise of a definite future, and that Pittsburgh should get busy at once, an aviation party was personally financed by five individuals to visit some of the airports and the aircraft- and engine-manufacturing plants in the East. Over 100 of the leading citizens in business, financial, and civic life took the week-end trip in the early summer of 1928. The character and purpose of this trip, and its importance to the Pittsburgh district, are evidenced by the following statement and resolution, as reported in the proceedings of the Council of the City of Pittsburgh (Municipal Record, Monday, July 16, 1928; vol. LXII, no. 29—Mr. Winters):

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will not the Senator advise me as to the record from which he is now reading? I did not catch the reference, if the Senator informed us before.

Mr. FESS. I am reading largely from the testimony of Mr. Monroe before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads only a few days ago. Information on certain points of doubt was secured from him upon my request. As I recall, he is the secretary of the association.

What I am reading is an extract from the minutes of the council of Pittsburgh. What I desire to show is that it was a community interest which made possible the company, a contract which was arraigned here by the distinguished leader on the other side. I read:

> Mr. President, I desire to make a report and record concerning the trip some of the members of council, City Clerk Robert Clark, Director Edward G. Lang, and Chief Engineer Charles M. Reppert, of the department of public works, made last week as the guests of a party sponsored by Messrs. Taylor, Allderdice, William G. Costin, W. L. Monro, Norman Allderdice, and George R. Hann, who had invited the entire membership of council to accompany their party to New York in the interest of aviation. It was one of the finest-arranged trips I have every enjoyed, and I am sure that my colleagues, Herron, McArdle, and Little, Mr. Clark, Mr. Lang, and Mr. Reppert will join me in saying that we were very much pleased with the same. This trip was made for the purpose of advertising Pittsburgh and her interest and purpose of being fully informed with the up-to-date questions of aviation and flying fields.
> The delegation, made up of 110 representative Pittsburghers in the city's activities, visited three flying fields—Curtiss Field, Mitchel Field, and Roosevelt Field—and also met a number of the most famous flyers of the present day, among them Commander Byrd, Clarence Chamberlain, Colonel Goebel, and several others.
> The party left Pittsburgh on Thursday evening, had breakfast at the Pennsylvania Hotel in New York on Friday morning at 8 o'clock, and at 9 o'clock they went to Curtiss Field, where an inspection of the workshop and the field was made. At noon we had luncheon at the Garden City Hotel as the guests of the Curtiss Co. After lunch the party left for Farmingdale, some in busses and some taking the ride in an airplane, of which the speaker was one, and enjoyed it immensely. Here the party inspected the Fairchild works and field.
> Colonel Goebel, the winner of the $25,000 prize for the flight from San Francisco to Honolulu, did some exciting and interesting stunts for the entertainment of the party. * * *
>
> All of the city representatives had a ride in an airplane and seaplane, and I am sure came home very enthusiastic.
>
> On the question of aviation and its future as it affects Pittsburgh taking her proper place as one of the great cities of the world, we should lose no time in putting all force of public opinion and our business men behind a concerted effort to secure results as speedily as possible, lest we find ourselves in the same position that we did with the automobile industry. Pittsburgh, making the material and everything used in the automobile, has not a single plant making automobiles, and, as I have been informed, through lack of interest of the proper sort, allowed the industry to get away from our city.
> Mr. President, I again want to repeat that the sponsors of this trip treated us royally and advertised Pittsburgh tremendously; and I move you that a vote of thanks be tendered to the committee sponsoring this trip for their kindness in inviting the members of council and city officials to accompany them and to congratulate them on the success of the venture.
> Which motion prevailed.

From the interest resulting, finances to the amount of something in excess of $1,000,000 were raised for a company which was entirely in the nature of a community enterprise. This financing was a long-drawn-out, difficult task, civic pride being appealed to rather than dividend possibilities. The final result, however, was the first really constructive and businesslike move for aviation development in western Pennsylvania—a company composed of more than 200 stockholders, all of whom were residents of the Pittsburgh district and representing a cross section of the community.

The nature of the enterprise and its freedom from control by any individual or group interests is evidenced by the fact that of the 46,312 shares of stock issued and outstanding, the largest holding of any individual or corporation is 1,200 shares, or 2.58 percent of the total. Also, the directors of Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary companies which carried out its different activities totaled 58. The board was made purposely large in order to assure the cooperation of every possible branch of business and commercial life.

In connection with the formation of Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, it should also be pointed out that the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce played a most important part, by arousing public interest, and by seeking to bring together all those who could be of help in this project. When the company started business, the chamber of commerce gave its public endorsement, printed in the chamber's official magazine under date of January 12, 1929, and reading as follows:

Endorsement of Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation by the board of directors of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce at their meeting on Thursday, January 10, 1929:

Whereas the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce has been deeply interested and especially active for the last several years in the development of aeronautics and of the airplane industry in the Pittsburgh district; and

Whereas the industrial expansion committee of the Pittsburgh chamber has for the last 2 years devoted considerable effort investigating the possibilities of this industry, looking to the establishment of plants manufacturing airplanes, airplane engines, parts and accessories thereof in the Pittsburgh district—

I wish that the breadth of the activities of this company, as represented in this resolution of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, might be observed. It was not a flying company simply, it was to establish for the region around Pittsburgh plants for "manufacturing airplanes, airplane engines, parts, and accessories."

I continue the reading:

Whereas this committee of the chamber, as a result of such investigation, is convinced of the need of some effective and coordinated plan providing for financial assistance and business guidance to this new and rapidly developing industry in all its phases; and

Whereas the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation has recently been organized by a group of business leaders, counseling with the industrial expansion committee, and the purpose of this organization is to lend such financial assistance and business guidance, and also to encourage all forms of aviation activities in the Pittsburgh district, with the view to make Pittsburgh an aviation center: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce commends the public-spirited enterprise which has promoted the organization of this corporation and heartily endorses the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation;

Further, that the chamber of commerce tenders its services, especially that of the committee on industrial expansion and of all other interested committees and divisions of the chamber, in the promotion of the work of this corporation.

So spoke the official business organization of the city of Pittsburgh when it was endorsing the efforts to make Pittsburgh an aviation center.

This sponsorship has been continued to date purely with the desire of aiding a public-spirited enterprise which has contributed materially to the growth and progress of the community.

Prior to the formation of Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, and ever since the first day business started, every effort was and has been made to bring into the company such projects as were proved, upon careful analysis, to be soundly conceived, businesslike in nature, and with promise of future expansion and success. This was not done with the purpose of creating a monopoly, but, as was stated in the president's report at the meeting of the board of directors on Wednesday, April 29, 1929, for the following reasons:

Aviation being in the initial stages of its development, that industry in Pittsburgh could have been permitted to evolve along one of two lines, either through the medium of a dozen or more small and frequently unsound projects, some of which of necessity would duplicate operations and inevitably work at cross-purposes, or it could be directed from the standpoint of the benefit to the community as a whole. To accomplish the latter purpose a large consolidated company was formed with ample capital to cover the same operations as would a dozen smaller companies but in a businesslike, progressive, and cooperative manner.

Thus was the purpose stated by the president of the company. Unfortunately, the majority of proposals considered could not qualify under close scrutiny. Quoting from the minutes of the meeting of the directors on January 16, 1929:

It was the sense of the board that the general policy of the company, as outlined by the president, in refusing to cooperate with unsound aviation projects was the only policy the company could take.

The principal idea of these projects seemed to be the establishment of an air line with a few thousand dollars, without regard to the tremendous amount of development work and the capital necessary before the air line could begin to be successful. Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation has always held, and this contention has been universally proved, that from 80 to 90 percent of the work of an air-transport company is on the ground, in the establishment of adequate airports, airways, and airway facilities, in the training of an organization to carry on the service safely and efficiently, in the education of the public to use air mail and air express, and to accept the airplane as a necessity to modern business and social life. Anyone can buy an airplane or a number of airplanes and have them flown from point to point. No public-service business of this character, however, can be properly conducted without the groundwork essential to the safety of the traveling public, the protection of both private and Government property, and the safeguarding of the investor.

Mr. President, I should like to know what we are to expect under the legislation now pending, which restricts a company flying the mail to doing nothing else but flying passengers and the mail. What is needed is not simply flying; that is only from 10 to 20 percent of the work. The main work is on the ground, and that requires adequate airports and adequate airways and airway facilities, training of the organization to carry on the service, and so on; all of which, or at least most of which, is specifically denied in the legislation we are now discussing.

It was with that understanding of the problems ahead that the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation started business as a holding company, with five wholly owned subsidiary corporations covering all phases of the aviation activities, the name indicating the purpose of each organization. These five organizations were:

First. Pittsburgh Air Transport Corporation. That is the one operating in the air.

Second. Pittsburgh Management Corporation. That is the one operating at headquarters.

Third. Pittsburgh Aviation Securities Corporation. That is the one dealing with the issuance and management of securities to secure the necessary capital.

Fourth. Pittsburgh Aerial Survey Corporation. That deals with airways and airway facilities.

Fifth. Pittsburgh Aircraft Agency Corporation.

Mr. President, I digress long enough to say that the bitterness with which holding companies have been attacked in the last 2 years has increased, and they are receiving the maximum of criticism and attack at the present hour. I do not defend such companies when they are organized for the purpose of evading the law or avoiding taxation; but a holding company which is within the law ought not to come in for such a terrific indictment as we have heard made in the Senate. Where there is one company which manufactures airplanes, and another company which manufactures parts for airplanes, and another company which manufactures something else that must be used, I see no legitimate opposition to permitting a holding company to become the director of the three companies, if it is necessary to effect a successful aviation transport company. If there is any effort to evade any law, let us make the law such as to prevent evasion. I will join in doing that; but it is not common sense to say that none but an operating company can have anything to do with the air-mail business.

As of December 31, 1930, these subsidiary companies, with the exception of the Pittsburgh Air Transport Corporation—that is the one operating in the air—were dissolved, and their assets taken over by the parent concern. This was done in order to simplify the corporate structure, and to eliminate unnecessary bookkeeping and other expense.

Pittsburgh Air Transport Corporation maintained its identity, since it held a certificate of public convenience from the Public Service Commission of Pennsylvania for intrastate and freight operations. The first step taken by the company was to secure the services of a technical staff.

Mr. President, the report of the Aircraft Board, which is always regarded or referred to as the last word in recommendations in the building-up of an aviation industry, states that one of the essential things for an aviation company, and without which it should not be given a contract, is the maintenance of a technical staff. When a plane is coming into an airport the pilot may be embarrassed by reason of some engine trouble.

There ought to be someone on the ground who can immediately rectify the trouble. Not only that, but if an industry such as aviation—which is new, which is only in its infancy—is ever to grow, the only way in which it can grow is by the maintenance of a technical staff which is up to the minute concerning the last thing in the improvement of the craft.

We all recognize how often great industrial plants go down in the race of competition because they do not keep up with the progress of a competitor. Take, for example, the manufacturer of electric fans. In my town we had a plant which was regarded as one of the best in the land. It maintained contracts with such organizations as Henry Ford and the General Electric Co. The plant was in competition with the Westinghouse Co. The Westinghouse organization has kept on its technical staff the best experts money can procure from any place in the world. They bring them from Germany, and from every other center of research. The result was that the company in my town, not maintaining a technical staff of that nature, fell back in the race for improvement in electrical appliances; and its first notice of the fact was loss of the contract with Henry Ford, which was transferred to a company better equipped, because it had utilized a better technical staff. The result was that the Ohio company, which was the largest employer of labor in my community, went into the hands of the receiver, wholly because it had not maintained a sufficient technical staff to keep up with the inventions and improvements that are essential in a new industry engaged in a new field such as that of the application of electricity to modern life.

The same thing, but of many times greater importance, applies with respect to the technical staff in aviation. Aviation is a new field; it is not fully developed. We have not arrived at the fulfillment of its development.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to submit a unanimous-consent request, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The clerk will read the proposed agreement.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Ordered by unanimous consent, That after the hour of 5 p.m. on the calendar day of Thursday, April 26, 1934, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes upon the pending bill (S. 3170) to revise air-mail laws, or upon any amendment that may be proposed, or motion relating thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. FESS. When is the time set for limiting debate?

Mr. HARRISON. Five p.m. on next Thursday.

Mr. FESS. After which hour debate is limited to what time?

Mr. HARRISON. After which hour no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes upon the pending bill, or upon any amendment that may be proposed, or motion relating thereto. That will give any Senator an hour after that time. I may say also, Mr. President, that it is thought that between now and then the time should be divided equally between the proponents and the opponents of this proposed legislation; but, of course, that is not contained in the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. McNARY. But, Mr. President, that is a part of the understanding in proposing the unanimous-consent agreement; and I assume also that the unanimous-consent agreement would forbid a vote prior to 5 o'clock on Thursday.

Mr. HARRISON. I should think so; but it would not forbid the bill being temporarily laid aside and any other matter being taken up in the meantime.

Mr. McNARY. No; but I want it to be understood that there shall be no precipitate vote as a result of default between now and that time. Any other business may be transacted, however, during a lull in the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, merely as a matter of information, may I inquire if it is expected that the debate upon this measure will last until 5 o'clock next Thursday?

Mr. FESS. Yes; it will.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from California that there is quite a demand for time for debate. We have had numerous conferences, and some Senators say that there is such a voluminous record in this case that they expect to make quite long speeches. What we feared was that the wheels of time might go around, and next Friday we might be no further advanced than we are now, unless some unanimous-consent agreement were entered into at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON. I asked the question because when I heard the request for unanimous consent read I thought a mistake was made by the clerk reading Thursday instead of Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. HARRISON. No; there was no mistake made, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I had hoped very much that we could have an earlier vote, but Thursday seems to be about the best we can do, and I hope the request will be agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, one other observation. The request is submitted upon the theory that the Senate will take a recess from today until Monday?

Mr. HARRISON. There is a tremendous demand for a recess from today until Monday, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. I say the request is submitted on that basis, that we will recess until Monday, in order that we may occupy tomorrow working in our offices on our correspondence?

Mr. HARRISON. That is agreeable.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I am disposed always to cooperate with the leaders in trying to reach a definite time to end debate. This is the only question on which I want to speak without limit of time. I desire to cooperate with the two Senators, and I am not going to object, but I want to inform them now that I am not going to get through today.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator prefer to go on with his speech tomorrow?

Mr. FESS. No.

Mr. HARRISON. It would be perfectly agreeable, if the Senator wanted to do so, for him to go on tomorrow.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I ask if there is going to be a session on Tuesday next?

Mr. HARRISON. It is hoped that there will be, I may say to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator means, it is hoped that there will not be. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. On what day?

Mr. JOHNSON. On Tuesday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I am not going to object, but I want to state now that there is not going to be any business done which will necessitate laying aside the air mail bill between now and next Thursday. I want that understood.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent submitted by the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FESS. I do not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the agreement is entered into.

Mr. LEWIS subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business today, it take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I was commenting on the necessity of requiring the company to maintain its technical staff. I think that ought to be required before a company can secure a contract from the Government, first, because of the necessity for safety in connection with a new and hazardous undertaking, and, secondly, because, aviation being a growing industry, there is hardly a limit to its possibilities. For that reason evidently the bill which is now pending should not be passed without that provision being written into it, which, I think, is forbidden by the terms of the bill.

I continue with a discussion of the development of this company that was subjected to castigation on the part of the Senator from Arkansas. The first step taken by the company was to secure the services of a technical staff, all men with long experience either as pilots or as aeronautical engineers, most of whom had received their training in the United States Army Air Corps. Their preliminary duty was to select an adequate base for flying activities.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I interrupt simply to say that there are some—and I am one—who want to listen as much as possible to the Senator from Ohio. I respectfully ask that there be as much order in the Chamber as is possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the point of order is not only well taken but it is to be regretted that it is made necessary at this particular time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The occupants of the gallery will remember that they are here by courtesy of the Senate, and that courtesy will be extended just so long as proper order shall be maintained. The occupants of the gallery will please observe the rule of order and decorum. The Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, it is not an easy thing to make an address in the Senate; it never is, for reasons that are obvious not only to every Senator but to every individual who happens to be in the gallery. I have often said the Senate is the most difficult place in the world in which to make an address. I need not state why. I recognized that when I started at noon. I then made it perfectly clear to all who spoke to me that there would be no other speeches this afternoon. I did that in order that they might go to their offices and do anything else they wanted to do. With me, it is not a matter of merely killing time; I am impelled by a desire to make the record for the country. I am not making it for Senators, because I will not change a vote here; minds are made up; I am not making it for anybody who is listening to me; I am making it for the country. I want the country to know what has been done, the background of the action taken, and the results of that action.

A complete survey was made of the existing fields: Rogers, Bettis, Mayer, and Hiland. It was the unanimous opinion of these men that none of these fields were adequate for flying operations, even in a most restricted sense. It was felt that only one of them, Bettis Field, was capable of development of any sort and then only at enormous expense. Bettis Field comprised a landing area of less than 40 acres. The Senate will recall that one of the requirements of the Army, with respect to landing fields, is that no field shall be less in area than 200 acres. Bettis Field had precipitous banks at the sides, uneven surface, and with dangerous surrounding terrain. It was offered to the Pittsburgh company on at least two occasions, but was turned down flatly. The judgment of the company in refusing to undertake this project was borne out by later developments, for after an outside company spent nearly 2 million dollars on the purchase and development of the field, it was still inadequate for safe air-transport operations. Because of its proximity to the city it was, after the $2,000,000 had been spent, used by the air lines until the Allegheny County Municipal Airport was finished in May 1932. Despite the improvements, at least two major accidents, due principally to its small size, occurred on Bettis Field, involving planes flown by transport companies and carrying passengers and mail on scheduled service.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. LEWIS. I beg to reannounce the absence of several Senators as announced this morning, and for the same causes, and beg that the announcement may remain for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I want to make a correction of the statement I made when we were reaching the unanimous-consent agreement to limit debate. By my announcement that there would not be anything else taken up before Thursday next except the air mail bill I do not mean that I am going to object to the consideration of conference reports, for example, such as the one my colleague [Mr. BULKLEY] has submitted today. He wanted to take it up today, but I told him I regretted that I could not permit it to come up because it would involve debate. What I mean is that we are not to take up any new measure except the one that is now before us.

I continue with the history of the corporation which is the basis of assault and the activities of which seem to be regarded as proof of the allegation of fraud which appears to be one of the alleged pieces of evidence in support of the action resulting in the cancelation of the contracts.

The survey of the technical staff for an adequate base of operations consequently was extended to cover the entire Pittsburgh district and it was finally decided to locate north of the city, the airport now known as Pittsburgh-Butler Airport. Approximately 640 acres of property were acquired and a landing area cleared and graded. Two modern brick and steel hangars were constructed and buildings available on the property were remodeled to serve as an administration building, restaurant, and student barracks. Complete lighting equipment was installed. The total cost of this project, which resulted in one of the largest and best-equipped airports in the country, was slightly in excess of $500,000.

With the Pittsburgh-Butler Airport completed as a base of operations various aviation activities were instituted, such as carrying passengers on charter service, the establishing of Penn School of Aviation for flying, ground and mechanics training, the inauguration of an aerial photograph and survey business, sales of aircraft, engines and accessories, and the servicing, maintenance, and overhaul of airplanes and engines.

With regard to the passenger-carrying activities, it is a matter of official record that in the years of 1929 and 1930 alone approximately 10,000 passengers were carried on sightseeing and cross-country flights.

It is also worthy of note that the Penn School of Aviation has a record equaled by few other aviation training institutions in the country. Over 11,000 hours, equivalent to over a million miles, have been flown without a major mishap, either to students or personnel. Since ratings were established it had held the highest approval from the United States Department of Commerce as a transport school, not a single graduate ever having failed the Government flight tests. Over 530 students, including 23 transports, were given flight instruction. Instruction was also given to 783 ground, mechanics, and aviation business-course students. In connection with the ground school a cooperative arrangement was entered into with the University of Pittsburgh for the training of students in the university's aeronautical engineering department.

Although the school is still very active, over 45 flying students and 25 ground and mechanics students now being enrolled, the peak of the business was reached in 1930 before general business conditions became so acute.

I mention these facts because the pending bill omits any provision for a training school supported by any company which gets an air-mail contract. If I read the bill aright, it forbids companies to maintain schools for training their own personnel, which certainly is, if not a blunder, at least an oversight.

In connection with its aerial photograph activities, P.A.I.C. was engaged by dozens of firms in Pennsylvania, Ohio, and West Virginia for industrial air surveys. Building owners, real-estate corporations, and many other companies and individuals in all lines of business endeavor, made use of these highly specialized services, with the result that a library of about 2,500 aerial photographs and surveys was built up in this work.

Mr. President, this could not be done overnight. It would require at least 2 years to complete the plans which this company started to carry out.

Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, through its wholly owned subsidiaries, was also distributor and dealer for various types of aircraft and aircraft accessories, including Fleet, Fairchild, Keystone-Loening, Stinson, and Buhl airplanes; Kinner engines; Irving parachutes; B-G spark plugs; Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. airwheels; and Elgin instruments. The wide diversification of representation definitely indicates that there was not the slightest control or influence by any one manufacturing interest. Although many thousands of dollars in aircraft and other equipment were sold by this company both prior and subsequent to 1929, that year marked the peak of this activity.

Apparently the only interest the people of Pittsburgh generally had in this matter was in building or backing a corporation, for an aviation industry should be based upon all these auxiliaries which are at the very foundation of the industry.

Undoubtedly the most essential activity of the entire aviation industry is the maintenance, repair, and overhaul of aircraft and engines; for upon this work depend the lives of the public and of air transport employees, the safety of private property, and the efficiency and continuity of air-transport operations.

The pending bill not only fails to include this facility, but it forbids it. I cannot imagine why the Government should consider making an air-mail contract with any company which is not required to maintain the facilities maintained by this company which has come in for such an attack.

Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation recognized this fact by equipping an overhaul shop, modern in every particular, at an approximate cost of $20,000, and by developing an organization of from 15 to 20 skilled mechanics, each a specialist in his line of work. This overhaul shop was just one division of the $500,000 Pittsburgh-Butler Airport. When the United States Department of Commerce in 1930 initiated the practice of issuing certificates of approval for overhaul and repair stations which complied with the most rigid requirements as to equipment and quality of work, the Pittsburgh-Butler Airport received such a certificate.

From the very beginning a large volume of business has passed through this shop, involving a gross of from $12,000 to $15,000 per month. That the quality of work received early recognition by other companies may be seen from the fact that in 1930 Universal Airlines Corporation had two of its trimotored planes given complete overhauls by our corporation.

I am of opinion that very few people realize the requirements of modern aviation.

Coming from Chicago some time ago, the plane stopped for 35 minutes in Cleveland. The sky was overcast. I was not sure whether or not it would be safe for me to continue in the plane from Cleveland to Washington. I went up in the airport and asked the operator. He said, "Wait a minute; I will find out."

It was not long before I heard him asking questions, and I could understand the answers. He was asking what was the condition between Washington and Pittsburgh. The reply was, "A low ceiling and bad visibility. Conditions west of Pittsburgh are splendid." Then the question was asked, "Would it be safe to take off for Washington?" The reply came, "Perfectly."

I asked the operator to whom he was talking. He said, "I am talking to the pilot in the plane which is coming to Cleveland from Washington." I asked, "Where is he?" He said, "Somewhere between Pittsburgh and Cleveland. He will be in here pretty soon." It was not long before he again got into communication with the pilot, and I heard him say, "Approach the field from such and such a direction. The way is open." The operator gave the character of the wind. He said the field was clear; and I, standing up there, looking out into the open space, after a while saw the plane approach. The pilot came in following the direction of the man who had been talking to him from the airport.

It was an uncanny situation, as it appeared to me; and yet that is only the beginning of what aviation will be able to do. This Government is interested in omitting nothing which will permit, stage after stage, the improvement and development of this method of travel until it becomes perfectly safe.

I have often wondered what people unfamiliar with airplane travel would think if they should be in a plane at night. If the night is beautiful, there is not anything finer in the world. The lights can be easily seen for 30 miles or more. These are the lights of the airways maintained by the Federal Government, under the direction of the Department of Commerce. The lights are of different colors, like the lights on a railroad track. If the night is beautiful, there is no finer experience; but if the night is overcast, if the ground cannot be clearly seen, if everything is shrouded in fog, if the long shadows as they appear to those in the rapidly moving plane obscure the vision until it is impossible to be certain of anything, it is natural for the passenger to feel some fear and trepidation; but he remembers that the pilot is flying in accordance with instruments. He is not looking at the ground. He is scientifically trained, and the plane lands in perfect safety; but there is a terrible feeling of insecurity until the plane lands on the ground, especially at such a time.

When we say that a company which has a contract for mail carrying is to be denied the facilities upon which its service must depend we are going pretty far in visiting vengeance upon a company because perhaps it is a holding company rather than an operating company. The company that is doing the carrying is an operating company.

Apart from these directly operated phases of the aviation industry, during the first part of 1929 this company brought to Pittsburgh the first and only aircraft-manufacturing company of that district, which was known as the Pittsburgh Metal Airplane Co. Considerable development work was done by the company in metal airplane construction, and two ships were built embodying the latest design in this field. Because of the low ebb of the commercial sales market in 1930, however, it was decided that further activities in this connection were inadvisable. Consequently the assets of the Pittsburgh Metal Airplane Co. were sold to the General Aviation Corporation, which had a large organization, and sufficient capital to incur losses which were believed inevitable over the period of the next few years.

P.A.I.C.'s participation in the Pittsburgh Metal Airplane Co., a $320,000 concern, totaled $100,000, of which only $75,000 was called for payment. Upon completion of liquidation of the assets all stockholders received approximately 45 percent of the amount paid in, P.A.I.C.'s loss on this investment therefore totaling about $40,000. As circumstances governing the aircraft market later proved, if the airplane-manufacturing company had not been sold, there would have been little or no money returnable to its stockholders.

During the spring and summer of 1929, careful studies and analyses were made of various other aviation enterprises, in line with the announced policy of the company to encourage and develop aviation activities for the benefit of the community. These studies and analyses included the airports of Mayer Field, Hiland Field, Rodgers Field, and Bettis Field. Other projects given careful attention involved the American Moth Airplane Co., the Ohio River Valley Air Express, Aircraft and Airways of America, Inc., and Pittsburgh Airways.

With respect to the last company, the records show that at least three separate attempts were made by Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation to effect a consolidation which would be to the benefit of the stockholders of both companies. The final attempt fell through only because the officers of Pittsburgh Airways insisted on being given employment contracts at figures higher than were being paid to the executive officers of Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, none of whom had ever been granted employment contracts. Although presumably looking out for the best interests of its stockholders, the Airways company management refused the consolidation on any other terms, and later went into bankruptcy. From the resultant liquidation the stockholders received nothing, and the employees were paid only a portion of the salaries due them over a period of from 4 to 6 weeks.

Mr. President, I wish to take the time to indicate the facts here, because it was stated by the Senator from Arkansas that the company which operated the route from Cleveland to Pittsburgh was unfairly treated. I desire to give the facts as to that.

The final attempt fell through only because the officers of Pittsburgh Airways insisted on being given employment contracts at figures higher than those being paid the executive officers, none of whom had ever been granted an employment contract. That was when there was an effort on the part of the Pittsburgh corporation to purchase this line, which ran from Cleveland to Pittsburgh, and desired to continue on to Washington.

In addition to these projects, surveys were made of a possible passenger service from Pittsburgh to Erie and from Pittsburgh to Parkersburg and Charleston, W.Va.

Chief among the concerns given serious consideration as a result of the studies made was the Thomas Morse Aircraft Corporation. As was stated in the minutes of the executive committee meeting of July 5, 1929:

> An extensive report was then made by George R. Hann, supplemented by Richard W. Robbins, on the Thomas Morse Aircraft Corporation, and the possibility of relocating this aircraft-manufacturing business in Pittsburgh. The committee decided that, in view of the excellent prospects of the Thomas Morse Aircraft Corporation, immediate steps should be taken to go into this matter further, and that a committee of three, of which George R. Hann should be chairman, be appointed to investigate locations for a factory building.

Although the company was not successful in relocating this aircraft manufacturing concern in the Pittsburgh district, the record is submitted as an illustration of Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation's efforts in the best interests of the community.

Coincident with the establishment of the Pittsburgh-Butler Airport and the carrying out of the activities mentioned, a large part of the time of the organization was devoted to educational work on aviation, through talks, lectures, published articles, and direct advertising. It was obvious that before any real results could be obtained, some progress had to be made toward increasing the air-mindedness of the people in the community.

In addition, Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation advised and counseled with the city and county officials and the special airport committee appointed by the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce in locating a site for the Allegheny County Municipal Airport. After the site was located, our pilots and technical staff frequently consulted with the engineers and other county officials in charge of the development.

At the same time, our company was spending thousands of dollars and flying thousands of miles making surveys both by air and on the ground of the possibilities for scheduled air services between Pittsburgh and Washington and from Columbus to New York via Pittsburgh, Harrisburg, and Philadelphia.

As airlines could not properly be operated until airways were established, contacts were made with Government and State officials to further airway development; and on such projects as were pending, to offer cooperation and the experience of P.A.I.C. pilots who for many months had been constantly flying and studying the terrain and weather conditions of the Allegheny Mountains. In this connection a definite proposal for a system of State airways was submitted to the Pennsylvania State Legislature, which resulted in an appropriation of some $200,000 for the purpose mentioned. No State had theretofore appropriated any such sum for aviation.

In a speech made before the Senate on Tuesday, March 20, 1934, by the distinguished leader on the other side, definite criticism was attached to the part played by Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation in encouraging the establishment of a system of State airways. He made the charge that the company was political in character. Purely selfish, political motives were attributed to such efforts on the part of the company. The fundamental facts, however, were completely disregarded. An airway is properly classed with such projects as roads, parks, waterways, and harbors. Its establishment is in the public, not private, interest. Without airways, the whole system of air transportation could not function. Accordingly, the individual or concern which spends its money and devotes its principal efforts to laying this all-important, in fact, this basic groundwork, is doing a real service to the public. Particularly in Pennsylvania, with its rugged and mountainous terrain, there could have been no real air-transport operations had these airways not been constructed. The carrying of passengers on scheduled service prior to the establishment of these airways demonstrated a rank disregard for the value of human lives, and the people who were responsible for such rank disregard should be condemned, not applauded, at this time by the United States Government.

Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation does not make the least apology for its efforts to enlist the interest of the Pennsylvania Legislature in such important and fundamental development work. To the contrary, the company points with pride to the results attained.

I quote now from the Bulletin on the Legislative History of the Air Commerce Act of 1926, approved May 20, 1926 (revision of the 1923 edition of Law Memoranda upon Civil Aeronautics, corrected to Aug. 1, 1928, p. 37):

> In water commerce terminal facilities, such as docks, piers, warehouses, are usually provided by municipalities or private enterprise. While the House amendment permits the Secretary of Commerce, if appropriations are made available, to establish and maintain airports and other terminal facilities, nevertheless, it is to be presumed that in the exercise of this power the Secretary of Commerce will have due regard to his duty under section 1 to encourage the establishment of air-navigation facilities, and in particular, airports, by municipal or private enterprise in order that municipal and private enterprise may take the same place in the field of air transportation as it has taken in the field of water transportation.

To the best of our knowledge this had always been the policy of Congress and was so stated on numerous occasions to Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation officials by the Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Aeronautics, the Chief of the Airways Division, the Second Assistant Postmaster General in charge of air mail, and the superintendent of air mail.

The tenor of the remarks, almost in the nature of an order, was as follows. This was the voice not only of these subofficers, but it was the voice of the Postmaster General when the proponents of this company were trying to secure a contract:

> Show us that your own communities are interested and willing to do their share. The Government alone cannot carry the burden. Until we are assured of such cooperation we cannot do anything for the advancement of aeronautics in your section of the country.

The Government undergoes the expense of surveys and the establishment of the airways, depending upon companies to procure facilities. The Government undertakes to protect life by requiring certain conditions looking to safety. While the Government is anxious to build up the industry, it is not going to do it in the interest of some locality unless that locality will show that it is willing to do its part. That was said over and over by the officers of the Government in charge of the air-mail business.

I do not think that policy has been changed. If it has been, I do not know when it was changed. It seems to me to be true that the same policy was announced by the present administration in connection with all the relief work now going on, requiring localities to do their part if they depend upon any Federal aid.

In view of these facts, there is no fair basis for the criticism of this company for bringing the importance of aeronautical development to the attention of the Pennsylvania Legislature to the end that an appropriation was made for the common good. The Senator from Arkansas denounced this organization as a political body, and cited as evidence of that the fact that they had lobbied with the Pennsylvania Legislature in order to secure appropriations.

Efforts were also made to indicate to Government officials the necessity of Pittsburgh having adequate air-mail and passenger services, the only line then in existence being the Cleveland-Pittsburgh air-mail line. It was only logical and inevitable for Pittsburgh to have a service into Washington, and in addition to have a service eastward into New York and westward to Columbus and other cities on the present midtranscontinental line. It was not conceivable that a trade channel served by one of the largest and most important railroads in the country should permanently be deprived of the advantages of air transportation. To this end the chamber of commerce was again called upon and aid was likewise enlisted from every person in Pittsburgh who was interested in the growth and development of the community to further the construction of airways and to bring the time nearer when Government-sponsored air-transportation lines should commence operations.

With Federal and State agencies cooperating and with the officials, pilots, and technical staff of P.A.I.C. conferring day in and day out with both groups, there were finally surveyed and constructed the New York-Philadelphia-Harrisburg-Pittsburgh-Columbus airway and the Pittsburgh-Washington airway.

Mr. President, this was the beginning of the organization of the company. It became a bidder for an air-mail contract, which contract is charged on this floor as having been obtained in fraud, and it is stated, as a basis of that charge, that the company was a mere political body. There can be no inference drawn from that statement other than that this group of men were sufficiently influential to secure from the Postmaster General a contract which without that influence they would not have secured. That is the inference that is made with reference to this company by that charge; and it is because of that, and only that, that I am taking the time to indicate the background of the organization of this company.

It is very well understood, Mr. President, that for a long time the Government felt doubtful about its ability to induce any company to carry passengers over the Allegheny Mountains from Pittsburgh to New York, especially because of the character of the terrain between Harrisburg and Pittsburgh. Anyone familiar with the route traveled by the Pennsylvania Railroad will understand the meaning of the hesitancy.

Back in 1929 Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation recognized the necessity of some kind of an airport in the neighborhood of Harrisburg. From the point of view of safety, efficiency, and continuity of service a strategic airport close to the eastern edge of the Allegheny Mountains was essential for westbound flights. Here, weather information could be studied, planes refueled, and other necessary preparations made before crossing the ridges in uncertain atmospheric conditions.

I think that on the occasion of the first flight I made from my home to Washington there was some uncertainty about weather conditions. Before we took off we had a report from Uniontown, where there is an airport, that everything was all right; yet by the time we reached Uniontown the clouds and fugitive storms were rising. In traveling from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh a plane flies over a perfectly level country until the Susquehanna River is reached, just west of Harrisburg. Then the mountains are entered. While certain valleys can be selected over which to fly, there are almost continuous mountains beyond Altoona and then on beyond Cresson and Johnstown. Finally, at a point about 30 miles this side of Pittsburgh, another level stretch is reached.

Such men as Lindbergh argued against undertaking to carry passengers over a route of that kind. Naturally, if the Government should induce any company to begin that transport business, including especially the carriage of passengers, one requirement would be that before entering the area of the mountains there should be an airport where the planes could be conditioned in case anything should happen before the mountains were reached. Especially is an airport necessary near the mountains should the condition of the atmosphere become such that it would be necessary to elevate the plane, for it is on such occasions that the engine might stop because of unusual pressure suddenly being put upon it.

The officers of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation succeeded in arousing the interest of the Harrisburg Chamber of Commerce in this connection; and after several months of intensive effort, with Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation and the Harrisburg Chamber of Commerce working together, the people of Harrisburg agreed to raise approximately $200,000 for the purchase and development of a municipal airport.

Senators will recall that Harrisburg is only about 7 miles east of the beginning of the mountains, and this airport lies between the mountains and the city.

The money was raised and the project started with the understanding that P.A.I.C. should assume the management and operation for a period of 3 years.

The Harrisburg Airport was officially opened in the early summer of 1930, and immediately established its strategic importance as a stop on the midtranscontinental line when service began in October of the same year. Without this airport the midtranscontinental line which immediately supplied a long-needed mail and passenger service over a logical trade channel from coast to coast would have been greatly delayed, at least insofar as continuity of scheduled operations east of Pittsburgh was concerned. During the operation of the airport for 3 years, until May 1, 1933, P.A.I.C. incurred losses aggregating $24,916.26.

In the Harrisburg Airport, P.A.I.C. claims a very definite and valuable contribution to the air-transport development in the eastern section of the United States.

Mr. President, the only reason why I am taking the time to indicate the expense involved in building this airway across this dangerous terrain is to reply to the charge of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] that this company labored with the legislature at Harrisburg and with the people of Harrisburg as a political agency. They labored with the people all along the line; and what they demanded or requested from the State of Pennsylvania was to aid in building an air route from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh over the most dangerous terrain in the country, and one of the most expensive requirements was this airport before they entered the mountains.

Mr. President, in summarizing the accomplishments of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, the company which has been the target for so many charges during the first two years of business, namely 1929 and 1930, the following is noted:

First. Construction and development of Pittsburgh-Butler Airport, one of the largest and best equipped airports in the country, at a cost slightly in excess of $500,000.

Second. Establishment on a large scale of passenger-carrying activities, resulting in the transportation during the 2-year period of over 10,000 passengers on sightseeing and cross-country flights. Please note, Mr. President, that this was 2 years before the company was given a contract.

Third. Establishment of a Government-approved flying and ground school at which instruction has been given to over 1,300 students in a period of 5 years.

Fourth. Development of an aerial photography and survey business involving the production of approximately 2,500 photographs and surveys.

If one did not know the purpose of aerial photography, one would wonder why anything of that sort is required. Mr. President, in the great aviation center of Dayton—by all comparison the greatest research center of aviation in the world—one of the chief units is that of aerial photography. A picture can be taken at a height of 10,000 feet with as good results as if the plane had been only a short distance from the ground.

Fifth. Development of an aircraft, aircraft engine, and aircraft accessory sales business, involving a broad diversification of aircraft and equipment.

Sixth. Establishment of a Government-approved overhaul and repair station, with the consequent building up of a highly skilled organization to handle aircraft, engine, propeller, and instrument repair and overhaul.

Seventh. The location in Pittsburgh of the city's first aircraft manufacturing plant, the Pittsburgh Metal Airplane Co.

Eighth. The study and analysis of numerous airport and other aviation projects with a view to developing a cooperative interest to the benefit of the community.

Ninth. The promotion, development, and operation of the Harrisburg Airport, an essential and strategic link in the mid-transcontinental line.

Tenth. Carrying on of ground and air surveys in cooperation with the State of Pennsylvania and the United States Department of Commerce, directed to the establishment of the Pittsburgh-Washington and New York-Columbus airways in accordance with the announced policy of Congress.

Eleventh. Appropriation of funds by the State of Pennsylvania for the regulation of aeronautics and for the development of a system of State airways to the common good. And that is the basis of the charge that the company was political in character.

Twelfth. Aid given to the authorities of the city of Pittsburgh and the county of Allegheny toward the location and development of the Allegheny County Airport.

Thirteenth. Aviation educational work in Pennsylvania through lectures, articles, radio broadcasts, and many thousands of dollars in paid advertising.

It should be noted that these activities and accomplishments cost this company, according to the figures submitted to me, over $600,000 in capital expenditures and in addition thereto a net loss of approximately $200,000.

All this groundwork was merely planning for the future, and as stated previously, was directed toward the establishment of adequate air-mail and passenger operations serving the Pittsburgh district, in which it was anticipated that this company would merit a participation because of the experience it had acquired.

Mr. President, it might appear to those who do not fully understand the purpose of occupying the floor to give these facts, that it is a waste of time to do so, but I am doing this for one purpose and one purpose only. This company has been the target of those who sought to secure the cancelation of the contracts on the allegation that they were fraudulent, and this is one of the companies against which that charge is made.

Mr. President, if air transportation is to amount to anything in the United States, the cities of New York, Philadelphia, Harrisburg, St. Louis, Kansas City, Wichita, and Los Angeles must be kept in mind. I mention those cities because they are touched by the route in which this company is interested. They are on the midcontinent trade channel.

The officials of this company, prior to the conferences called in May and June 1930, by former Postmaster General Brown, were fully conversant with the Post Office Department's views with regard to the air-mail situation. Those views or policies were definitely expressed in an address by Mr. Brown himself, delivered before the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce on January 14, 1930, entitled "Commercial Aviation and the Air Mail."

I quote one statement from Mr. Brown's Cleveland speech:

> The experience of all passenger-transportation operators in 1929 was substantially the same, with a pay load of only 16- to 40-percent capacity. All closed the year with operation deficits so great that the very life of the passenger-transport industry is in the balance.

Mr. President, that is the basis on which Mr. Brown acted. It seemed to him there was no possibility of maintaining an adequate air service if it depended wholly on passenger service, and that it could not be maintained on air-mail allowance alone without a wasteful and exorbitant expenditure by the Government. He had it in mind if we ever built up a great aviation industry that all the mail companies must be required to recoup their expenses by passenger service insofar as possible; and he also stated that as to the companies then limited to passenger service, most of them operating in the red, he would be willing, where it could be done in the interest of the public, to give them air-mail contracts. He decided that there was no possible way of building a great aviation industry either on an exclusive mail service or upon an exclusive passenger service; that each should supplement the other. It was that idea which was in his mind when he called this conference together.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to enable me to ask him a question for enlightenment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I think the Senator from Ohio is referring to an address delivered by the former Postmaster General. Am I right as to that?

Mr. FESS. That is correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. I should like to ask whether or not that address was delivered prior or subsequent to the passage of the McNary-Watres Act.

Mr. FESS. It was prior to the passage of that act. The McNary-Watres Act was passed in April 1930, and this address was delivered in January 1930.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is what I thought.

Mr. FESS. The Postmaster General in that address referred to the passenger-transportation companies never carrying more than about 16 to 40 percent of a load.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. First of all, I want the senior Senator from Ohio to know that I am in nowise attempting a heckling procedure. I do not engage in that kind of debate.

Mr. FESS. I know the Senator does not do that.

Mr. McCARRAN. But the thought struck me that there is a history subsequent to that address delivered by the former Postmaster General from which, as I recall from the record produced before the special committee of the Senate, it was disclosed that the former Postmaster General was opposed to the Kelly bill because it provided for competitive bidding, but, nevertheless, as I recall, the bill was passed containing a competitive-bidding provision.

Mr. FESS. That is correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. Then, I recall that the former Postmaster General came before the special committee—I do not want to quote him too far, but I think I quote him correctly—and made a statement wherein, inferentially, at least, he admitted he was opposed to the bidding system. I may be wrong as to that, and I do not want to misquote him.

Mr. FESS. I think the Senator is not wrong. The former Postmaster General never believed that there was much value in the competitive-bidding system.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am going to say something later on that will run along the same line; but, I think, following the passage of the McNary-Watres Act the former Postmaster General carried into his administration of the act which was passed his ideas of what was right rather than giving effect to the provisions of the law itself; in other words, he laid aside the specific provisions of the bill in order to carry out what he thought should have been in the bill in the first instance. I hope I do not misrepresent him, and I do not think I do.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have always felt that there was a little misunderstanding about the testimony of the Postmaster General before our special committee regarding that particular point. I recently looked it up and found that, in trying to clear up that question, he referred ultimately to his testimony before the House Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and quoted a little paragraph therefrom—of which, of course, I cannot remember the exact language, but will try to refer to it later and put it in the RECORD—in which he said to that committee, when asked by a member of it——

Mr. McCARRAN. That is, the House Committee on Post Office and Post Roads?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; the House Committee on Post Office and Post Roads. When asked by a member of the committee what use he would make of section 6 of the McNary-Watres Act, he replied, in effect, that he intended to try to revamp the entire air-mail system by using the power of extensions and consolidations.

I call that to the attention of the Senators who are engaged in this colloquy, and I promise to put the extract in the RECORD later on, because I think it affords very strong evidence supporting the action which the Postmaster General ultimately took.

Mr. AUSTIN subsequently said: Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Ohio, I should like now to present and have incorporated in the RECORD the extract from the testimony of former Postmaster General Brown to which I referred a few moments ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

[From testimony of former Postmaster General Brown before the Special Committee on Investigation of Air Mail and Ocean Mail Contracts]

The CHAIRMAN. Did he not in that opinion refer to the fact that you had talked about extensions in your evidence? Did he not quote it, that you referred to them as "flight extensions", and, therefore, it would not be justifiable to go——

Mr. BROWN. Let me see if I did. I think we have had enough about this assuming of things.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Let me have the opinion of the Comptroller General.

Mr. BROWN. I am not interested in the opinion. I am interested in what I said.

The CHAIRMAN. We will find it.

Mr. BROWN. I will help you find it.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be very pleasing.

Mr. BROWN. That is what I said about extensions, in dealing with the subject before the committee that was preparing the bill. At the bottom of page 27 of the hearings on amending the Air Mail Act (reading):

"Section 6 authorizes extensions and consolidations when the public interest will be promoted thereby. The purpose of that is to enable us to revamp the air-mail plan of the country and make it a logical one, so far as we have the wisdom to do so."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield for just another expression?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. My inquiries of the Senator from Ohio and my thought runs along this line, that the former Postmaster General was wedded to a certain idea which he tried to enact into law and from which he could not divorce himself after the law was enacted contrary to his views. Thereafter he carried out as best he could the ideas he had prior to the enactment of the McNary-Watres law. That may be condemnable or it may not. It may be that a public official having certain defined ideas in his mind would try to have those ideas enacted into law. Then the Congress refused to conform to his ideas. The thought strikes me that he should have relinquished his ideas and adapted himself to the law as it was written.

I do not want to interrupt the remarks of the learned Senator from Ohio unduly, but I do wish to express myself so that he may exploit my views as I have expressed them.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, there is some basis for the conclusion the Senator has reached. I do not mean that the former Postmaster General acted in the way the Senator feels he did, but I can understand the basis on which the Senator has reached that conclusion. All through the hearings, when the Postmaster General was before the committee in reference to the legislation, he expressed his doubt as to the efficacy of the general principle of competitive bidding in the air-mail business in the stage it had reached. He said there was not much in it, notwithstanding the fact that the transcontinental contracts were let by competitive bidding.

Whether he had felt it was unwise and, therefore, he should follow the plan because it was the law as to the new contracts, or what should be the program, he did follow the competitive-bidding plan on new contracts. I think I ought to say that I do not believe he ever felt that was the best way to do. I would not want to be understood as saying that he violated the law in order to carry out his own views. I do not think that is true.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator further——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I want to say to the Senator that I do not interrupt for the purpose of distorting or interfering with his line of thought.

The whole matter has impressed itself upon me in this wise: Here was a public official who had a certain idea about how a certain matter should be carried out. He expressed himself before various committees; in fact, he expressed himself, I think I may say, before our special committee of the Senate. That idea was so impelling that after the McNary-Watres Act was passed he sought to carry out his idea even in the face of the law as it was written. That is my view of it.

Mr. FESS. I think the Senator goes too far when he infers that the Postmaster General was so set on doing a thing in a certain way that had not been written in the law that he proceeded to do it anyway in spite of the law. I do not think that is true. All the new contracts were let by competitive bidding. The old contracts were surrendered for route certificates and the route certificates gave almost plenary authority to the Postmaster General in dealing with rates, conditions, and so forth. That was essential. It was on the surrender of the contract for the route certificate, on the one hand, and the provision requiring or permitting extensions, on the other hand, that the Postmaster General operated directly under the law in all the cases except those of the new contracts, I believe. May I ask the Senator from Vermont if I am correct?

Mr. AUSTIN. The new contracts were subsequently changed to route certificates.

Mr. FESS. Yes; as authorized by the law. I can understand why the Senator from Nevada may have gotten that view. Whatever we might say about the temperament of the preceding Postmaster General, he was a man of his own mind, and very often after conferences people would go from his presence not pleased, because they could make no particular headway with him. I recognize that was a condition which might lead some persons to believe that he went too far.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURPHY in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I want to concur with the learned senior Senator from Ohio in his statement that the former Postmaster General was a man of his own mind. I am perfectly willing to concur in that statement.

Mr. FESS. There is no doubt about that. In fact, he was of his own mind to such a degree that he frequently left people in an unfriendly attitude toward him. In other words, he was not always mild mannered and suave, but at times he was pretty abrupt.

Mr. President, the Postmaster General then recommended an amendment of the act of June 3, 1926, whereby he could contract for the transportation of mail at fixed rates per mile for definite weight spaces, this being analogous to the present practice in regard to railroads. To quote him further:

> This would enable the Post Office Department to give immediate assistance to air-passenger carriers on such routes as were deemed essential, by paying for carrying the mails a substantial sum based upon a definite weight-space preempted. * * *

Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation naturally took the position that its efforts and concrete accomplishments and its willingness to spend large sums of money in preparing for the future over a period of more than 2 years entitled it at least to an opportunity, whether by competitive bidding or otherwise, to seek a permanent and recognized position in the air transport field, certainly insofar as the State of Pennsylvania was concerned. By this time, also, from a company starting with only 5 employees, a well-organized personnel of more than 40 individuals had been built up, including 11 experienced pilots, 18 skilled and well-trained mechanics, and other carefully selected individuals for the business management.

It was stated, as shown in the report of proceedings of the Special Senate Investigating Committee on February 19, 1934, page 5747, that Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation had not had any flying experience. Testimony and comment to this effect was also given on other occasions. The real facts of the matter, however, are shown in the company's official records, which reveal that the company, prior to the time it became financially interested in any air-mail operation, was flying during the year 1930 on an average of 30,000 miles per month, an amount greater than the mileage flown on many of the air-mail routes. Such flying included charter and sight-seeing service, aerial surveys, and flight instruction, and afforded vastly more experience than the simple flying then done in scheduled operations. It must be understood that in flying 30,000 miles per month there was involved the overhaul, maintenance, and repair experience which constitutes the basic groundwork far more essential to a permanent air-transport system than the average intermittent scheduled operation then being conducted. As stated previously, it is also a matter of the company's official record that during the years 1929 and 1930, 10,000 passengers were carried by its 11 pilots in 11 airplanes owned and operated by Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation. In other words, far from being unacquainted with flight problems and with the more important intricate mechanical and repair phases essential to safety, when the company finally participated in air-mail operations, it had a comprehensive background of experience and a knowledge of weather and terrain difficulties second to none in that section of the country.

There has also been some criticism of Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, at least by inference, that it had not operated a scheduled air transport service prior to its participation in the carrying of air mail by the purchase of Pennsylvania Airlines, Inc., in November 1930. I again state most emphatically that from 80 to 90 percent of the work of an air transport company is on the ground, in the establishment of adequate airports, airways, and airway facilities, in the training of an organization to carry on the service safely and efficiently, and that no public-service business of this character can be properly conducted without the groundwork essential to the safety of the traveling public, the protection of both private and Government property, and the safeguarding of the investor. That this position was eminently sound and in accordance with both the recommendations and the regulations of the United States Department of Commerce is demonstrated in the correspondence between Mr. Richard W. Robbins, executive vice president of P.A.I.C. and Col. Clarence M. Young, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, under dates of May 23 and May 26, 1930. On May 23, 1930, Mr. Robbins wrote a letter to Colonel Young, requesting advice as to the progress of construction of the Philadelphia-Pittsburgh Airway. In this letter is the following paragraph:

> For over a year this company (P.A.I.C.) has been ready with equipment and personnel to begin scheduled passenger service between Pittsburgh and New York. We have delayed the commencement of this operation until the airway is completed and we can carry it on with the authority of the Department of Commerce.

And from Colonel Young's reply of May 26, I quote:

> However, the operating experience across the State of Pennsylvania has been such as to indicate that a certificate of authority to operate a scheduled air-passenger service would be in order only in the event suitable airway facilities were available for either day or night service, or both, as the case might be.

This airway was not completed until the late summer of 1930 and such companies as were operating over the route prior to that date, specifically Pittsburgh Airways (using single-motored airplanes) were doing so in direct disregard of the expressed policy of the Department of Commerce and in inexcusable disregard of the safety of human lives. In addition, it is also true that many of the then air-mail contractors, with years of operating experience back of them, would not embark on the grave responsibility of carrying passengers by air on scheduled operation over the Allegheny Mountains, until so directed in 1930 and 1931 by Postmaster General Brown.

Mr. Monroe states:

> Our 2 years of pioneering activities and accomplishments had cost P.A.I.C. over $600,000 in capital expenditures, and in addition thereto an operating and development loss of over $200,000. Following the passage of the Watres Act in April 1930, our company was, of course, vitally concerned when the Post Office Department in May 1930 called a conference of the air-mail and air-passenger operators. Mr. George R. Hann, president Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, and Mr. R. W. Robbins, executive vice-president, attended this conference. It is a matter of record that neither P.A.I.C., nor any of its subsidiary companies, held an air-mail contract prior to this conference. It is a matter of record that following the final meeting on June 4, 1930, we still did not have an air-mail contract. Nor did we have a promise, direct, indirect, or by inference, of a contract from the Post Office Department.

It was not until the announcement was made by the Post Office Department in August 1930, that bids were to be advertised for air-mail service on the new midtranscontinental line that P.A.I.C. was afforded any opportunity of participating in air-line operations.

When Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., was formed through the combination of Transcontinental Air Transport and Western Air Express to bid on the route to be advertised, P.A.I.C. insisted, and justifiably so, that neither T.A.T. nor W.A.E. had contributed anything to the territory east of Columbus. It was pointed out that the company's pioneering accomplishments should be recognized. Development of the important Columbus-to-New York section had been entirely neglected except for P.A.I.C.'s efforts, and the company had up to this time spent hundreds of thousands of dollars to render it eligible to bid for any governmental air-mail aid which might involve the so-called "Pennsylvania area."

At that time there was, in addition, no safe landing field in the Pittsburgh district with the exception of the Pittsburgh-Butler Airport. This airport was located away from the fog area peculiar to this community and was equipped for handling, repairing, and overhauling all types of aircraft and engines. These facilities were believed to be of inestimable value to the safe operation of the proposed line.

Also, it is of the deepest significance that long prior to the meetings of May and June 1930 in Washington, and consequently prior to the formation of T.W.A. in August 1930, conferences and negotiations had been carried on between George R. Hann, R. W. Robbins, and Norman Allderdice of Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation and D. M. Shaeffer of Transcontinental Air Transport with a view to the consolidation of interests for the operation of a passenger service between New York and Columbus, to connect at Columbus with T.A.T.'s air-rail transcontinental run. Largely as the result of these prior conferences and negotiations, a tentative contract was drawn up in June 1930, including P.A.I.C., T.A.T., and Clifford Ball, who then held a mail contract for service between Cleveland and Pittsburgh. It was the purpose of this proposed consolidation, which was never consummated, to conduct flying operations between Cleveland and Norfolk via Pittsburgh and Washington and between Columbus and New York via Philadelphia, Harrisburg, and Pittsburgh.

All these facts, as well as our organization and financial status, were taken into account when P.A.I.C. was given a participation in the Transcontinental & Western Air System. The terms of this participation were as follows:

Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation received 29,488 shares ($294,850) of the capital stock of Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., or approximately 5 percent of the total stock issued and outstanding. T.W.A. received a 50-percent interest in the Pittsburgh-Butler Airport, the purchase, construction, and development of which involved a cash outlay of over a half million dollars.

In order to make this exchange, the assets of the airport were sold by P.A.I.C. to a new corporation, called Pittsburgh-Butler Airport, Inc., and 50 percent of the stock was given to T.W.A. and 50 percent to P.A.I.C.

Thus, P.A.I.C.'s interest in T.W.A. was based both on business conferences held long prior to May 1930 and on the merits of the situation as shown above. Mr. Monroe further stated that although his company believed it was entitled to a larger participation it was anxious to see real transport operations started through the Pittsburgh community and finally agreed to the terms stated. Its consolidation of interests with T.A.T. and W.A.E. was for the purpose of entering into competitive bidding for the contract on the midtranscontinental line. This consolidation was not the result of any favor from the Post Office Department.

It is decidedly pertinent at this point, as an indication of the attitude of the city government toward Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., and the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation to quote the following from the proceedings of the council of the city of Pittsburgh (Municipal Record, Monday, Oct. 20, 1930, vol. LXIV, no. 45, pp. 611 and 612):

MOTIONS AND RESOLUTIONS

Mr. Garland presented no. 2014.

Whereas on Saturday, October 25, 1930, the new mid-transcontinental air route from New York to San Francisco via Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Kansas City, and Los Angeles, will be inaugurated, which, by affording an expeditious daily mail and passenger service, will render a distinct benefit not only to the business and financial interests but to the people of the community as a whole, increasing its importance as a transportation center, so that Saturday, October 25, may be recorded as a historical day in the annals of the history of Pittsburgh, making another milestone in our progress;

Whereas Bancroft, America's greatest historian, dubbed Pittsburgh the "Gateway of the West." Located as we are at the most important headwater of the Mississippi, he based his prophecy particularly on waterway commerce. On next Saturday we may well assume the additional title of "Air Gateway to the West."

Whereas on this auspicious occasion we pay another tribute to that eminent Pittsburgher, the first man in the world who succeeded in building a successful heavier-than-air flying machine—Samuel P. Langley, in whose honor Langley Field has been named, and for whom the Pittsburgh Board of Education has named one of our high schools as a memorial to his genius. We record our tribute to the memory of that gallant young airman, a Pittsburgher, Calbraith Perry Rodgers, first to make a transcontinental flight, and who gave his life to the cause.

Whereas our State of Pennsylvania, through its appropriation of $250,000, is largely responsible for the inauguration of this new midtranscontinental air route. The State legislature is hereby accorded our thanks.

Whereas the council also places itself on record as being thankful to the commissioners of Allegheny County for their very generous appropriations to aid the city in the construction of a wonderful A–1 municipal airport, recognizing the fact that when the port is completed the three principal cities of our great State, Philadelphia, Harrisburg, and Pittsburgh, will have outstanding airport facilities.

Whereas this auspicious starting of airway services is but the forerunner of hydroplane development, our city being fortunate in having three great and important waterway arteries connecting this industrial empire with the great distributing cities of the South, Southwest, and Northwest.

Whereas hearty thanks are due at this time to all of our people whose activities have contributed to the inauguration of this wonderful service by helping to make our people air-minded. Among these might be recorded: The Aero Club of Pittsburgh; the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, through its special committee on airport development, Arthur E. Braun, chairman; the Aeronautics Committee of the chamber, Raymond M. Marlier, chairman; Pittsburgh-Butler Airport; Pittsburgh-Greensburg Airport of the Main Aeronautics Corporation; Bettis Airport of the Curtiss-Wright interests; and to those pioneers, Col. Harry Fry, Col. William Thaw, and Casper Mayer, who were in at the beginning, blazing the way.

Whereas it is fitting that there should be special mention and official recognition by this council of the splendid work accomplished by the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, organized by a group of Pittsburgh business leaders, with George R. Hann, as the able, energetic, and tireless president, in lending its financial and business guidance in encouraging and stimulating all forms of aeronautic activities in the Pittsburgh district. And the Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., is hereby heartily commended for its work in fulfilling the need of the Pittsburgh district with these additional transportation facilities: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the mayor and the council of the city of Pittsburgh do hereby extend to the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation their most sincere felicitations upon the accomplishments of that organization in the advancement of aviation transportation in general, and the resultant distinction brought to the city through the zeal of that corporation in the selection of our city as a terminal on this important transcontinental route; and, be it further

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the councilmanic records in full, and that a copy of same be forwarded to the proper officers of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, the United States Department of Commerce, the Pennsylvania State Aeronautics Commission, the United States Post Office Department, and to the officials of Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., and to those other activities mentioned herein as now engaged in aircraft development.

Which was read.

Mr. Garland moved the adoption of the resolution, which motion prevailed.

The second air-line interest developed by P.A.I.C. involved the Cleveland-Pittsburgh air-mail route, which was later extended to Washington, D.C. It is of interest to note that upon the formation of P.A.I.C. in 1928 the first negotiations carried on by the officers of the company were for the purchase of the Cleveland-Pittsburgh line, with the belief that that operation was a nucleus upon which a permanent air-transport structure for Pittsburgh might be built. The owner, Mr. Ball, was offered either stock in the Pittsburgh company, together with the position of vice president, or total payment in cash, but at that time he was not inclined to dispose of his holdings.

In the effort to obtain Government-recognized air-transport operation between Pittsburgh and Washington, deemed so important for the Pittsburgh community, negotiations with Clifford Ball were continued at various other times in 1929 and in 1930. An agreement was finally reached, to take effect November 1, 1930, whereby P.A.I.C. purchased the controlling interest in the Cleveland-Pittsburgh air-mail and passenger operation as well as the pioneer passenger-carrying operation between Pittsburgh and Washington.

As the result of erroneous if not deliberately false testimony given at the hearings before the Senate investigating committee, distorted conclusions were drawn to the effect that Clifford Ball was forced to sell to Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation as the result of a plan worked out in cooperation with former Postmaster General Brown. Definite accusations on this score have followed. In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 4905, we find this statement by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]:

The proof shows that Mr. Ball, who was being pressed, sold out under protest to the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation. * * *

Such conclusions and accusations are in direct variance with actual fact.

All that P.A.I.C. knew of Clifford Ball's operation was that the Cleveland-Pittsburgh route had developed to the point of earning a small profit after an initial struggle against the obstacles encountered through lack of adequate capital; that this lack of capital had delayed the start of service for practically a year after the award of the initial contract, or from April 27, 1926, to April 21, 1927; that a strong organization with ample financial backing was essential for further expansion in the best interests of the United States Government and of the public.

Accordingly a few days prior to the expiration of the contract in October 1930 a proposal of purchase was again made by P.A.I.C., and this time accepted by Mr. Ball. This proposal was accepted only because it was the most favorable of three offered to him at that time—the other two being offered by the Aviation Corporation of Delaware and by the Thompson Aeronautical Corporation. The deal met with the approval of Mr. Brown, not for the reason of granting P.A.I.C. a favor or of forcing out Clifford Ball, but for the reasons established in the following testimony—Report of Procedure, pages 5743 and 5744:

The CHAIRMAN. Did you call up Mr. Orgill over long-distance telephone and tell him that he could tell Mr. Ball he had just as well give the option to the Pittsburgh Aviation Corporation, because you were not going to give him a contract?

Mr. BROWN. I don't recall that conversation. I know this, that Mr. Orgill had two or three set-ups for the Ball transaction, for Ball to sell out, and they either looked like stock-jobbing operations or they looked as though Ball would ultimately get control of the stock, and we would be back right where we were before with Ball in charge of the company, and I was unwilling to be hoodwinked in any such way if I could help it, and I insisted that we would not give a certificate to Ball until we knew the property was going to pass into the hands of people who were responsible, who were not stock jobbers, and who would do a fairly decent job out of the National Capital, where I wanted the finest operation in the whole country if I could get it.

P.A.I.C. had apparently demonstrated to Mr. Brown that it was responsible and that it could supply the type of operation desired.

The authorized capital stock of Pennsylvania Airlines was 20,000 shares, without par value, in the total sum of $200,000. Following out the preliminary agreement under which the purchase was made, P.A.I.C. paid to Clifford Ball $80,000 for 8,000 shares of stock and put into the airline company $62,500 as working capital, for which it received 6,250 shares of stock, making a total of 14,250 of the 20,000 shares authorized and issued. The remaining 5,750 shares were held by Clifford Ball under an escrow agreement with P.A.I.C. In August 1932, 750 of these shares were acquired by P.A.I.C. upon payment of $7,500 to Clifford Ball, and on October 1, 1933, the remaining 5,000 shares were acquired upon payment of $50,000. Thus on October 1, 1933, Pennsylvania Airlines was 100 percent owned by the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation.

Following the terms of the purchase agreement, Mr. Ball was elected vice president of Pennsylvania Airlines, to which the air-mail route certificate had been sublet, at a salary of $1,000 per month. He also received the total sum of $137,500 for his company, of which only $73,658.19 was represented by physical assets. As was stated in the minutes of the meeting of the P.A.I.C. executive committee on October 24, 1930, $137,500 was considered too much to pay for the assets and operations because the overhead would be entirely disproportionate to the small mileage flown. It was stated at the same meeting, however, that there were certain equities involving extensions to Washington and Norfolk under the intent and provisions of the Watres bill. In view of the pioneering operation between Pittsburgh and Washington, conducted since August 1929, these equities were definitely in favor of Pennsylvania Airlines being granted an extension to Washington and to Norfolk. Under the circumstances the officers of P.A.I.C. were empowered by the executive committee to consummate the purchase at the terms stated above. Up to November 1, 1933, the date when Mr. Ball resigned, he had never indicated in any way to the officers and employees that he was anything but well pleased with those terms.

In November 1930, the date of the purchase, Pennsylvania Airlines was not properly organized or equipped for any such major mail and passenger operation as the Post Office Department required, assuming the Cleveland-Pittsburgh service would be extended. The airline company was accordingly reorganized, proper methods of accounting and fiscal control introduced, multi-motored equipment capable of carrying mail and passengers in safety across the mountains was purchased, and the operations and maintenance thoroughly standardized. Also in recognition of the desire of the Post Office Department to build up passenger revenue so that mail appropriations could be gradually reduced over a term of years to the point where the service could finally be self-sustaining, intensive traffic solicitation efforts were instituted.

With reference to the extension from Pittsburgh to Washington, this extension had always been considered logical and essential both to the Air Mail Service and to western Pennsylvania. At that time, for example, Washington mail for Chicago and points west was routed via New York and Cleveland, requiring just twice the time as against routing via Pittsburgh. Congress had already recognized the need of this connecting service in two ways:

First. Funds had been appropriated by Congress for the construction of the Washington-Pittsburgh airway—construction was already under way.

Second. Funds had been appropriated by Congress for the service between Pittsburgh and Norfolk via Washington—the Norfolk-Washington section was never authorized.

It was not until June 8, 1931, however, that the extension to Washington of the Cleveland-Pittsburgh air mail service was granted. It is a matter of record that this was the last of eight extensions granted under the terms of the Watres Act from January 1 to June 8, 1931. The value of this extension and the way in which it was viewed by the community could not be better expressed than in the following editorial from the June 8 edition of the Pittsburgh Post Gazette:

NEW AIR-LINE INAUGURATION

The importance of the Pittsburgh-Washington air mail and passenger service, to start today, is impressed by the fact that Rear Admiral Byrd, Postmaster General Brown, and other prominent figures will participate in the opening ceremonies at Bettis Field.

One of the most significant features is that the realization of the service at this date represents the Pittsburgh spirit itself. With the need and desirability of the line—an extension of the Pittsburgh-Cleveland route and to be continued later to Norfolk—never in question, there yet was the prospect of a long delay in its establishment. Pittsburgh business leaders and the representatives of this district in Washington immediately became active in protest. While there has been some delay, it is nothing to what it would have been if Pittsburgh had not given a demonstration of its airmindedness.

The entire plan, which also calls for an extension of the route from Cleveland to Detroit, will make Pittsburgh a hub for air-mail transportation. The value of the service in affording a saving in time and the promise eventually of direct air-mail connection with our South Atlantic States, Cuba, Puerto Rico, Jamaica, and Central and South American countries needs no description.

It is noteworthy that the only slightly jarring comment had reference to the delay in granting this essential service.

That the acquisition of this airline by the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation was definitely in the public interest is demonstrated by the following figures comparing the service, mail carried, and cost to the Post Office Department of air-mail route no. 11 as operated by Clifford Ball and as operated by the Pittsburgh company:

	AM-11, operated by Clifford Ball	AM-11, operated by our company
Miles flown with mail (monthly average)	10,706	49,713
Mail pounds carried (monthly average)	5,598	11,446
Cost to Post Office Department (monthly average)	$16,821.00	$20,082.00
Cost per pound	3.00	1.75
Cost per mile	1.57	0.41

As may be seen from the figures, the operation of AM-11 by the Pittsburgh company resulted in an increase of 359 percent in service to the Government and to the public, and in an increase of 104 percent in mail pounds carried, while the cost to the Post Office Department increased by only 19 percent. At the same time cost per pound decreased 42 percent, and cost per mile 74 percent.

If all these facts are carefully and impartially considered they will demonstrate beyond doubt the character of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation and of Pennsylvania Airlines, Inc., one company in reality, a civic enterprise, organized and operated not for any special interests but for the common good. They will demonstrate that the development of these companies resulted from the exercise of sound business enterprise and initiative and in accordance with the highest business ethics. They will demonstrate beyond dispute that there was not the slightest taint of fraud or collusion in the acquiring of Pennsylvania Airlines' air-mail contract or in carrying out its terms.

With reference to the all-inclusive charge of fraud and collusion in obtaining air-mail contracts, let us view the facts as concerns this particular company. Quoting from the text of Postmaster General Farley's letter to Senator BLACK explaining the cancelation of all domestic air-mail contracts:

> I am convinced that before any of the air-mail contracts were awarded those interested held meetings for the purpose of dividing territory and contracts among themselves. * * * These conferences were held during May and June 1930.

Quoting further:

> It is incontrovertible that the 1930 meeting was held, that it was confined to those who subsequently obtained the contracts, that the provision of the law calling for competition in bidding was not carried out, and that all the present domestic air-mail carriers secured contracts based on conspiracy or collusion * * *.

Just how do the facts bear out these statements? Representatives of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation attended the meetings called by former Postmaster General Brown. Although P.A.I.C. had not been operating a scheduled air transport service, the evidence proves that more miles were being flown per month by that company's airplanes than were being flown on many of the air-mail routes then in existence. The evidence also proves that it was not in the public interest and was actually contrary to Department of Commerce regulations to operate a scheduled service over such rugged terrain as the Allegheny Mountains until the airway facilities were completed. They were not completed until the summer of 1930.

In 18 months of pioneering effort P.A.I.C. had expended in capital items more than $600,000, while the operating and development loss totaled over $200,000. At the time of the meetings in Washington this company felt that it was qualified to bid on such routes through Pittsburgh as were then contemplated. The officers of P.A.I.C. would have been most derelict in their obligation to their community, their employees, and their stockholders had they not attended the conferences called by former Postmaster General Brown.

Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation went into this meeting on the basis as stated. At that time the company had no mail contract or any interest in a company holding a mail contract. In answer to the general request made by Mr. Brown, it stated, because of its pioneering groundwork and actual flying experience, its great interest in the proposed routes between Pittsburgh and Washington and between St. Louis, Pittsburgh, and New York. These statements were the net result of the meeting as far as P.A.I.C. was concerned. In other words, this company went into the conferences with nothing and came out with nothing.

How did P.A.I.C. secure participation in any air-mail operations? First, by exchanging, in dollar-for-dollar value, physical assets worth $294,850 for $294,850 of the stock of a company that had been formed to bid on the midtranscontinental route, namely, Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc. As stated previously, P.A.I.C., several months prior to the 1930 meetings in Washington, had had negotiations with T.A.T., one of the constituent companies forming T.W.A., for the consolidation of interests. The negotiations subsequent to the Washington conferences were merely the continuation of consolidative attempts instituted in the late fall of 1929. T.W.A. was the lowest responsible bidder on the midtranscontinental route and consequently was awarded the contract. Only distortion of facts could designate such participation by the Pittsburgh company as the fruits of a conspiracy entered into during the May and June meetings.

Then in November 1930 P.A.I.C. purchased the controlling interest in the Cleveland-Pittsburgh air-mail line. Despite charges of connivance and pressure on the part of Post Office Department officials, the evidence clearly proves that this purchase resulted from P.A.I.C.'s having made to the owner, Mr. Ball, the best proposal offered at that time, and in addition having demonstrated to Postmaster General Brown its responsibility to assume charge of the lives of citizens and the safety of private and Government property.

It was not until 8 months later, and it should also be pointed out, more than a year after the 1930 conferences, that the Cleveland-Pittsburgh line was extended to Washington in accordance with the provisions of the Watres Act and through funds specifically authorized by Congress—Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill, fiscal year 1932, Seventy-first Congress, third session, House of Representatives Report No. 2068, page 18. In other words, this extension was granted according to a law passed by Congress, and the funds were specifically authorized by Congress. Again only through an intent to destroy can a fraudulent motive be attributed to a transaction that was so obviously in the public interest.

Such are the facts in connection with the participation of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation in the air-mail business. And despite such facts the contract for the Air Mail Service on the route operated by Pennsylvania Airlines—between Cleveland, Akron, Pittsburgh, and Washington—was summarily annulled.

Apart from the general charges of fraud and collusion, on which the cancelation of Pennsylvania Airlines' mail contract, as well as those of all other domestic air-mail operators, was based, frequent references were made to Pennsylvania Airlines and its parent company, Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, in the hearings before the Senate investigating committee. Although no specific accusations were made, certain erroneous inferences and conclusions were drawn, which resulted in the creation of a false impression as to these companies and which were contrary to demonstrable facts. Such distorted inferences and conclusions could easily have been avoided had the Senate investigating committee, through its agents, availed itself of certain pertinent material from the company records and files, which had been made available last January to the agents of that committee.

One of the first conclusions resulting from the hearings was that the Pittsburgh company was controlled by a certain group, the Mellon family, to be exact. The true facts, however, are incontrovertible. Of the 46,312 shares of P.A.I.C. stock issued and outstanding the three members of the Mellon family owned only 2,400 shares, or about 5 percent. Also, it has been clearly demonstrated that the Mellons made an investment in this company only after they had been assured of its civic nature and that it was to be representative of all the leading business and financial interests. In addition, testimony has been given before the Post Office and Post Roads Committee of the Senate that the late Mr. R. B. Mellon resigned his position as a director shortly after he was elected, that Mr. W. L. Mellon never attended a meeting of the directors, and that of the 61 meetings held in the past 5 years Mr. R. K. Mellon attended only 14. Testimony was also given before the same Senate committee that the Mellons had never in any way attempted to control the policies or activities of P.A.I.C.

Another conclusion resulting from the hearings conducted by the Senate investigating committee was that unreasonable profits were earned by the air-mail operators by virtue of their contracts with the Post Office Department. The records available in the files of the Post Office Department show that from November 1, 1930, to December 31, 1933, a net loss of $72,866.92 was shown by Pennsylvania Airlines. Although this may not seem a substantial sum, it should be noted that it represents 36.43 percent of the total capital of $200,000. These losses were incurred despite a most exacting economy in every department. As the Post Office records will also show, P.A.L.'s operating expenses were 7.3 percent lower than those of the majority of air-mail contractors. For example, for the 38 months of its operating history, costs totaled $0.63 per mile as against $0.68, the cost per mile as shown by the Post Office records for all operators. These figures may be broken down as follows:

	Pennsylvania Airlines	All companies
Maintenance: Cost per revenue-mile	$0.2397	$0.2615
Conducting transportation: Cost per revenue-mile	.2881	.3092
Traffic and advertising: Cost per revenue-mile	.0423	.0515
General and administrative: Cost per revenue-mile	.0600	.0576
Total cost per revenue mile	.6301	.6798

Also attention is invited to the fact that the rates of air-mail pay granted to Pennsylvania Airlines, Inc., were 28.7 percent lower than the average granted to all operators. The periods covered are arranged according to changes in rate authorizations:

Period	Pennsylvania Airlines	All companies
	Cents	Cents
Nov. 1 to Dec. 31, 1930	63.9	81.6
Jan. 1 to June 30, 1931	53.8	75.1
July 1 to Dec. 31, 1931	39.9	66.7
Jan. 1 to June 30, 1932	36.0	57.0
July 1 to Dec. 31, 1932	43.1	57.4
Jan. 1 to June 30, 1933	48.5	52.8
July 1 to Dec. 31, 1933	33.5	37.9
Nov. 1, 1930, to Dec. 31, 1933, average	40.8	57.2

As the table indicates, for a period of 38 months, or from November 1, 1930, to December 31, 1933, inclusive, Pennsylvania Airlines, Inc., has been paid by the Post Office Department an average of 16.4 cents per mile less than the average paid to all operators. It was not until November 1, 1932, that a formula was put into effect bringing these rates more nearly on a parity with those paid other operators. It can, therefore, be seen that this company has never been permitted to earn its proportionate share of the air-mail appropriation. It also may readily be seen that no unreasonable profits were earned by the company. Where, then, is the undue political influence alleged to have been used in connection with securing a so-called "fat" air-mail contract? The actual facts point to definite discrimination rather than special favor.

With further reference to the alleged undue profits, it should be pointed out that as the result of the corporate changes and developments as previously outlined, Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation evolved as both a holding and operating company with interests in the following concerns in the amounts indicated:

	Number of shares	Percentage of total Percent
Pennsylvania Airlines, Inc.	20,000	100
Pittsburgh-Butler Airport, Inc.	2,807.5	50
Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc.	29,485	4.73

With regard to the three Pittsburgh companies alone, namely, Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, Pennsylvania Airlines, Inc., and Pittsburgh-Butler Airport, Inc., the net loss of these companies, including only 50 percent of that of Pittsburgh-Butler Airport, Inc., totals $445,951.35 from date of December 1928 to December 31, 1933. Presuming that the stockholders are entitled to a reasonable return on their investment, such return at the rate of 6 percent would have resulted in this 5-year period in a net income of over $300,000. As opposed to this, there is a net loss of $446,000, or a difference of $746,000.

The figures given do not include P.A.I.C.'s percentage of T.W.A.'s net loss of $1,254,000 to December 31, 1933. Such a share as represented by the 5-percent stock interest is an additional $62,700.

Another point stressed by the special Senate committee was the matter of exorbitant salaries and bonuses paid to officers of the companies carrying the mail. Up to December 31, 1933, Pennsylvania Airlines, Inc., was in existence 38 months; and the records for that period show that the highest salary paid to any officer in any one year was $12,000, that the average salary paid to executive officers is $555 per month, and that no bonus was ever paid to any officer or employee. It is also a matter of record that the president of the parent company, P.A.I.C., who was largely instrumental in the formation of the company and who devoted a substantial amount of his time to this enterprise, has never received 1 cent of compensation.

With further reference to the undue political influence alleged to have been used by the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation to further its own selfish interests, the history, as given, of P.A.I.C.'s development and of its activities could not be a better refutation of this accusation. Even disregarding the history, these facts alone are sufficient evidence that such an accusation was ungrounded in truth:

First. Pennsylvania Airlines, Inc., during the 38 months of its existence, received a rate of mail pay 16.4 cents per mile less than was given to the average of all operators during this same period.

Second. Despite operating costs of 5 cents per mile lower than the average, Pennsylvania Airlines, Inc., because of the low rate of mail pay, suffered net losses of $72,866.92 for the 38 months' period.

Third. The net losses to December 31, 1933, of Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, Pennsylvania Airlines, Inc., and Pittsburgh-Butler Airport, Inc. (50 percent), totaled $445,951.35.

These are the facts, irrefutable against any attempts of deliberate distortion. The cry has been raised, and may be raised again, that P.A.I.C. wrote to Senators and Congressmen, to legislators at Harrisburg, and to Government officials with reference to various matters, including the construction of the airways, the mail contract held by Pennsylvania Airlines, the extension of the route from Pittsburgh to Washington. The company readily concedes using every proper avenue of approach to impress upon these people the importance of their weighing carefully the merit, or lack of merit, of the matters in question.

Since when has it become a crime for the people to acquaint their duly elected representatives with projects conceived for the common good and to ask their support of such projects? If that is a crime, then every Senator, Representative in Congress, and member of a State legislature now in office is equally guilty.

Let me summarize the principal points proven by the evidence offered:

First. That Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation was organized and operated as a community enterprise to promote the development of aviation in the Pittsburgh district. It was representative of the entire community, was controlled by no group interest, and it carried out its announced purpose and conducted its affairs in accordance with the highest business ethics.

Second. That Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation acquired in August 1930 its stock interest in Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., entirely as a result of business conferences held long prior to May 1930 and as a result of the pioneering work done in its territory, and that the then Post Office Department officials had nothing whatsoever to do with Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation's acquisition of Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc.,'s stock.

Third. That Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation dealt honestly and fairly with Mr. Clifford Ball, in a thoroughly businesslike transaction involving the acquirement of the assets of his company, and that the purchase of these assets was influenced in no way by any Post Office Department official.

Fourth. That the acquisition of the air-mail contract from Mr. Clifford Ball was in the best interests both of the Government and of the public, as demonstrated by the comparative figures, which proved that AM-11 operated by the company resulted in an increase over the operation by Mr. Ball of 359 percent in service to the Government and to the public and in an increase of 104 percent in mail pounds carried, while the cost to the Post Office Department increased by only 19 percent.

Fifth. That there was no fraud or collusion, either specific or general, between the then officials of the Post Office Department and the officials of P.A.I.C. which resulted in the securing of an air-mail contract.

Sixth. That certain testimony before the Senate investigating committee pertaining to P.A.I.C. and Pennsylvania Airlines was erroneous, if not intentionally false.

Seventh. That P.A.I.C. and Pennsylvania Airlines, throughout their history, deliberately refrained from lobbying or the attempted improper use of political influence.

Eighth. That the general imputation that high salaries were paid to executive officers of air-mail operations is directly in conflict with both the policy and practice of P.A.I.C. and P.A.L.

Ninth. That the air-mail contract held by Pennsylvania Airlines, despite low operating costs, resulted in no profit to the company but in substantial losses because of the low mail pay granted.

In the light of these facts how can the cancelation of the air-mail contract held by Pennsylvania Airlines be justified?

Mr. President, I was notified a moment ago by one of the official reporters that when I asked unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD certain editorials indicating the general feeling of the country, debate ensued, the request was not put and therefore, not granted. I now renew the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Ohio is granted.

(See exhibit B.)

Mr. FESS. I have asked for a statement of information in the way of development of the companies to which these contracts were let by competitive bidding. I had intended to read that material into the RECORD, but if the Senate will permit me to insert in the RECORD without reading, I should be glad to do it in that way. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave is granted.

(See exhibit C.)

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. FESS. I yield for a question.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator just submitted an offer of a document to be inserted in the RECORD, and then I saw the learned senior Senator from Ohio move a bound volume, with which I am entirely familiar. I wonder if that is the written matter which he proposes to have inserted in the RECORD?

Mr. FESS. Oh, no!

Mr. McCARRAN. If it is, the Senate might be in session for many months if Senators undertook to digest everything that is in that volume. There is much in the volume with which I desire to concur.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I will state to my friend that I would not ask to have anything in a book printed in the RECORD.

There came to my desk today, from the Brookings Institution, a volume called "The Economics of Air Mail Transportation", from the pen of Paul T. David—by the way, a graduate of the college of which I was once president. In this book there is much that is of immediate importance. I can refer to only a few of the paragraphs.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may I interrupt again? I hope this will be the last time.

Mr. FESS. I am glad to yield to my friend.

Mr. McCARRAN. In view of the fact that the learned senior Senator from Ohio is about to read from the book he has before him, and in view of the fact that I stated just a moment ago that there are in that volume many things with which I concur, I desire to bring back to the attention of the Senate of the United States my statement, made here just a few days ago, that this whole matter is so much in the making, there is so much of a future to the science of aviation, and so much of that future is written within the volume which the senior Senator from Ohio now holds in his hands, that it is worthy of the study and careful consideration of every Member of the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend.

Mr. AUSTIN. I beg to suggest that some of the conclusions drawn by the author of that book since writing the original text ought to be considered with knowledge of the fact that the information upon which they are based came largely, at least, from Solicitor Crowley, the significance of which I shall try to point out later.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I concur in the suggestion made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] that we ought not to rush through a matter of this kind. So many inconsistencies are involved in what has been stated at different times, when read in the light not only of recent recommendations of the Postmaster General but also in the light of the pending bill, that we ought not to rush a measure such as that now pending, and ought not to dispose of it until it has been thoroughly discussed.

For example, here is the report of the investigation of the United States Postal Air Mail Service authorized on June 21, 1932, by the House of Representatives, which is based largely upon the findings of the special investigator, Prof. John B. Crane, of Harvard University, who flew nearly all the routes, studied them at first hand, and then laid before the committee his conclusions. Many of these conclusions are in direct opposition to what is proposed by the pending bill.

For example, Professor Crane claims that the air-mail map was too rapidly made, and that too many contracts were let where the service would not justify it, and therefore that it probably would be wise to discontinue some of the service. That, of course, has been done. That was done in many cases under Postmaster General Brown.

Professor Crane also states that it would be unwise to make any further extensions, with the two exceptions of the route from North Dakota across Montana into Spokane, and the one in the Hawaiian Islands. The route into Spokane is the fourth transcontinental route, which from the very inception of this service has been in the making. It was one which the former Postmaster General thought ought to be let, but not until the airways were established, just as in letting a Government contract for air-mail service from New York to Chicago, it would not do to let a contract over the terrain of mountains without first having the airway established, the lights, the beacons, and all the necessary facilities; and it took 2 years to get them ready.

That is the reason why the route out in the Northwest has not been established. There is a link between Mandan, N.Dak., and Spokane, Wash., which is uncompleted. The link cannot be completed until the airways are established. They have been in process of construction for a considerable time, and I understand they are just about ready to be completed, if not entirely completed. That route, of course, does not fall within the inhibition of the special committee's report.

The other route is in Hawaii, where it is stated that an enlargement of the air service would be justified; but, in the face of that recommendation as to refraining from making further extensions, there have been extensions by this administration, and extensions are proposed under the pending bill in direct opposition to the specific findings of the special investigator and surveyor appointed by the special committee.

Not only that, but Professor Crane questions and, in fact, advises against the creation of a commission to supervise and regulate the operation of the Air Mail Service. The pending bill refers to commissions. I am not especially opposed to the creation of commissions, particularly if the purpose of the commissions is to conduct investigations. I do not know whether we need any commission to regulate the operation of this service. I have my doubts about it. The pending bill transfers the power and duty of regulation of this service to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

It is questionable whether or not that is wise. Everybody who is connected with the Interstate Commerce Commission or is at all conversant with its work knows that it is away behind in the performance of its particular functions; and not only that, but we have from time to time increased the number of its members because of the multiplication of their duties. The matter has worked itself into a situation where the Commission now is made up of subcommissions, and everything which is being regulated is regulated not by the full Commission but by a fraction of the Commission.

It is true that the subcommissions submit their findings to the full Commission; but Senators can understand what that means. The Commission is now so overburdened that all its work is done by divisions; and while I do not want to criticize the Commission—for it is one of the most important bodies in the country and, I think, its personnel is beyond criticism, at least in the main—unfortunately most of its work is referred to examiners and investigators who make their recommendations to the various subcommissions; and the subcommissions refer their findings back to the full Commission, which usually in a routine manner approves or disapproves those findings.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator has referred to the burdens imposed on the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the delegation of the Commission's duties to examiners, and so forth. I call his attention to a fact which, of course, he knows. The Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate has just reported to this body a bill transferring the obligations of the Commission with respect to communications by wire and cable to a new body, in an effort to relieve the Interstate Commerce Commission of that burden of work and obligation.

Mr. FESS. Precisely. That is an observation pertinent to the very matter before us.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR The Senator knows, however, that parcel-post rates—and the parcel post is quite a considerable part of the Post Office business—are now fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, under a law passed by the Congress.

Mr. FESS. Yes, Mr. President; but the question naturally arises as to whether it is wise to impose this additional duty upon a Commission originally composed of only a limited number of members, and whose numbers have been constantly increased by act of Congress to meet the additional duties we have imposed upon the Commission, until now it has gotten to be quite a large body, and yet its work is of such complication that it has had to be done in divisions. This bill proposes to impose upon an overburdened Commission a new duty which, from the nature of the case, will simply be referred to some one of the members; and that, in my judgment, raises a question involving not only the interests of the country, but as well the interests of the Commission itself.

The special investigator objects to that particular course. This is the finding of the special committee:

> It has been suggested that a new commission, committee, or agency be formed to handle this added payment problem. This is not necessary. There is only needed the establishment of a proper rate principle such as is suggested herein, and through the field audit control by the Department the rates of subsidy payments can be determined from time to time through the analysis of the contractor's account.

In other words, here is the finding of a special committee appointed to make particular investigations of the air mail with reference to whether there should be any new legislation, and it specifically objects to certain proposals; and, I regret to say, those very proposals are in the pending bill. That is an indication to me that there is some ground for the demand that we should not rush through a measure of this sort.

Mr. President, I now enter upon a particular field upon which I have been deciding to enter for a long time; that is, to read some of the important testimony before the special committee. I do this because there is some of it which never got to the country. I am not criticizing the press in a matter of that kind, because the press prints only news.

I do not think there ever was a public official who came before a committee who made such a case as did Walter Brown. I think every fair-minded man or woman will agree with that statement. There was no hesitancy. He knew the problem, and he stated it withou any hesiancy. Even under an adverse examination, under which the average witness would have been tremendously embarrassed, Mr. Brown told his story in such a way as to impress everybody with the fact that he was telling the truth, and led those who know him to resent the allegations of fraudulent conduct.

I need not go over Mr. Brown's testimony in reference to the competitive bids. That matter has been fully developed. I read from the testimony as follows:

> Senator AUSTIN. Now, when that meeting occurred, about which so much testimony has been taken, that conference in pursuance of the letter of invitation which has been referred to some time in May or June, what part or plan included in that McNary-Watres Act were you intending to operate under?
> Mr. BROWN. Well, to be very frank about it, I had very little faith in our ability to work out any plan under the provisions of the law that would save the passenger operators who had no mail contracts. However, they were pressing us to try to do it, and there had been some talk among them that I had not been sufficiently vigorous in defending the provision which was in the original draft in their interest, and I wanted to get them together and explain that to them, and I stated to them, after explaining in detail what had happened before the committee and before the steering committee of the House, in Mr. Longworth's office, I stated to them a plan had been suggested by someone of their number that relief for them could be gotten by two ways—those that were paralleling air-mail operators might get relief by our giving an additional day mail schedule to the mail operators and having the mail operators sublet that to the passenger carrier who had no mail operation; and the other way was to make extensions of existing routes and sublet those extensions to the passenger operators who had no mail contracts. I made that statement to them without any approval, because my own belief was—and I have always adhered to it—that any extension, to be justifiable, must be in the public interest, that it could not be justified merely to keep some fellow out of bankruptcy; and, second, that any subletting ought also to be in the public interest.

Mr. President, that deals with the question of how we are to protect the rights of persons who are already maintaining service in the air and who have built up their institutions at expense to themselves. Mr. Brown did not want to destroy them. Yet, at the same time, he did not want to contract for a route from the Atlantic to the Pacific made up of seven or eight links, none of the companies being capable of equipping a route such as a growing aviation industry looking to passenger service would require.

How could he secure the development of the art of flying, and at the same time serve the Government, by making contracts with half a dozen short lines? It could not be done. To do it in spite of the interests of these people, thus destroying them, did not appeal to him. So the question was, How can we get a real service for the Government in the matter of carrying the mail and at the same time not destroy a small route which could not make a contract? The method of subletting was the one he thought would be required. I now read from the testimony further:

However, I stated it to the meeting, believing that they could not reconcile their views with respect to that. I did not want them to reconcile their views. I was looking for an easy way out of the situation. I did not think they could reconcile their views on the subletting of additional mail schedules, because I knew N.A.T. had the prize mail contracts of the country, or the big volume that was flown, and they were paralleled by passenger operators, and I did not believe they would be willing to sublet a mail schedule to them. I put that problem up to them, which I did not believe they could solve, and then I put another one up to them, which was to see if they could agree among themselves as to whom the equities properly belonged, the pioneers' prescriptive claims, based upon having done the pioneering in the territory—put that problem up to them, believing they could not agree on that, and they did not, and then I thought I would be relieved from pursuing the matter, as I finally was.

Mr. President, some people were inclined to criticize that statement. The Postmaster General desired to respect the pioneer rights of the various companies. If they could agree among hemselves as to which had the pioneer rights and, especially, if two companies were flying the same route, which it was that flew the route first, and which it was that had been put to the greatest expense in the way of airports and airways, he wanted them to do so. He stated all along, however, that he did not believe they could decide these questions; and the press, including the Aviation Magazine, in reporting this meeting, stated that the operators were in a controversy among themselves as to which had the pioneer right here and which had it there.

I read further from the testimony:

Senator AUSTIN. Then in this effort, you were acting, as I understand your direct examination, under the provisions of section 7—that is to say, "The Postmaster General, when in his judgment, public interests will be promoted thereby, may make any extensions or consolidations of routes which are now or may hereafter be established"—were you not?

Mr. BROWN. That is what they depended on in the major way. Most of the things that we ultimately did, they hoped could be accomplished by extensions. They hoped both of the transcontinental operations could be worked out by extensions. That is what they wanted done.

Mr. President, of course these big companies wanted to avoid competitive bidding. They preferred to have the operations worked out by extension. Mr. Brown refused, however; and the routes were let by competitive bidding, against the urging of many of these companies, as is evidenced by the report in the aviation magazine which reported the doings of this particular meeting:

Senator AUSTIN. Is it not true that the discussion there about passenger carriers and mail carriers alike was consistently based upon this principle involved in section 7?

That is the one the Senator had read.

Mr. BROWN. It was, except to the extent there had been a proposal to sublet some additional mail schedules that had not been authorized on the mail lines to some of the passenger carriers that were paralleling those lines.

Senator AUSTIN. Now, then, have you made it clear that all of that effort under section 7 came to naught?

Mr. BROWN. The effort under section 7 broke down entirely, because I decided that it was not in the public interest to issue extensions for transcontinental service, to build up a transcontinental line—

This is the very thing with which Mr. Brown is being charged—that he built up the service by extensions. The companies wanted that done, but he refused to do it, and stated the reasons why he refused to do it. He said his refusal was—because I decided that it was not in the public interest to issue extensions for transcontinental service, to build up a transcontinental line by extensions, and those two operations we believed were necessary, the one from New York to Los Angeles by way of St. Louis and Kansas City, and the one from Atlanta by way of Dallas to Los Angeles ought to be let by competitive bidding.

And they were so let.

Senator AUSTIN. I call your attention to a letter by the present Postmaster General, addressed to the chairman of this subcommittee, dated February 14, in which statements are made to excuse the breaking-up of this fine organizaztion that you created, and in which he refers to the awarding of contracts by agreement. Now, I want to ask you whether there was any contract awarded as the result of any agreement arrived at in those conferences?

Mr. BROWN. There was no contract ever awarded by reason of any agreement, or any extension of any contract ever awarded by reason of any agreement.

Senators who do not know Mr. Brown as I do might think he lacked detailed knowledge on this subject and, therefore, is mistaken. The fact is, however, that no Senator will ever face an individual who is more clear-headed in his knowledge than the former Postmaster General.

Senator AUSTIN. He also alleges that Second Assistant Postmaster General W. Irving Glover extended contracts for a period of 6 months so as to make them terminate May 7, 1930, and that he is satisfied that the extension of those contracts for that period of 6 months was illegal. I want you to state, if you will, please, under what authority those contracts were extended, if any such were extended.

Mr. BROWN. Under a general statute applying to all mail contracts. The reference is section 1808 in the Postal Laws and Regulations, Compilation of 1932, and in the margin the reference is 39 U.S.C., 434. The text is as follows:

"Except as otherwise provided by law, no contract for carrying the mail shall be made for a longer term than 4 years. In all cases of regular contracts the contract may in the discretion of the Postmaster General, be continued in force beyond its express terms for a period not exceeding 6 months until a new contract with the same or other contractor shall be made by the Postmaster General."

It was under the provisions of that section Mr. Glover acted.

Mr. President, the extension for 6 months of the contracts of the five companies was pronounced illegal by the present Postmaster General; yet here is the law, in as specific terms as the English language can employ. Mr. Brown says it was under the provisions of this section that the action was taken.

Senator AUSTIN. What necessity under the law was there for advertising these lines or having them rebid upon?

Mr. BROWN. There was none.

Senator AUSTIN. Acting under that basic law that you have read, what was necessary for the Postmaster General to decide in order to make these extensions?

Mr. BROWN. You mean the extensions in point of time?

Senator AUSTIN. In point of time.

Mr. BROWN. All we had to do was to decide that was the best thing for the Postal Service to make that extension, because what we had in mind was issuing a route certificate under the air mail law, and we did not want to issue the route certificate until we got the Watres Act through, because under the old law we believed if we issued the certificate we would have a poundage system of pay fastened on us for the rest of the 10 years, as well as a number of other features that pertained to that law.

Why should any man interested in the welfare of the Government criticize the Postmaster General for refusing, in the case of a contract which had expired under the old law, to let in its place a new contract which would have continued for 10 years, on a poundage basis, with the limit of pay $3 a pound? Mr. Brown would not do it. He exercised the authority to extend these contracts for 6 months, within which time a law would be passed under which he could avoid the $3-a-pound payment, and make the contracts under the new terms by which there would be an enormous saving to the Government. He is criticized, however, because he took advantage of the law and refused to fasten upon the country for the next 10 years the poundage basis of pay.

Senator AUSTIN. Did this transaction involve the exercise of any authority contained in the first part of section 6 of the Watres Act, namely:

"The Postmaster General may, if in his judgment the public interest will be promoted thereby, upon the surrender of any air-mail cantract, issue in substitution therefor a route certificate for a period of not exceeding 10 years from the date service started under such contract to any contractor or subcontractor who has satisfactorily operated an air-mail route for a period of not less than 2 years."

Mr. BROWN. That was the provision of law under which we intended to act, as soon as we acted.

Senator AUSTIN. I am trying to ascertain whether this provision of law affected in any way the extension of time?

Mr. BROWN. The provision you have just read for route certificates? That did cover the extension of time for a total of 10 years from the date of the original contract.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether he intends to occupy the floor for some considerable time yet?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I do.

Mr. KING. The Senator could not conclude this evening?

Mr. FESS. No; I cannot possibly do that.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] whether at this hour we might not relieve the Senator?

Mr. McKELLAR. It depends on the wishes of the Senator from Ohio. If he wishes to proceed, it will be all right for him to do so.

Mr. FESS. The only concern I have is that I dislike to keep Senators here. I recognize the fact that somebody has to stay here so long as the Senate is in session. I am not nearly through. I am perfectly willing to proceed, but I do not want to punish the Members who have to remain here. The Senator knows I am not doing anything except trying to make the record.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that. What we shall do this afternoon depends on the Senator's pleasure. Whatever he wishes to do will be all right with me.

Mr. FESS. If it would be satisfactory to the Senator from Tennessee that I should have the floor on Monday when we convene, I should be very glad to yield at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. I see no reason why the Senator should not have the floor at that time.

Mr. FESS. Then I am glad to yield the floor with that understanding.

EXHIBIT A

[From the United States Daily, July 11, 1930]

RIGHTS OF OWNERS OF PROPERTY ADJOINING AVIATION FIELD ARE DEFINED BY DECISION—INJUNCTION AGAINST AIRPORT COMPANY SOUGHT ON GROUNDS OF TRESPASSES AND MAINTENANCE OF NUISANCE DENIED; CERTAIN RESTRICTIONS FAVORING COMPLAINANTS IMPOSED TOLEDO, OHIO.

FREDERICK L. SWETLAND AND RAYMOND H. SWETLAND v. CURTISS AIRPORTS CORPORATION, OHIO AIR TERMINALS, INC., AND CURTISS FLYING SERVICE, INC.; DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO, EQUITY NO. 3023

(The full text of the court's opinion, delivered July 7, follows:)

Hahn, District Judge: This is an action for an injunction because of alleged trespasses and the alleged maintenance of a nuisance by one or more of the defendants.

Plaintiffs are the owners of a tract of 135 acres located on the west side of Richmond Road in the village of Richmond Heights, Ohio. The defendant, Ohio Air Terminals, Inc., a subsidiary of the defendant, Curtiss-Wright Corporation, owns a tract of about 272 acres immediately opposite on the east side of Richmond Road. The westerly half of the defendants' property is located in the village of Richmond Heights, Ohio, and the easterly half is located in the village of Mayfield.

NATURE OF NEIGHBORHOOD IS SHOWN BY COURT

Defendants acquired their property for and intend to use it as an airport and flying school.

Plaintiffs' property constitutes the west boundary of defendants' property for 1,434 feet. It extends beyond the defendants' property on the north for 812.59 feet, while defendants' property extends beyond plaintiffs' property to the south 267.68 feet.

Plaintiffs acquired their property about 25 years ago. A few years after its acquisition, a substantial country residence and other buildings and conveniences were erected and constructed, so that the property may properly be described as a high-grade, self-contained country estate; the value of the buildings and other improvements, according to the testimony of R. H. Swetland, being approximately $115,000.

At the time when the property was acquired and until the construction of defendants' airport, the entire neighborhood was devoted to farming and residence purposes. There are as yet no railroads, street cars, factories, stores, gasoline stations, or other enterprises of any sort, other than defendants' airport, which create noise or attract crowds in the vicinity. The nearest business, with the exception of defendants' airport, is a gasoline station located at the corner of Richmond and Chardon Heights, about two thirds of a mile away. The neighborhood is very sparsely settled. For a distance of 3 miles north and south of the airport on Richmond Road there are only 12 dwellings, some of which are occupied by tenant farmers, and others by the owners of the property; and the airport and aviation school are so located as to be a minimum annoyance and inconvenience to residents located on the east side of the city of Cleveland, while servicing that city. Most of the property is in a more or less uncultivated condition. The owners seem to be awaiting the time when the growth of the city will absorb their properties.

EXTENSIVE OPERATIONS PLANNED BY COMPANY

The main residences upon the Swetland property are located at approximately 250 and 300 feet from the center of Richmond Road, and opposite the center of defendants' airport. A repair shop of the defendants will be located a quarter of a mile from the nearest Swetland residence. The warming-up of the engines of the airplanes prior to taking off, as required by the regulations of the Secretary of Commerce, will take place on the completed airport at a distance of a quarter of a mile from the nearest Swetland residence.

As the crow flies, the properties in question are located 11 miles east of the city of Cleveland, but the distance over improved roads from the properties to the center of the city of Cleveland is between 14 and 15 miles.

Defendants acquired the main tracts of the property which now constitute the airport by deeds dated May 23, 1929, recorded May 28, 1929. On May 27 plaintiff wrote defendants Curtiss Airports Corporation a letter of protest against the proposed use of the property for airport purposes. That letter was acknowledged by Curtiss Airports Corporation by letter dated May 2, 1929. This action was begun on June 1, 1929.

Immediately after acquiring the property, defendants commenced to improve the same for use as an aviation field, and, as soon as temporary runways were installed, some flying was done from this airport. About the middle of December Curtiss Flying Service commenced the operation of a flying school on the property; not, however, upon an extensive scale. In November 1929, defendants commenced the erection of a hangar having a capacity of approximately 20 planes. They plan to erect on the property 3 other similar hangars, 1 of which will include a service station for airplanes. They will also erect a station for the use of passenger airplanes taking off from the field, or transport planes, and a grandstand for the accommodation of spectators attending exhibitions which the defendants contemplate conducting on the property; also a gasoline and service station for automobiles. Defendants' plans include a parking space for 460 automobiles. One of these parking spaces is designed to accommodate 250 automobiles, and is located along a strip of land immediately adjacent to Richmond road and opposite the F. L. Swetland residence.

NO OBJECTION FROM OTHER ADJOINING RESIDENTS

Without going into an analysis of the evidence, the court finds that some flying has been done by the employees of the defendants in altitudes lower than 500 feet.

The various defendant corporations are all subsidiaries of the so-called "Curtiss-Wright Corporation", and the defendant, Curtiss Flying Service, Inc., which has been and will be in charge of the flying at defendants' airport, is well equipped, organized, and financed to conduct flying operations from the field in a safe manner; and its disposition is to be of as little annoyance as possible to the plaintiffs. It is the disposition of the defendants to conduct the airport and flying school with the most modern equipment and appliances. Those in charge of the operation of the airport and the pilots flying therefrom have the highest qualifications. Residents on three sides of the plaintiff's property have no objection to the operations of the defendants. On the other hand they seem to welcome the presence of defendants' airport and flying school. Accordingly it is possible, and the defendants have testified that it is their intention to conduct none or only a small part of their operations over the property of the plaintiffs.

The fact that defendants' property extends 267.68 feet farther south than plaintiffs' makes this in a measure possible.

From the testimony of G. H. Noyes, in charge of the weather bureau at Cleveland, it appears that a small percentage of the winds prevailing in the airport are due east or west; that in April and May the prevailing winds are from the northeast; and in June, July, August, September, and October, in the south.

Further facts will be stated later on in this opinion.

LEGISLATIVE POLICY TO ENCOURAGE AVIATION

A determination of this case requires a decision upon the following points:

1. Is a private airport and flying school a nuisance per se?

2. Has the application of the maxim—Cujus est solum ejus est usque ad coelum—fixed or established such property rights in a landowner as to make flights over his lands a trespass or a nuisance?

3. What is the effect of legislation, both National and State, and is it, as applied to this case, a reasonable exercise of the police power?

(1) Because of the inventions and activities of the Wright brothers, at Dayton, Ohio, Ohio regards itself as the mother State of aviation. In the report to the joint legislative committee on aviation for 1928, eight manufacturers of aircraft in Ohio reported combined capitalization of $5,504,805, employment of 1,655 persons, and production of 987 planes, valued at $4,000,803.

(Report of the Ohio director of aeronautics, 1929, p. 41.)

The Legislature of Ohio has made adequate provision for municipal airports by providing for the appropriation of real estate within or without the corporate limits of any Ohio municipality (Ohio General Code, sec. 3677; Chandler v. Jackson (Ohio), 167 N.E. 396). And the issuance of bonds for that purpose (Ohio General Code, sec. 3939; State v. City of Cleveland, 160 N.E. 241). As will hereinafter appear, the Legislature of the State of Ohio, in 1929, passed a comprehensive act regulating aviation, and the Ohio Legislature is said to have passed the first mandatory act requiring every municipality in the State to be marked for aeronautical purposes (General Code, secs. 6310–6344). It is clearly the legislative policy to encourage aviation.

In view of this declared legislative policy, we have no difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that a private airport, flying school, or landing field such as the defendants propose to operate is not a nuisance per se. It is obvious that, although aviation is still to some extent in the experimental stage, it is of great utility in times of peace, and will be a great protection to the Nation in times of war.

NOISE OF PLANES IS OBJECTED TO

In fact, it is indispensable to the safety of the Nation that airports and flying schools such as contemplated by the defendants be encouraged in every reasonable respect. An airport, landing field, or flying school can be regarded as a nuisance only if located in an unsuitable location (Euclid v. Ambler, 272 U.S. 365, 388; 20 R.C.L. 440; 46, C.J. 666) or if operated so as to interfere unreasonably with the comfort of adjoining property owners. The airport of the defendant here is suitably located; that its location is suitable is evidenced by its surroundings, which we have already set forth, and the almost unanimous consent of the adjoining property owners. There has been no protest as to its location except by the plaintiffs and, perhaps, two other persons who testified in their behalf.

It is claimed that certain obnoxious features arise out of the operation of the airport, and it is necessary that we consider them in detail. Complaint is made that there is certain noise arising from the warming-up of airplanes and in their operation over the property of the plaintiffs; and noise may be of such a character as to constitute a nuisance (46 C.J. 683 et seq.; 20 R.C.L. 445). But we are of the opinion that the noise from the operation of the airport, as the evidence shows the defendants will operate it, and the noise of the airplanes when flying at proper altitudes, are not of such a degree as to annoy persons of ordinary sensibilities (Gas Co. v. Freeland, 12 O.S. 392). The noises are less than plaintiffs might be compelled to endure from industrial plants which might properly locate in this locality (Annotation, 23 A.L.R. 1407).

INJUNCTION AGAINST DUST NUISANCE PROPER

Plaintiffs complain of dust which is blown from the defendants' lands, especially when airplanes are warming up and taking off from the landing field (46 C.J. 686). It is clear from the evidence that it is not necessary, in the proper conduct of the airport, that any dust shall arise therefrom. The evidence shows that the necessity of raising dust may be obviated by having concrete runways or runways having a sufficient amount of grass thereon; and the defendants should be required to take these precautions. Plaintiffs are entitled to an injunction enjoining the defendants from permitting dust in substantial and annoying quantities to be blown in the direction of their buildings and grounds.

Complaint is also made on the part of the plaintiffs that at various times, particularly on Sundays and holidays, crowds will be attracted to the grounds of the defendants, either at times of exhibitions or on business or as a matter of curiosity. It is, of course, probable that at times crowds will come to the defendants' airport, and it may be, to some extent, annoying to the plaintiffs; but it seems to us that the court would not be justified in enjoining the conduct of the airport on that ground. Courts have refused to do so in similar situations.

In this respect the airport comes, to a limited extent, into the same category as places of amusement, which the courts have refused to enjoin merely upon the ground that they may attract crowds of persons (46 C.J. 690, 692, note 15, 699). In Burroughs v. City of Dallas (C.C.A. 5, 276 Fed. 812), the court refused to restrain the operation of a scenic railway as a nuisance. No doubt it attracted crowds, at least to the extent to which the defendants' airport will attract crowds. It is, of course, altogether likely that after the novelty of aviation has worn off curiosity seekers will not so often be attracted to the airport of the defendants.

OBJECTION AGAINST DROPPING CIRCULARS IS SUSTAINED

The evidence shows that at one time airplanes of the defendants distributed circulars, many of which fell upon the grounds of the plaintiffs, to their very great annoyance. Such distribution of circulars was an interference with the property rights of the plaintiffs, and they are entitled to an injunction, to prevent a repetition of such distribution of circulars.

It appears from the evidence that after the airport has become established, the defendants expect to put in some kind of a lighting system for the purpose of enabling aviators to safely land at their airport during the night season. Depending upon the kind of a lighting system used, and the manner of its use, the same may or may not constitute a nuisance as against which the plaintiffs may be entitled to relief (Cornell Law Review Quarterly, vol. 15, p. 303, February 1930).

However, as to this matter, as with many other matters which may arise in the operation of this airport, any action of the court at this time and in the present stage of this case would be premature. Plaintiffs have brought this action as promptly as possible, and they have the advantages which result from the earliest possible application to a court of equity. On the other hand, they suffer a disadvantage in that the practices which will prevail in the operation of this airport have not yet become established, and the court is, therefore, in some respects, not justified in granting injunctive relief upon the theory that the defendants will not operate their airport with the most modern appliances and with the least possible annoyance and injury to the plaintiffs (Hazlett v. Marland Refining Co. (C.C.A. 8, 30 F. (2d) 808, 809). On the contrary, the evidence justifies the conclusion that the attitude of the defendants is such that they will undertake to so operate their airport as to subject the plaintiffs to the least possible inconvenience and annoyance.

DECREASE IN VALUE CALLED AN IMMATERIAL POINT

Evidence has been offered upon the issue as to whether or not the property of the plaintiffs will decrease in value if the location of the airport upon the adjoining property is not enjoined. We find it unnecessary to determine this issue, for if it be conceded that the property of the plaintiffs will decrease in value if the airport is permitted to operate, that alone would not entitle the plaintiffs to an injunction (Hazlett v. Marland Refining Co., supra; 46 C.J. 682, note 25). If the airport is not a nuisance, its operation may not be enjoined because to some extent the value of the plaintiff's property will be decreased for the purpose to which it is now devoted. It is a matter of conjecture and speculation whether the property of the plaintiffs will increase in value for other purposes, and whether the plaintiffs will ultimately sustain actual financial loss because of the operation of the airport.

It may be conceded that the property of the plaintiffs will be less desirable for the purposes of a country estate. No one will contend that the plaintiffs will have the same enjoyment of peace and quiet which they have had in this locality for nearly a quarter of a century. This they have been able to have because of the use to which the adjoining property was devoted, but they at no time had a right to prevent the adjoining owner from using this property for any reasonable purpose. They have been fortunate in that they have been able to enjoy their country estate as they have for so long a time. They of the times.

RIGHTS OF LANDOWNER IN AIR SPACE UNDECIDED

(2) In the legislation hereinafter considered it is clear that both Congress and the State legislatures proceeded upon the theory that a landowner has no exclusive property in the higher air spaces. There is nothing in that legislation to indicate that either legislative body, in establishing the regulations regarding air navigation therein set forth, considered that there was involved the taking of any new property. Both the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of this State in broad terms protect rights of property, but neither contains any classification or definition of property, any more than they reveal the content of the word "liberty" (Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113). The determination of what the term "property" includes is a judicial function (and, within constitutional powers, a legislative function).

An owner's rights in land in this State are amply protected by constitutional guaranties; but what those rights are, so far as air space above the land is concerned, have not been declared by legislation, nor have such rights been fixed by the courts. That the landowner's rights are not limited to the surface of the earth, but extend into the space above it, is settled by many well-considered cases. A number of those cases will be referred to later on in this opinion. The plaintiffs rely strongly upon the ancient maxim, "Cujus est solum ejus est usque ad coelum", which has been frequently quoted and reiterated in the opinion of the courts and in legal literature generally for many generations. Certainly the possible rights of the landowner as to the air spaces over his land could not be more broadly asserted. The venerability of this maxim, its frequent repetition, and the high standing of many of those who have relied upon it not only warrant but call for a careful consideration of its origin and application in adjudicated cases.

The first reference to the maxim in English law is Lord Coke's statement, in Liber 1, section 1, page 4, where, in writing on the subject "Terra", he says:

"And lastly the earth hath in law a great extent upward, not only of water, as hath been said, but of aire, and all other things even up to heaven, for cujus est solum ejus est usque ad coelum, as it is holden."

In support of his text Lord Coke cites three cases from the Year Book: 22 H. VI, 59; 10 Edward IV, 14; 14 Henry VIII, 12. The first case is a dispute as to the ownership of six young goshawks as between landlord and tenant under a lease. The second case relates to the theft of muniments of title, in which the case of the goshawks is referred to. The latest one discusses the right of the Bishop of London as landlord to certain herons and shovelers nesting in trees on land which the bishop had leased.

As to the origin of the maxim itself, an examination shows that the words are attributable to Accursius, a glossator or commentator on the code, who flourished in Bologna about the year 1200. Mr. Bouve, in a very interesting discussion on this same subject, finds evidence that the son of Accursius was taken to England by Edward I, on his return from the Holy Land, and there lectured on subjects of Roman law at the University of Oxford. It is suggested that this was the reason that the maxim gained currency, as stated in Burry v. Pope (1588) (1 Cro. Elizabeth, 118), as early as Edward I, who reigned from 1239 to 1307. But the phrase as used by its author, Accursius, was employed by him in a discussion of rights under the code to have burial plots or tombs free from the interference of an overhanging building.

EARLY CASES ON POINT DISCUSSED

After Coke's commentaries there are two contemporaneous cases which should be noted; the earliest is Penruddock's case (1597) (3 Coke's Reports, 205). In that case the defendant's building overhung plaintiff's land in such a way that rain water fell upon it. The court held that the plaintiff had made out a case of nuisance and was entitled to abate the same.

The other case was Baten's case (1611) (9 Coke's Reports, 54 (b)). Here, again, the defendant's house projected over the plaintiff's freehold. The court held that such projection constituted a nuisance and ordered an abatement thereof.

The next case after 1611 is that of Fay v. Prentice (1845) (1 C.B. 827). Here the defendant's cornice projected over the plaintiff's garden and precipitated rain water thereon. Judge Maule cited Penruddock's case and Baten's case and held that the facts alleged constituted a nuisance.

The next case is Corbett v. Hill (1874) (9 L.R.Eq. 671). The plaintiff owned two contiguous houses in London, one of which was sold to the defendant by a conveyance correctly describing the ground site of the house conveyed. One of the first-floor rooms in the house which the plaintiff retained projected over the site and was supported by a house which the plaintiff had conveyed to the defendant. The vice chancellor, Sir W. M. James, held that the plaintiff's house could not overhang the defendant's site, and, by way of dictum, stated that the defendant had a property right in the column of air over his entire property site and that the intrusion or overhanging of the plaintiff's house was a trespass thereto.

The next in order is the case of Ellis v. Loftus (1874) (L.R. 10, C.P. 10). This was an action for injuries suffered by the plaintiff's horse as a result of being kicked by a horse belonging to the defendant. The defendant's horse did its kicking through an iron fence separating the property of the litigants. Three of the four judges indicated that the defendant was negligent in not more securely guarding its horse. There was also an agreement that some of the horse's body must have trespassed by invading the plaintiff's property. Mr. Justice Denman, in considering this phase of the case, quoted the familiar maxim, "Cujus est solum ejus est usque ad coelum."

In Clifton v. Burry (1887, 4 L.T.R. 8), the court held that target practice across the plaintiff's property constituted a nuisance with reference to the bullets that actually struck on the property, but not with respect to those that passed across the property without touching it.

Side by side with these cases we have the familiar remark of Lord Ellenborough in Pickering v. Rudd (1815) (4 Camp. 219), in which he said:

"I do not think it is a trespass to interfere with the column of air superincumbent on the close * * *. But I am by no means prepared to say that firing across a field in vacuo, no part of the contents touching it, amounts to a clausum fregit. Nay, if this board overhanging the plaintiff's garden be a trespass, it would follow that an aeronaut is liable to an action of trespass quare clausum fregit at the suit of the occupier of every field over which his balloon passes in the course of his voyage."

These are the principal English cases from the time of Lord Coke to date, or at least beyond the date of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States in 1787, and to these cases we must look for an interpretation of the English common-law rights in air space. (This résumé of the English cases is a summary from an able brief filed in this case by Henry G. Hotchkiss, author of Hotchkiss on Aviation Law.)

AMERICAN DECISIONS GIVEN IN QUOTATIONS

The decisions of the American courts have often been collected. It is sufficient for our purpose here to quote from the pamphlet prepared by Frederick P. Lee, legislative counsel of the United States Senate, page 87, as follows:

"It has been held to be a trespass to thrust one's arm into the space over a neighbor's land (Hannabalson v. Sessions, 116 Iowa, 457 (1902)), or to shoot over another's land (Whittaker v. Stangvick, 100 Minn. 386 (1907)), * * *. Overhanging branches constitute a legal wrong, either a trespass or a nuisance (Grandona v. Lovdal, 70 Calif. 161 (1886); Tanner v. Wallbrun, 77 Mo. App. 262 (1898); Ackerman v. Ellis, 81 N.J.L. 1 (1911); Countryman v. Lighthill, 24 Hun. (N.Y.) 405 (1881)). A board attached to defendant's building and overhanging plaintiff's land constitutes a trespass (Puorto v. Chieppa, 78 Conn. 401 (1905)).

"So also projecting eaves (Harrington v. McCarthy, 169 Mass. 492 (1897); Aiken v. Benedict, 39 Barb. (N.Y.) 400 (1863); Huber v. Stark, 124 Wis. 359 (1905)), cornices (Wilmarth v. Woodcock, 58 Mich. 482 (1885); Lawrence v. Hough, 35 N.J.Eq. 371 (1882); Crocker v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co. 61 App. Div. (N.Y.), 226 (1901)); roofs (Murphy v. Bolger, 60 Vt. 723 (1888)) and walls (Barnes v. Berrendes, 139 Calif. 32 (1903); Norwalk Heating & Lighting Co. v. Vernan, 75 Conn. 662 (1903); Langfeldt v. McGrath, 33 Ill. App. 158 (1839); Codman v. Evans, 7 Allen (Mass.), 431 (1863); Lyle v. Littel, 83 Hun. (N.Y.) 532 (1895)) have been held to be wrongful and to give rise to an action of some sort. In Butler v. Frontier Telephone Co. (186 N.Y. 486 (1906)), it was held that ejectment would lie for the space occupied by a telephone wire strung across plaintiff's land at a height varying from 20 to 30 feet. Vann, J., expressed himself as follows:

"The surface of the ground is a guide, but not the full measure, for within reasonable limitations land includes not only the surface but also the space above and the part beneath * * *. 'Usque ad coelum' is the upper boundary, and while this may not be taken too literally, there is no limitation within the bounds of any structure yet erected by man. So far as the case before us is concerned, the plaintiff as the owner of the soil owned upward to an indefinite extent * * *. According to fundamental principles and within the limitations mentioned, space above land is real estate the same as the land itself * * *. Unless the principle of usque ad coelum is abandoned, any physical, exclusive, and permanent occupation of space above land is an occupation of the land itself and a disseisin of the owner to the extent."

AUTHORITY AS TO SPACE USED BY AVIATOR LACKING

Mr. Lee has quoted the article of George C. Bogert, at one time dean of the Cornell University School of Law and chairman on the committee on uniform aviation act and the conference of commissioners on uniform State laws (6 Cornell Law Review Quarterly, 271, 296, 297). (See also Hotchkiss on Aviation Law, p. 16, and the very excellent survey of the cases in an annotation, 42 A.L.R. 945.)

In the cases of Peabody v. United States (231 U.S. 530), Portsmouth Harbor Land & Hotel Co. v. United States (250 U.S. 1), and Portsmouth Harbor Land & Hotel Co. v. United States (260 U.S. 327), the Supreme Court of the United States held, in effect, that the shooting of guns across the land of an adjoining owner from forts within 200 feet of a corner of the adjoining owner's property constituted trespasses. It is fairly inferable from the location of the forts that the shots fired were at low altitudes. These cases do not determine the rights of a landowner to the superincumbent air space, certainly not as to land situated in the State of Ohio.

The maxim relied upon was referred to in the cases of Winton v. Cornish (1931) (5 Ohio 478), Frazier v. Brown (12 Ohio Stat. 294, 304), and Winslow v. Fuhrman (25 Ohio Stat. 639, 651), but in none of these cases was the court attempting to determine rights to air space in the higher altitudes normally traversed by the aviator.

The cases above referred to are those usually cited in support of the proposition that a landowner has the exclusive right to occupy all of the air space above his property to an indefinite extent. There doubtless are other cases along the same line, but the cited cases fairly show the trend of the decisions in the aspect here involved. It is safe to say that there are no cases which involve an adjudication of property rights as appurtenant to land in the air space which would normally be used by an aviator.

MAXIM HELD NOT TO CONSTITUTE LAW

It is true that in many of them the maxim is quoted and, seemingly, is used by the courts as a basis for their decisions; but it is the points actually decided in the cases, not the maxim, which establish the law. In other words, it can be said that the maxim is the law only to the extent that it has been applied in the adjudicated cases. Maxims are but attempted general statements of rules of law. The judicial process is the continuous effort on the part of the courts to state accurately these general rules, with their proper and necessary limitations and exceptions. A maxim, said Sir Frederick Pollock, "is a symbol of vehicle of the law, so far as it goes; it is not the law itself, still less the whole of the law, even on its own ground."

And in Yarmouth v. France (19 Q.B.D. 647, 653, 17 E.R.C. 217), Lord Esher said:

"I need hardly repeat that I detest the attempt to fetter the law by maxims. They are almost invariably misleading; they are for the most part so large and general in their language that they always include something which really is not intended to be included in them."

The claims of the plaintiffs in invoking the maxim amount to an invocation of the doctrine of stare decisis, also called the doctrine of precedents (19 C.J. 382, note 86). But this doctrine contemplates only such points as are actually involved and determined in a case (7 R.C.L., pp. 1003 and 1004); Kentucky Coal Lands Co. v. Mineral Development Co. (C.C.A. 6; 219 Fed. 45, 56); C. F. Medaris Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue (C.C.A. 6; 38 F. (2d) 812, 813); and Hill v. Atlantic & N.C.R. Co. (143 N.C. 539; 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 606, 622, 623); also, Losse v. Buchanan (51 N.Y. 476, 484).

RULE FOR MEASURING EXTENT OF CONTROL IS SUGGESTED

So far we have considered the maxim as if there were no question as to its real meaning. Its meaning has never received critical examination and discusion by the courts, and there is a grave question as to whether or not the proponents of the maxim make any real progress by advancing it as a basis for the claim that an owner of land has exclusive proprietary rights to an indefinite extent in the superincumbent air space. This point has received careful consideration in a learned article by Hiram L. Jome, in 62 American Law Review (November–December 1928, pp. 894 and 895), from which we quote:

"The common law maxim states that the landowner owns up to but not including the caelum. What, then, was the caelum? Though the word was loosely used by Latin writers, it was commonly employed to refer to the lower air space, the area in which the birds fly and the clouds drift and from which the rain falls and the lightning strikes. Occasionally it meant God, 'heaven the home of the happy dead', and the resting place of the stars. Birds fly near the ground, storm clouds sometimes hover at an altitude of a few hundred or 1,000 feet. It is only up to the beginning of this coelum which the landowner owns. Virgil refers to a 'machina aequata coelo'—a derrick equal in height to the coelum. The machine of which he sings stood on top of a wall. The entire distance probably did not exceed 100 feet. Apparently, therefore, according to good Latin usage, the coelum was a space which began only a short distance above the surface of the earth. One Latin scholar described it as the space lying only a little above the highest tree tops and buildings. The area below this caelum belongs to the owner of the surface."

See, further, pages 894 to 897 of the foregoing article."

In a field in which the courts still are pioneering, we may also consult with profit the opinions of legal text writers, which are usually learned and impartial. The Paquete Habana (175 U.S. 677, 700, 701). Pollick, in his work on Torts, 13th edition, page 362, says, in part:

"It does not seem possible on the principles of the common law to assign any reason why an entry above the surface should not also be a trespass, unless indeed it can be said that the scope of possible trespass is limited by that of possible effective possession, which might be the most reasonable rule." * * *

This author is much quoted as announcing the rule that a landowner has an exclusive right to the air space above his land only to the extent that such ownership is necessary to and for effective possession (32 Harvard Law Review, 569; 30 Columbia Law Review, 579).

Sir John Salmond, in his work on the law of torts, 7th edition, page 237, after discussing the maxim, "Cujus est solum ejus est usque ad coelum", comes to the conclusion:

ENTRY ALONE SAID NOT TO BE OBJECTIONABLE

"It does not follow from this, however, that an entry above the surface is in itself an actionable trespass; nor is there any sufficient authority that this is so. Such an extension of the rights of a landowner would be an unreasonable restriction of the right of the public to the use of the atmospheric space above the earth's surface. It would make it an actionable wrong to fly a kite, or send a message by a carrier pigeon, or ascend in an aeroplane, or fire artillery, or even in cases where no actual or probable damage, danger, or inconvenience could be proved by the subjacent landowners. The state of the authorities is such that it is impossible to say with any confidence what the law on this point really is. It is submitted, however, that there can be no trespass without some physical contact with the land (including, of course, buildings, trees, and other things attached to the soil), and that a mere entry into the air space above the land is not an actionable wrong unless it causes some harm, danger, or inconvenience to the occupier of the surface. When any such harm, danger, or inconvenience does exist, there is a cause of action in the nature of a nuisance.

"In respect of airplanes and other aircraft this matter is now dealt with by statute. By section 9 of the Air Navigation Act, 1920, it is provided that 'no action shall lie in respect of trespass or in respect of nuisance by reason only of the flight of aircraft over any property at a height above the ground which, having regard to wind, weather, and all the circumstances of the cases, is reasonable, or the ordinary incidents of such flight, so long as the provisions of this act and any order made thereunder and of the convention are duly complied with.'"

LEGISLATION LIMITING BUILDING HEIGHTS APPROVED

Prof. Francis M. Burdick, in his Law of Torts, fourth edition, at page 406, after discussing intrusions upon land at low altitudes, states:

"So, it is submitted, throwing or firing a missile or sending a balloon or driving an airplane through the air over the land of another sufficiently low to invade that space which the owner of the soil may effectively possess amounts to a legal breaking of his close. But it is reasonable to believe that passage through the air space superjacent to land at a height beyond that at which the owner of the soil can exercise effective possession will not be treated as a trespass, though dropping objects onto the land or falling onto the land would constitute such trespass."

And see the Jural Nature of Land, by Stuart S. Ball, 23 Illinois Law Review, 45 (1928–29).

The decisions have not fixed the altitude to which a landowner may extend his rights. On the other hand, legislation which, however, does not purport to regulate the right to use air space, but which limits the height of buildings in cities, has been sustained as being constitutional. Welch v. Swasey (193 Mass. 364; 79 N.E. 745; 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1160; 118 A.S.R. 523), affirmed in Welch v. Swasey (214 U.S. 91; 53 L.ed. 923 (1909)).

It appears from these authorities that the maximum has never been applied in cases which fix rights in air space normally traversed by the aviator. There are no precedents or decisions which establish rules of property as to such air space. The courts have never critically analyzed the meaning of the maximum, and there is much doubt whether a strict and careful translation of the maximum would leave it so broad in its signification as to include the higher altitudes of space. No constitutional or legislative provisions or statutes have heretofore established any exclusive proprietary rights in a landowner to the superincumbent air space normally traversed by the aviator. Constitutional provisions guaranteeing the right of property do not, in our opinion, forbid legislation which has for its purpose the regulation and adjustment of the conflicting rights and interests of the landowner and the public. Any regulatory legislation not unreasonable or arbitrary would be constitutional, it seems to us, as against the constitutional guaranties protecting property.

(3) We come now to a consideration of the legislation affecting aviation. For some years prior to 1926 there was extended discussion by committees of the American Bar Association and writers in legal magazines as to the power of Congress and the State legislature to enact regulatory legislation relating to aviation. At first the view was expressed that, because of the supposed rights of a landowner under the maxim, "Cujus est solum ejus est usque ad coelum", the use of the air space for aviation could, unless with the consent of the landowner, be obtained only through the exercise of the right of eminent domain; but soon the consensus of opinion was that Congress and the State legislatures had the power to enact reasonable regulations to adjust private rights and harmonize conflicting interests relating to aviation, and that landowners, at most, did not have exclusive rights in the superincumbent air space.

LEGISLATION AFFECTING ACTIVITY CONSIDERED

The power of Congress was considered from the point of view of different grants of power to Congress, including the war power, the maritime power, power to make treaties, and the power to regulate commerce among the various States and foreign countries (Hotchkiss, on aviaion law, secs. 54–57; Zollman, Law of the Air, sec. 54 et seq.). It may be assumed in this case that in enacting the Air Commerce Act of 1926 Congress has legislated under the latter grant of power (Neiswonger v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 35 F. (2d) 761, 763; the Air Commerce Act of 1926, by Frederick P. Lee, American Bar Association Journal, June 1926, and 78 University of Pennsylvania Law Review 663; "Federal Aeronautics Legislation", 76 University of Pennsylvania Law Review 798), within the field of which power Congress exercises police power (2 Willoughby, on the Constitution of the United States, sec. 476, p. 780; the Lottery cases, 188 U.S. 321, 47 L.ed. 492; Brooks v. United States, 267 U.S. 432, 436, 437, 69 L.ed. 699, 37 A.L.R. 1407).

The provisions of the Air Commerce Act of 1926 which it is necessary to consider in arriving at a conclusion in this case are:

"SEC. 10. Navigable air space: As used in this act, the term navigable air space means air space above the minimum safe altitudes of flight prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce under section 3, and such navigable air space shall be subject to a public right of freedom of interstate and foreign air navigation in conformity with the requirements of this act."

Section 3 (e) of the act provides:

"Regulatory powers: The Secretary of Commerce shall by regulation establish air traffic rules for the navigation, protection, and identification of aircraft, including rules as to safe altitudes of flight and rules for the prevention of collisions between vessels and aircraft."

There can be no doubt of the power of Congress to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to promulgate regulations which are not violative of constitutional rights, and such regulations have the force of law (United States v. Grimaud, 220 U.S. 506, 31 S.Ct. 480, 55 L.ed. 536; McKinley v. United States, 249 U.S. 397, 39 S.Ct. 324, 63 L.ed. 668; Avent v. United States, 266 U.S. 127, 45 S.Ct. 34, 69 L.ed. 202; United States v. Michigan Portland Cement Co., 270 U.S. 521, 525, 46 S.Ct. 395, 70 L.ed. 713; Commonwealth v. Slocum, 230 Mass. 180, 119 N.E. 687).

Pursuant to the power vested in him, the Secretary of Commerce promulgated the air commerce regulations, and among these chapter 7, section 74 (G), provides:

"Height over congested and other areas: Exclusive of taking off from or landing on an established landing field, airport, or on property designated for that purpose by the owners, and except as otherwise permitted by section 79 (the provisions of sec. 79 are not pertinent here), aircraft shall not be flown—

"(1) Over the congested parts of cities, towns, or settlements, except at a height sufficient to permit of a reasonably safe emergency landing, which in no case shall be less than 1,000 feet.

"(2) Elsewhere at a height less than 500 feet, except where indispensable to an industrial flying operation."

This regulation, insofar as it designates 1,000 feet over congested areas and 500 feet elsewhere, has been construed generally by the officials of the Department of Commerce of the United States as a prescription of minimum safe altitudes of flight, as the Secretary of Commerce was empowered to do under sections 3 and 10 of the Air Commerce Act of 1926 (Brewster v. Gage, 280 U.S. 327). Counsel for the defendants assert that under the above regulations they have a right to fly over the property of the plaintiffs at altitudes in excess of 500 feet, and at lesser altitudes in taking off from or landing on the landing field established by them. We shall hereinafter in this opinion consider the validity of their claim.

The Air Commerce Act of 1926 having been passed by Congress, the Legislature of the State of Ohio, which had not theretofore passed any regulatory legislation, enacted a general act relative to aeronautics. This act became effective June 26, 1929. Certain provisions of that act are set out at the close of this opinion.

The act provides for the creation of a Bureau of Aeronautics, to be administered by a Director of Aeronautics (sec. 6310–29, General Code). It is made his duty to administer and to enforce the provisions of the act. He is authorized to make and enforce necessary regulations, and the act provides that such regulations shall conform to and coincide with, so far as possible, the provisions of the Air Commerce Act of 1926, and amendments thereto, passed by the Congress of the United States, and the air commerce regulations issued pursuant thereto.

While the act of Congress is very broad in scope and attempts to cover every phase of avigation, the act enacted by the Ohio Legislature contains only seven sections. It was passed with an intention upon the part of the Ohio Legislature that avigation in the State of Ohio should be, insofar as possible, subject to regulation by the Air Commerce Act of 1926.

PROVISIONS OF 1926 ACT ADOPTED BY STATE

The act manifests an intention on the part of the legislature to take advantage of the extensive administrative machinery which had been established by the Department of Commerce under the enabling provisions of the air commerce act of 1926. Pursuant to this policy, the Ohio act does not provide for a method or system for the licensing of persons engaged in operating aircraft in intrastate commerce. It provides that if "a license to operate aircraft issued by the United States Government would then be required if such avigation were interstate", an aviator to engage in intrastate avigation must procure the license required by the national act (General Code, sec. 6310–40).

The act does not provide for the registration of aircraft except that aircraft within the State shall conform, with respect to design, construction, and airworthiness, to standards prescribed by the United States Government with respect to avigation of aircraft subject to its jurisdiction (sec. 6310–42, General Code). Both of the provisions of the Ohio act just referred to recognize, and in express language state, that the provisions of the Federal act are adopted because the public safety requires it, and the advantages of uniform regulation make it desirable in the interest of aeronautical progress.

This review has been made necessary because the Ohio act, while recognizing the existing public right of avigation, does not in express terms, as other acts do (Smith v. New England Aircraft Co. (Mass.), 170 N.E. 385, 391), fix the altitude at which such avigation must lawfuliy take place. But we think it is clear from the foregoing review that it was the intention of the Ohio Legislature to acquiesce in and to adopt the provisions of the air-commerce act of 1926, so far as the proper altitudes of flight are concerned.

LICENSES UNDER NATIONAL LAW REQUIRED OF FLYERS

The legislature recognized that the regulation of avigation is largely a national problem; that there should be uniformity of regulation as between the State and the Nation; and that if the necessities of the situation required it the act of Congress might in many respects be paramount. It seems to us that many of the regulatory measures and traffic rules promulgated under the air-commerce act of 1926 would be very difficult to enforce if the State were permitted to adopt different regulations and different traffic rules for intrastate commerce; and while some doubt has been expressed upon the subject (Neiswonger v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., supra, we think it would be extremely difficult to enforce the minimum altitude rule of the national act if the State established a lower minimum altitude than that established by the national act.

The conclusion that this was recognized by the Legislature of the State of Ohio, and that by its silence upon that point it intended to acquiesce in and to adopt the minimum altitudes prescribed by the national act, is strengthened by the consideration that the Ohio act, as we have seen, compels aviators to obtain licenses under the national act, which makes them subject in all respects to the provisions of the national act, and requires them to fly above the minimum altitudes prescribed by the national act.

All of the aviators, whether engaged in interstate or intrastate commerce, operating from the airport of the defendants, or elsewhere in this State, will be required to procure licenses issued by the United States Government (General Code, sec. 6310–40). They will be be compelled to comply with the air-traffic rules promulgated by the Secretary of Commerce under sections 10 and 3 (e) of the Air Commerce Act of 1926. Unless they comply with these air-traffic rules their licenses are subject to suspension or revocation (Regulations, sec. 62–F); and they will perhaps be subject to civil penalties in the event of their violation of the air-traffic rules (Regulations, sec. 71, 72). The application of the above provisions is recognized by sections 6310–6343 of the General Code which makes it a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment, to violate the Ohio act; and further provides that the "acts or omissions made unlawful by this act shall not be deemed to include any act or omission which violates the law or lawful regulations of the United States."

ESTABLISHING OF MINIMUM ALTITUDE NOT UNREASONABLE

It is our conclusion, therefore, that, insofar as the minimum altitudes of flight are legally prescribed by section 74 (G) of the national air-traffic rules, they are applicable alike to interstate commerce and intrastate commerce; and that since the property of the plaintiffs is not situated in congested parts of cities, towns, or settlements, the minimum altitude rule of 500 feet is applicable to all aviators flying over their property, whether engaged in interstate or intrastate commerce.

We cannot agree with the contention that this establishment of a 500-foot minimum-altitude rule is an unreasonable or arbitrary exercise of the police power in that it denies effective possession of their property to plaintiffs and amounts to an unlawful taking of plaintiffs' property without due process of law.

The power to announce general rules was by the act of Congress vested in the Secretary of Commerce. The exigencies of government often require in the enactment of proper legislation the expert and continuing experience of a department of the Government; and what was said by Mr. Justice Harlan in Field v. Clarke (143 U.S. 694, 36 L.ed. 310), is applicable here:

"The legislature cannot delegate its power to make a law; but it can make a law to delegate a power to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action depend. To deny this would be to stop the wheels of government. There are many things upon which wise and useful legislation must depend which cannot be known to the lawmaking power, and, must, therefore, be a subject of inquiry and determination outside the halls of legislation."

A fixing of the proper altitude rules requires a knowledge of conditions generally throughout the country, a general knowledge of the ability to safely operate airplanes, their ability to take off or to land without injury to others, and many other matters, in an industry which is still new and to some extent in an experimental stage. The law requires that the Secretary of Commerce keep himself advised of all matters pertaining to aviation, and we have before us many pamphlets and compilations issued by the Department of Commerce which indicate the broad and extensive knowledge of that Department as to matters pertaining to aviation. We think the prescribing of general rules was appropriately left with this Department.

It is better equipped than any other governmental agency to arrive at a correct and equitable solution of the problem involved in announcing minimum safe altitudes of flight (the Air Commerce Act of 1926, 27 Columbia Law Review, 989). It is to be presumed that if further knowledge as to aviation suggests or dictates such a course, the Secretary of Commerce will change the rules prescribing minimum safe altitudes of flight, having in mind both the interests and rights of the aviator and those of the landowner. The power of the courts to declare a regulation of the kind here involved to be unreasonable or arbitrary should be sparingly exercised, and especially so in a new and partly untried field. A regulation, like a rate, should not be condemned until it has had a fair and adequate trial (Northern Pacific Railway v. North Dakota, 216 U.S. 579; Georgia v. Tennessee Copper Co., 260 U.S. 230, 239).

OWNERSHIP SUBJECT TO LIMITATIONS

It is well to have in mind in this connection also that while the modern conception of the ownership or possession of a chattel, land, or space imports wide freedom in use and control thereof, there is no such thing as absolute and complete freedom under our law. There are many limitations, sometimes in the interest of neighbors, and sometimes in the public interest, which are placed upon the owner's freedom. As was said in Hibbard v. Halliday (Okla.) (158 Pac. 1158, L.R.A. 1916F 903):

"Property in land must be considered for many purposes not as an absolute, unrestricted dominion, but as an aggregation of qualified privileges, the limits of which are prescribed by the equality of rights and the correlation of rights and obligations necessary for the highest enjoyment of land by the entire community of proprietors."

See also Campbell v. Seaman (63 N.Y. 568) and Middlesex Co. v. McCue (149 Mass. 103).

These authorities announce rules as to the limitations upon the property rights in the interest of adjoining property owners, and in re Opinion of the Justices (103 Me. 506, 69 Atl. 627) is one of many cases holding that many limitations may be imposed upon the rights of property for the benefit of the public. It was held in that case that it was for the legislature to determine from time to time the occasion and what laws and regulations were necessary or expedient for the defense and benefit of the people; and that—

"Legislation to restrict or regulate the cutting of trees on wild or uncultivated land by the owner thereof, etc., without compensation therefor to such owner, in order to prevent or diminish injurious droughts and freshets, and to protect, preserve, and maintain the natural water supply of springs, streams, ponds, and lakes, etc., and to prevent or diminish injurious erosion of the land and the filling up of the rivers, ponds, and lakes, etc., would not operate to 'take' private property within the inhibition of the Constitution."

And see Hudson Water Co. v. McCarter (209 U.S. 349, 355) and Miller v. Schoene (1928) (276 U.S. 272).

PUBLIC NEEDS SAID TO JUSTIFY INTERFERENCE

In most instances of limitations upon the freedom of the landowner in furtherance of the public interest the purpose is effected by merely denying to the former the exercise of certain privileges of use. The common law, however, furnishes examples of permitted encroachments by the public upon what is otherwise private territory. The duty of the land occupant to permit entries by members of the public in navigating navigable waters, though the beds thereof are privately owned, is outstanding and of general recognition. (See Schulte v. Warren, 218 Ill. 108; Lumber Co. v. Olcott Co., 65 N.H. 290; Hutton v. Webb, 124 N.C. 749; State v. Shannon, 36 O.S. 423; Willow River Club v. Wade, 100 Wis. 86.) It has even been held that in such waters the public may fish (Collins v. Gerhardt, 237 Mich. 38, 211 N.W. 115). There is an obvious analogy between the public rights of aviation and navigation, particularly when the latter is in waters over land considered to be in private ownership. There are, of course, differences, and it may well be productive of difficulty to press the analogy too far.

Here the right of avigation necessary in times of peace, and for adequate defense in time of war, is involved, and the absolute ownership of private property may to some extent be limited and curtailed in a great public interest. It might justly be limited even for a seemingly private use, for "it is established by a series of cases that an ulterior public advantage may justify a comparatively insignificant taking of private property for what, in its immediate purpose, is a private use." (Mr. Justice Holmes in Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U.S. 104, 110.)

The property of plaintiffs, its location and surroundings, presents no unusual situation, and does not show that any rule which would be appropriate and reasonable for uncongested areas generally would be unreasonable as applied to the property of the plaintiffs. Counsel for the plaintiffs have offered no evidence which would indicate that flying at 500 feet or at lesser altitudes would interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of their country estate by the plaintiffs. There is no evidence, for instance, that the flying should be at 600 feet or at higher altitudes. Counsel for both parties have agreed that the court should make observations at airports and other places to determine whether the altitude line of 500 feet protects the property rights of the plaintiffs. From such observations and a study of the question, if this court were called upon to designate the upper limit of effective possession under the facts of this case, it would, in the first instance, fix it at an altitude of 500 feet. We say, in the first instance, because such upper limit is now being designated in view of the probabilities of the situation. It may be that when the practices of the defendants become fixed, it will be necessary, upon the application of the plaintiffs, to designate a higher altitude for defendants' flights. The probabilities of the situation now indicate that the plaintiffs will be amply protected if the flights of the defendants are made at minimum altitudes of 500 feet.

The further contention of defendants' counsel that they may under the regulations, without violating the property rights of the plaintiffs, in taking off and in landing, fly at lower altitudes, however, presents a different question. We cannot agree with their contention. The regulations relied upon, chapter 7, section 74 (G) (1) and (2), are a part of the Air Commerce Regulations (Aeronautics Bulletin No. 7, effective as amended Sept. 1, 1929) which were intended and classified by the Secretary of Commerce as air-traffic rules.

These rules, except as they prescribe 1,000 feet over congested areas and 500 feet elsewhere, were not intended as prescriptions of minimum safe altitudes for the purpose of fixing navigable air space pursuant to authority vested in the Secretary of Commerce by sections 10 and 3 (e) of the Air Commerce Act of 1926. The exceptions in the air traffic rules permitting flights at less than 1,000 feet and less than 500 feet in taking off and landing were promulgated only to relieve avigators from the penalties prescribed by the air-traffic rules.

FLYING AT LOW ELEVATION TO BE CONSIDERED TRESPASS

The act of 1926 and the regulations prescribe the minimum altitures at which flight may take place and by clear implication, if not expressly, they deny the right to fly at lesser altitudes, when not authorized to do so, over the lands of owners, and especially over lands adjoining an airport. The right to fly at lower altitudes (save in exceptional cases which might not be regarded as trespasses) must be legally obtained by the aviator. The air-traffic rules relied upon by defendants are applicable to this case only insofar as they may be construed as establishing minimum safe altitudes of flight. To construe them as permitting a doubtful invasion of the superincumbent air space over plaintiffs' lands at low altitudes would be to make them, to say the least, of doubtful validity, and such a construction should not be adopted unless the words of the air-traffic rules permit of no other construction—which is not the situation.

Until the progress of aerial navigation has reached a point of development where airplanes can readily reach an altitude of 500 feet before crossing the property of an adjoining owner, owners of airports must acquire landing fields of sufficient area to accomplish that result. To fly over the lands of an adjoining owner at lower altitudes, the owners of airports must secure the consent of adjoining property owners, or acquire such right by condemnation when appropriate enabling statutes are enacted (Smith v. New England Aircraft Co. (170 N.E. 385, 391, 393). (See an able article by Charles P. Hine, of counsel in this case, Home Versus Aeroplane. American Bar Association Journal, April 1930.)

With counsel for the parties the court has viewed plaintiffs' premises, has observed the flight of airplanes there, and, at the suggestion of counsel, has observed the flight of airplanes at other places. In the opinion of the court, if defendants were permitted, in taking off and landing, to fly at altitudes lower than 500 feet, plaintiffs' enjoyment of their property would be unreasonably interfered with, and their right of privacy unreasonably invaded. Extensive flying, in taking off and in landing at lower altitudes than 500 feet, would, in this instance, constitute trespasses or the maintenance of a nuisance.

As we have seen, the legislation of this State pertaining to aeronautics is different from that of other States; it acquiesces in and, in a measure, adopts the legislation of Congress. It is complementary to the legislation of Congress to the end that interstate and intrastate commerce may, so far as possible under present constitutional provisions, be a unit regardless of State lines. No doubt, also, the State legislature of this State acquiesced in the view attributed to Congress that it had the power to enact and that it enacted the Air Commerce Act of 1926 under its express grant of power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce.

It is unnecessary, therefore, for us to decide whether the State owns the air space above lands in this State in its sovereign capacity, so far as capable of ownership (Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U.S. 519; Lacoste v. Department of Conservation, 263 U.S. 545; Beech v. Hayner, 207 Mich. 93, 5 A.L.R. 1052; State v. Sawyer, 113 Maine, 458; L.R.A. 1915A, p. 1031; 11 R.C.L. 1014); or whether it has the power to regulate the use of air space in analogy to its power to regulate the taking of ferae naturae (Missouri v. Holland, 252 U.S. 416, 64 L.ed. 641; Foster-Fountain Packing Co. v. Haydel, 278 U.S. 1, 73 L.ed. 147; Geer v. Connecticut, supra, 3 C.J. 18–22; 25 C.J., p. 596, sec. 8); or the reduction to possession of oil and gas (Oklahoma v. Kansas Natural Gas Co., 221 U.S. 229, 55 L.ed. 716; Lindley v. Raydure, 239 Fed. 928, 933; Ohio Oil Co. v. Indiana, 177 U.S. 190, 208); or the use and enjoyment of running water (Hudson County Water Co. v. McCarter, 209 U.S. 349, 52 L.ed. 828; Thompson on Real Property, vol. 1, sec. 67, p. 66; 2 Blackstone's Commentaries, p. 18; City of Syracuse v. Stacey, 169 N.Y. 231, 245; 22 Harv. Law Rev. 190; 40 Cyc. 559); or the enjoyment of light and air (19 Am. & Eng. Enc., 112, 113; Keiper v. Klein, 51 Ind. 316; Stein v. Hauck, 56 Inc. 65, 26 Am. Rep. 10; Mulker v. New York & H. R. Co., 197 U.S. 544, 49 L.ed. 872).

POWERS AS EXERCISED BY CONGRESS UPHELD

It is unnecessary also, in view of the character of the legislation of this State, to decide whether Congress has the power to regulate the use of such air space for the purposes of interstate and foreign commerce in analogy to its right to regulate the use of navigable waters, in accordance with the rule announced in New Jersey v. Sargent (269 U.S. 328, 337), where reference is made to the doctrine, firmly settled, "that the power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, which the Constitution vests in Congress, includes the power to control, for the purposes of such commerce, all navigable waters which are accessible to it and within the United States, whether within or without the limits of a State, and to that end to adopt all appropriate measures to free such waters from obstructions to navigation and to preserve and even enlarge their navigable capacity; and that the authority and rights of a State in respect to such waters within its limits and in respect to the lands under them are subordinate to this power of Congress."

And see the extended discussion of the cases in Civil Aeronautics, by Frederick P. Lee, legislative counsel United States Senate (1928), pages 42–45.

And it is unnecessary to decide whether Congress has, in the exercise of this paramount power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, the power also, if necessary, to effectively regulate the latter, to regulate also incidentally intrastate commerce, in analogy to the doctrine announced by Mr. Chief Justice Taft in Railroad Commission v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (257 U.S. 563, 588), as follows:

"Commerce is a unit and does not regard State lines, and, while under the Constitution interstate and intrastate commerce are ordinarily subject to regulation by different sovereignties, yet when they are so mingled together that the supreme authority, the Nation, cannot exercise complete effective control over interstate commerce without incidental regulation of intrastate commerce, such incidental regulation is not an invasion of State authority." * * *

RESTRICTIONS IN USE OF PROPERTY IMPOSED

And see: Minnesota Rate case (230 U.S. 390); Wisconsin Rate case (257 U.S. 563); Dayton-Goose Creek Ry. Co. v. United States (263 U.S. 456); Stafford v. Wallace (258 U.S. 495); Chicago Board of Trade v. Olson (262 U.S. 1); United States v. Reading Co. (226 U.S. 324); New York v. United States (257 U.S. 591; 66 L.ed. 385); The Minnesota Rate cases (27 Harv. Law Rev., 14); and Federal Control of Interstate Railroad Rates (35 Harv. Law Rev., 864).

Accordingly, it is our conclusion that the plaintiffs at this time are entitled to an injunction restraining the defendants—

(a) From permitting dust from their operations to fly or drift in substantial and annoying quantities over the property of the plaintiffs;

(b) From permitting the dropping or distributing of circulars from airplanes as they pass over plaintiffs' property or in proximity thereto; and

(c) From avigating over the property of plaintiffs or any part thereof unless at altitudes of 500 feet or in excess thereof. The plaintiffs' lands are highly improved and are not merely lands covered by dense brush and woods, as in Smith v. New England Aircraft Co. (170 N.E. 385, 393).

If the court has the power and authority to retain this cause upon the docket (Georgia v. Tennessee Copper Co., 240 U.S. 650, 651; Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U.S. 46, at pp. 117, 118), and either party makes a request for such retention, the cause may be so retained for the purpose of granting other or further relief when the practices of the defendants become more definitely settled and established. Costs will be assessed when the latter matter has been determined.

An order may be drawn accordingly.

EXHIBIT B

[Editorial from the New York Times, Tuesday, Feb. 20, 1934]

ABOVE THE COURTS

In the decision of Judge Knox last week in the air-mail case, he said, in effect, that no court in the United States has any power to compel the Government to carry out a contract which it has made. This we suppose to be the unquestioned law in America. The Federal attorney, Mr. Conboy, who argued the case for the Government before Judge Knox, cited several decisions of the United States Supreme Court going to show that the Government is beyond the reach of the courts in many matters where private citizens and corporations are subject to their jurisdiction. This was substantially the ground taken by Federal Judge Woolsey in his decision in the gold-hoarding case last November. He did, indeed, point out that when the Government took private property in the exercise of a power that could not be challenged, the question of just compensation for it was a matter for judicial determination in each case. Yet he did not fail to add that, even so, compensation could not be legally enforced, and could be secured only through an act of grace by the Government. But the history of such acts of grace shows that they are not often consented to by the Government, and even when they are that reparation under them may be delayed for many years.

It is doubtless of high importance that the Government, especially in times of war or great domestic emergency, should not be liable to be sued as would be an ordinary person. We understand that the law in England is, in this respect, closely similar to our own. Without its consent the Government cannot be sued in court. Thus it can do many things, such as violating a contract, selling securities under dubious or false representations, or rigging the market for its own obligations, which if done by a private citizen, would make him liable to fine and imprisonment. Of course, we can't put the Government in jail, and ought not to be able to. But would it not conduce to a sense of even-handed justice if the Government would more often consent to permit a judge or judges to decide whether its course in a given matter had been such as to conform not only to the general law but to the dictates of the good conscience of the whole community? It might stoutly maintain that its conduct had been legally correct, and still be willing to leave it to a judicial decision.

[Editorial appearing in the New York Herald Tribune Feb. 20, 1934]

SMEAR AMERICA

The President's extraordinary language in approving, with conditions, the newspaper code accords, in our judgment, neither with the dignity of his office nor with principles of ordinary fairness. It cannot hurt the press of the country, which has a long and courageous record of public service behind it, lasting far beyond the span of any one man's life, to say nothing of any one administration. If only an attack upon the newspaper industry were involved, it would be fitting to pass by the outburst in silence.

Here is, however, the first time that the President has publicly given support to the Smear America campaign in which so many of his aids have participated. America has been made familiar with government by edict. Is it now to be subjected to government by insult? The episode is of importance in relation to the constantly growing tendencies of the Roosevelt administration to resent criticism, however fair, and to slander all who dare cross the path of its policies.

The air-mail edict is still fresh in mind. The development of aviation was the outstanding recent achievement of American imagination and American courage and American skill in organization. To compare either the intelligence or the ideals of its personnel—whether directing officials or flyers—with the equipment of a very practical politician like Mr. Farley would be to commit a gross insult to the former. Yet this politically minded Postmaster General is permitted to accuse this entire industry of "fraud and corruption", to cancel its contracts, and to debar its major companies from bidding on Government contracts for 5 years.

The administration, using all the vast power of its official position, sought to smear this great industry precisely as other large groups of Americans have been attacked. It did so without offering any opportunity for defense and without attempting to discriminate between the few malefactors and the general run of honest, upright, American business men.

The President's fling at the newspapers of America presents an exact parallel. That the newspapers of the country, by general consent, lead the world in enterprise, in public spirit, in fairness, in decency—that they use their constitutional freedom with a high sense of loyalty and integrity—is passed by. By making no distinction between the few exceptions and the many that prove the rule, the President slurs the whole institution.

We hope that Mr. Roosevelt will see fit to apologize to the press of the Nation for this gross insult. It makes no great difference to anyone that an egregious obstacle to progress like Mr. Ickes takes the rostrum, assumes a holier-than-thou attitude, and damns most of America for its benightedness. The millennium is Mr. Ickes' private property, and he is welcome to keep anybody out of it that he likes. But when the President of the United States—the executive head not of any party or section but of the whole Nation—joins in such attacks, the situation is far different.

It is so different that the whole problem of the freedom of the press takes on a new and unexpected aspect. The lip service that an administration pays to this fundamental security of democracy recedes into the background when it is offset by high-handed attacks upon whole industries. Such actions speak far more loudly than any words.

We hope that Mr. Roosevelt will expand and explain his unfortunate and regrettable utterance. He has permitted Mr. Farley with a stroke of the pen to wreck one great industry. The airplane industry has its constitutional rights—whatever they may be worth in a difficult, uphill, business struggle. The newspaper industry is in a far better position, thanks to its old establishment and its preferred status under the Constitution. But the threat is unmistakable—not so much to the large and strong newspapers as to the small and protesting organs. The question is plainly raised whether under such an administration any code, with its connotation of a compulsory licensing system to which the President makes an unmistakable reference in his citation of the obligations of the nonconsentor under the National Industrial Recovery Act—does not in effect destroy that freedom of speech guaranteed by the Bill of Rights in the first amendments to the Constitution.

[Merryle Stanley Rukeyser's article in New York American, Feb. 20, 1934]

PUBLIC REACTION TO AIR-MAIL EPISODE FAVORS CARRIERS

An interesting byproduct of the cancelation of air-mail contracts is the public reaction, which raises the question whether business baiting has not ceased to be a sure-fire road to popularity.

During the downward march of prices during the depression the general public was stunned and shocked—naturally felt resentful toward captains of industry and finance.

But with recovery showing that our economic institutions can function efficiently again, there is discernible a changing popular attitude toward business.

Politicians should not forget that there are more capitalists in the United States now than ever before. After the war the wider diffusion of ownership of corporate stock, which Thomas N. Carver, Harvard economist, characterized as the present economic revolution in the United States, got under way. The process continued even during the depression, when numerous overextended big speculators sold their stock to small outright investors.

In judging economic questions, politicians can ignore only to their own peril the trend toward wider and better distribution of wealth and income in the United States. Though much remains to be accomplished in this direction, partial results since Karl Marx's time have been extremely striking.

Of course punishment for graft and bribery in connection with public contracts has nothing to do with business baiting. The public will be intolerant of specific wrongdoing, but it seemed to resent the indiscriminate prosecution of all without due process.

There is one other angle. In letting new contracts, which constitute the basis for making air-passenger travel feasible during the promotional period, the only test should not be cheapness. The Government, acting for the public, ought to give due weight to other elements, such as evidence of technological skill, experience, and ability to continue the remarkable record already made for speed and safety.

If some of the financiers or promoters behind the infant industry were guilty of fraud or collusion, they and their helpers who were inside the Government service should be vigorously prosecuted. But, irrespective of such regrettable excrescences, I for one am proud of the remarkable achievements of this new industry. Its safety record is one of the wonders of the world, and no bureaucrats should be permitted to play fast and loose with an industry on which the lives of numerous American citizens depend.

The tragic prospect is that heroic young Army flyers may be the chief sufferers from Washington's hasty action. Army planes, aviation experts avow, weren't built to fly at night, to fly in fog, to make blind landings, or to enjoy other advantages possessed by the most modern commercial ships. Oftener than once, it is said, Army planes have sent an SOS to mail-carrying companies to send ships to pilot them to safe landings.

From every point of view, including that of national defense, it is earnestly to be hoped that every honest aviation company will promptly be restored to the status quo, so that further progress may be made in the art, or science, of flying without undue interruption. Admittedly, commercial companies had led in raising the United States to absolute leadership in achievements in the air.

[William Randolph Hearst's letter in the New York American, Tuesday, Feb. 20, 1934]

STUFF AND NONSENSE AT WASHINGTON

There is a certain insincerity, a certain bias, a certain extravagance of statement and looseness of innuendo about the utterances of the committee investigating the commercial airplane contracts which do not reflect any particular credit upon the committee or inspire any particular confidence in the minds of the public.

Take the charges against Mr. Lindbergh as an example.

Here is a man who is a credit to the country and an idol of the public, and who should not be defamed or idly accused.

The inference has been drawn from the utterances of the committee—the intention has been apparently that these inferences should be drawn—that Mr. Lindbergh had made, in some manner open to criticism, $2,000,000 in airplane stock and stock speculation.

A careful investigation of the facts proves that this is in no sense true.

Mr. Lindbergh received $250,000 as a bonus for signing the contract, and as compensation for services and for the value of his knowledge and experience.

He immediately invested this amount in stock of the company.

There is obviously nothing excessive in the amount or at all improper in the method of compensation.

The process of Mr. Lindbergh's detractors is to assume that Mr. Lindbergh might have held the stock until it reached the highest peak of its value in 1929, and might have sold out at that highest peak, and might have in consequence realized something like $2,000,000.

But no one has brought forward any evidence that he did proceed in this manner and did realize $2,000,000.

But even if he did, what of it?

Every intelligent human being in the United States realizes that if people had had wisdom enough to sell their possessions at the very summit of peak prices in 1929, they would have realized many times what they were worth before the peak of inflation.

But, unfortunately, most people did not sell their possessions at that time, and if they had done so would not have committed any crime by so doing.

Everybody realizes that the prices at that time reflected merely paper profits.

The sad fact is that no one actually received those profits.

The situation reminds one of the small boy during the Florida land boom who wanted to sell his dog for a thousand dollars.

"You will never get that", said a visitor from a saner section.

"Oh, yes, I will", said the youngster, and pretty soon he came back all smiles and remarked proudly, "I got a thousand dollars and 50 cents for him."

"You did?" said the visitor. "How come?"

And the boy said, "Well, I got 50 cents in cash and a thousand-dollar cat."

Nobody but a Democratic Congressman is ingenuous enough, or, rather, disingenuous enough, to imagine that values can be estimated by the prices temporarily reached at the height of an inflation boom before the boom burst. These allegations about immense profits illicitly obtained are nonsense and not very nice nonsense.

I know something about Mr. Lindbergh's scrupulous regard for ethics and amazing disregard for money.

After he had made his heroic flight across the ocean alone in his little whippet of an airplane, I was filled with admiration for his courage and daring and with gratitude for the honors he had won for our Nation.

I wanted to do something substantial for him.

I felt that many who had won fame for glorious deeds have not won fortune.

I wanted to see if I could not do something for this young man to make him independent for life.

My moving-picture company was associated with the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer at the time, and together these companies made a proposition to Mr. Lindbergh that he make on the screen the story of his interesting and inspiring young life.

The compensation was to be $500,000 cash and a percentage of the profits of this picture.

When Mr. Lindbergh came to my house in New York I brought out the contract, all signed and sealed and ready to deliver, except for his signature, and presented it to him.

He smiled pleasantly as he read it, and then said: "That is very fine, and I appreciate it, but I cannot do it."

I naturally asked why, and he said: "You know, I said I did not intend to go into moving pictures."

I tried to argue with him. I said: "This is not a moving picture in the ordinary sense of the word. It is not a fiction story. It is a real story of your life, a thing that the President of the United States ought to be glad to have done for him.

"It is an historical record of fine life and a great achievement to be preserved in pictures for others to see in years to come.

"Do not consider it as a benefit to yourself but as an inspiration to others."

Young Mr. Lindbergh shook his head and said:

"I wish I could do it if it would please you; but I cannot, because I said I would not go into pictures."

I said:

"All right—but you tear up the contract; I have not the heart to do it."

And he stood there in front of the fireplace in my room and tore up a half million dollars and threw it into the fire.

Now, you cannot tell me that that young man is money hungry or that he would do anything improper or unethical through a desire for money, or that he is animated by a craving for publicity in his public actions, as the spokesman of the administration so generously implied.

Here was an opportunity for publicity of the highest and most dignified type, and for a lump payment of half a million dollars plus a percentage of the profits of the pictorial life.

He turned it down, rather foolishly I thought, but magnificently.

When Mr. Lindbergh speaks in behalf of the commercial airplane business of the United States I know that he does it honestly and sincerely, and because of his sense of justice, and because he believes he is doing his duty to the public.

Moreover, he makes this statement in a dignified and proper manner, and does not intimate that the administration is playing politics—so the administration has no right to imply that Mr. Lindbergh is seeking publicity.

The spokesman of the administration can at least be as dignified and as courteous as Mr. Lindbergh has been—and as honest.

The trouble with some of the politicians who are accusing other people of speculating is that they themselves speculated and got burnt, and are trying to vent their spite on somebody or something in reprisal. That is the reason for most of the punitive legislation and taxation with which the country is afflicted today.

Personally, I think the Nation would be better off if it had more Lindberghs and fewer politicians.

DONE FOR THE FIRST TIME AND PERHAPS THE LAST

The performance of the Transcontinental & Western Air Line in carrying the air mail from coast to coast in 13 hours and 5 minutes was both an impressive demonstration and a challenge to public attention.

For this feat on the last transcontinental mail flight under the canceled Post Office contracts was not a stunt, but was done on schedule. Even with a one-pilot plane built for speed the record would be notable. But in this instance the T.W.A. used standard equipment, a two-pilot ship with full passenger accommodations.

This stage of development in aviation has been reached under the sharpest kind of competition under the Government policies now thrown into the scrap heap. The cross-country time has been steadily cut down, and the comfort of air travel increased, since the days when 36 hours was good time and passenger travel was more of a hardy adventure than a journey.

The Boeing Co., now absorbed in United, cut the time to 33 hours. The T.W.A. came into the field with a 24-hour service from Los Angeles, or 27 hours from San Francisco. The United promptly met this with a service making the flight in 20 or 21 hours. The new ship that has made the present all-time transport record of 13 hours and 5 minutes is the first of a fleet ordered by T.W.A. to put on an 18- or 19-hour schedule.

Whatever may be said of the financial set-up, the practical results certainly measure up to what the public expects in the progress of air transport. Whether the Post Office compensation has been too much or too little, the development of air transport that has gone so far cannot be maintained if the companies are deprived of reasonable revenue from this source.

What will be the comparative cost to the Government of running its own air-mail transport remains to be seen, and since it is involved with the Army, the proportions of cost allocated between the post office and the national defense are likely to be subjects for sharp actuarial controversy.

In any event the removal of the commercial companies from the air-mail carrying business strikes a destructive blow at a transport development that has been a pride of the American people. It is a melancholy thought that Sunday night's performance by T.W.A. is not only the first but is likely to be the last time that the air mail has been carried at this speed in a plane available to civilian passengers.

ALONG THE POTOMAC WITH CARLISLE BARGERON

The big air-mail scandal and all of its attendant ballyhoo may have excited our Government and our people, may have caused some of us to become almost as indignant as the French got over their pawnshop scandal, but so far it has not ruffled Mr. Walter Brown, our former Postmaster General, one bit. He is either innocent as the proverbial new-born babe or he is the most thick-skinned gentleman we have ever had in American politics.

While the Democrats have been getting red in the face, sometimes slightly hysterical and doing such silly things as rebuking Mr. Lindbergh, this gentleman's inner or outward consciousness has not been touched. Before the Senate investigating committee he is as placid as a clear, still pool. He appears, indeed, the only cool spot in the heat that has been worked up. To say that he is aggravating to the crusading Senator BLACK is but to state an obvious fact.

He isn't handling the committee by the familiar lapse-of-memory method, either. He answers the questions put to him. His "I don't recall" responses, insofar as they apply to pertinent questions, are few and far between. What he is doing is following the course he followed when he appeared before committees during his term of office. He is being plausible. Right or wrong, he will go down as the most plausible gentleman we have had here for a long time.

It is impossible to say how it will all come out, of course. It strikes me that while the committee so far is not worrying Mr. Brown in the slightest degree, he is not getting the favorable headlines which the Republicans and the air-mail operators, more than he, very badly need. After all, there is the administration blast of collusion out against them. Before either the operators or the Republicans will get anywhere against the administration they must get from under that.

We could all get at the facts in this great drama better if we realized that at the bottom it is, first, a conflict in policy, and, secondly, the hunger of the Democrats to get the air-mail contracts, or conversely. While out of office they coveted them as they coveted nothing else. They constitute one of the greatest bonanzas of governmental favor. Under the Republican policy, the Democrats claim, the subsidies flowed right back into the hands of a wealthy few. Under the Democrats, as they talk now, at least, they would have given the bounties to the small, courageous operators, in most instances admittedly operating on a shoestring, but who, I suppose, under the Democrats' plan would have become rich. There was certainly money to be made in the business.

One must never forget that in this country we have two political parties—the Republicans "for the rich" and the Democrats "for the poor." A Democratic subsidy will, I take it, be to make some poor men rich. They probably won't make them so rich because they will probably cut the size of the bounty down.

This, in brief, is what all of the fanfare and trumpeting is about. The burning of papers, the citing of men for contempt—all of this is incidental but highly important in keeping the matter on the front pages. And, of course, the Democrats, in order to get control of the contracts to carry out their policy, better or worse than the Republican one, had to have some justification. This they professed to find in "collusion" at a meeting the operators had here with Mr. Brown in 1930. It will be well to bear in mind that they have not proved this yet. And seriously I am beginning to have my doubts about it.

MODERN FLYING NO CHILD'S PLAY, FACTS REVEAL—STOCKHOLDERS HAVE LOST; ONE SPORTING OFFER

By B. C. Forbes

Eddie Rickenbacker's record-breaking flight (13 hours) from the Pacific to the Atlantic wasn't a stunt, but the result of painstaking development of airplanes, aviation equipment on ships and on land, the investment of millions of dollars in new inventions, airports, amazing scientific instruments to make flying safe during the night and during fog, to make "blind landings" safe, to establish meteorological service far ahead of the Government's, etc.

Up-to-date commercial aviation isn't child's play. It isn't a picayune business. It savors nothing of what Wall Street calls "fly-by-night" ventures.

Eddie Rickenbacker's company, for example, sponsored by General Motors, has invested more money than it has ever collected from the Government for carrying air mail and from all other sources combined. It cost $300,000 to create the Douglas ship America's premier ace flew. The company, never dreaming that its air-mail contract would be annulled without even opportunity to present the facts, placed orders for $3,500,000 worth of these ultra-modern eagles.

One responsible aircraft executive cites these figures to me:

"It costs $5,000 to install an automatic pilot on each ship. It costs $3,000 to train a pilot for blind flying and $7,500 for the necessary instruments on each ship. Two-way radio costs $3,600 a ship, while ground radios have cost our company $140,000. It costs $5,000 for equipment to insure safe landings in a fog. Our pilots average $7,000 a year for an average of 73 hours' work a month.

"Stamps sold for mail carried by our company fell only a few thousand dollars short of the total amount paid the company by the Government. Stockholders supplied $7,900,000 capital to give the country all these aviation facilities, and one half of that total has been lost to date."

This company promptly offered to continue fulfilling its post-office contracts for a month on the sporting offer that if inquiry revealed that there had been anything in the slightest measure questionable in the procuring and awarding of its contract, it wouldn't charge the Government one cent for the whole month's service, so sure was it that it had been guiltless of wrongdoing. But the ax fell on it as on every other air-mail-carrying company, without its getting its day in court to prove its innocence.

But there is more to it than the feeling of approval it inspires.

HERE IS THE NOTE OF TRUE LEADERSHIP

The gallant flying record, the simplicity and modesty that won our hearts, the thrilling exploits which have drawn the homage of the world are apparently only a part of "Lindy."

There is a maturing man in his young head and breast. The physical and moral courage of the youthful aviator is passing into a finer, perhaps a rarer, courage—the courage of the fearless and high-minded citizen.

Such a man has great tasks ahead of him—rich possibilities of service to his country.

[Article from the Queen Anne's Record, Centreville, Md., Thursday, Feb. 22, 1934]

CASUALTY LISTS BEGIN

We put an air-mail stamp on an envelop and drop our letter into a mail box. Next day that letter is being read in San Francisco.

Of the grave peril that may attend its passage the average letter writer is wholly unconscious.

We hear that now the Army will carry the mail. "Well, what of it?" says the average letter writer.

But veteran airmen gravely shake their heads.

It is not because they think that Army flyers are inferior pilots, but because they are unfamiliar with those treacherous sky routes that took such ghastly toll in young life in the beginning of the service.

Three brave young lieutenants were killed last Saturday making practice flights through mountain blizzards.

The news was buried in last Sunday's papers, but it did not escape the eyes of the oldtimers, who say that the casualty lists have just started to come in.

Of course, death will not stop the Army. Death is a partner in that profession, and the mails must go through regardless.

Meantime, the whole country is waiting anxiously to hear all the facts in the aviation scandal.

That there must have been grave cause for the precipitous Government action which terminated all private all-mail contracts and threatened the whole aviation industry with ruin, no thinking person can doubt.

But whether or not all companies were equally guilty and deserved such extreme penalty is the question to be answered with all dispatch.

It was unfortunate that Colonel Lindbergh, whose other public acts have always been timed with nicety, should have erred in giving his letter to the press before the President himself had received it. On the other hand, it is not difficult to understand his hasty action when we realize that the institution which he has served so superbly, many times at the risk of his own life, seems threatened with destruction.

We are inclined to the belief that his error was one of impulse rather than of intent and should be condoned.

And the fact remains that he asked the one question that the whole American public is still asking. And that question should be answered frankly, without evading the issue, by showing how much money Colonel Lindbergh might have made had he sold out his aviation stocks in 1929 before the stock market crashed.

If Mr. Farley's disclosures make it apparent that the whole body and structure of the aviation industry of this country is rotten with corruption and graft, then the whole public will stand stanchly behind the Government's action.

On the other hand, if only a few are guilty and the innocent have been made to share their just punishment, then Mr. Roosevelt will add to his laurels by admitting the mistake frankly and making speedy restitution.

Surely a Nation that can pay men to rake up the leaves in the forest and hire artists to paint murals for country post offices can also find the necessary dollars to encourage and advance so vital an industry as aviation.

We have had the finest air-transport system in the world. But those great air lines cannot fly unless Uncle Sam helps to buy the gasoline. And that, of course, was the reason for the subsidy.

Aviation cannot stand still. It must be nourished and developed—for there are black war clouds on the world horizon.

[Editorial from the Kansas City Times, Saturday, Feb. 24, 1934]

A CALL FOR AIR-MAIL ACTION

Whether the President's action in canceling all the air-mail contracts was unwisely and unfairly drastic and sweeping, as the Star believes, or whether it was justified, as administration defenders contend, it is water over the dam. The big problem now is how to restore the demoralized air-mail and passenger service as speedily as possible for the benefit of the public in general, and also to provide employment for the many skilled workers who, through no fault of their own, suddenly are to be deprived of their livelihood.

From the standpoint of the progress of the aviation industry, as well as for the most efficient public service, the air-mail business should be restored to private control, with its initiative and resourcefulness. Otherwise there will be stagnation. The Army Air Corps is trained as a combat service and not as a business transportation unit.

Under an old law enacted after the star-mail route scandals in the early seventies, if a contract is annulled, as the air-mail contracts have been annulled, the company holding the contract may not bid on Government business for 5 years. Obviously this law is a sort of dragnet method of punishing presumed wrongdoers who should be reached directly by legal action.

From the disclosures so far made, it is a fair inference that some of the air carriers took unfair advantage of the Government's policy to develop the aviation industry by helping the companies that seemed to have the necessary resources for experimentation. There is evidence of squeezing of competitors by companies in a favored position and of excessive prices charged the Government when more favorable terms might have been obtained.

The situation calls for a thorough investigation, with punishment for any officials found guilty of wrongdoing. It distinctly does not call for barring most of the competent and well-organized companies from bidding under revised contracts for carrying the air mail. The sweeping exclusion of the old star routes law would punish chiefly the public and the most experienced and able aviation staffs in the country.

It is the urgent duty of Congress to change this law and to make provision for the resumption of the Air Mail Service at a reasonable price to the Government at the earliest possible moment.

[Editorial from the Columbus Dispatch, Saturday Feb. 24, 1934]

THE NEW MAIL CONTRACTS

Plans now in the making to hand the air mail back to private companies on a new basis doubtless will be completed soon, but if the guiding principle in making new contracts or reletting old ones is economy instead of Federal aid for the aviation industry, there is a chance that they may fail through.

Even under the old system scrapped by the administration as extravagant and costly, many of the commercial air companies were only breaking even, and some were losing money. Without the Government subsidies, which constituted anywhere up to 60 percent of the aviation companies' incomes, practically all commercial air lines are losing heavily at present, and unless the new mail contracts carry enough compensation with them to make up all or a major part of the loss, many of the companies may be unable to accept them and not a few might be forced to make even further cuts in their service.

In that event the Army probably will find itself faced with the necessity of carrying the mail permanently. If it is, better equipment for the job is a crying need. The Army has lost five flyers and more ships in less than a week of routine all-weather flying, and in at least one instance the blame for an accident was placed upon an inadequate radio with a reception range of only 15 miles.

If the present rate of loss were to continue for very long the Army soon would find itself without enough equipment or men to transport the more than 7,000,000 pounds of mail that has been carried annually during the last 2 years.

[Editorial from the Leader Press, Springfield, Mo., Feb. 24, 1934]

AIR-MAIL FLYERS FREE FROM SCANDAL

The mess which centers about the air-mail contracts throws a bright light on one of the most vital problems of modern times—the way in which all manner of skill, devotion, and efficiency can be short-circuited if a few men at the top of the heap get to thinking too much about the clink of dollars.

In the cancelation of air-mail contracts there has not been a shadow of a reflection upon the men who actually have been doing the work.

The pilots themselves have made one of the finest records in the history of aviation. They have been good, superlatively good, at a job calling for skill, coolness, and devotion.

From the standpoint of physical service, they have made the American air-mail network one of the finest things of its kind in all the world—if not the very finest.

Similarly, the technicians, the designers, the men who built the planes and fabricated the engines, the operating officials who arrange schedules and hand out assignments, the repair men and service men, and radio and weather men—all these have filled their difficult jobs with distinction.

The troubles that led to wholesale cancelation of contracts were in no way due to the men who actually were doing the work of flying the mails. From a purely physical viewpoint, the air-mail set-up is and has been a thing of which the whole country could be proud.

Where, then, was the trouble? It arose solely from the fact that this magnificent edifice of service rested on the wrong kind of financial base.

In some cases—not in all, by any means—the men at the very top were less concerned with doing an important job in an efficient manner than with making two dollars grow where one had grown before.

To put it more simply, the fact that a few men were greedy was enough to nullify all the skill, the courage, and the devotion to duty which the great mass of employees put into their jobs.

There has been a lot of talk, this last year, about the necessity for curbing the profit motive. The air-mail situation is a striking example of it.

Because a few men let the lust for profit run away with them, an entire industry has had to suffer.

[Editorials from the Dallas Journal, Saturday, Feb. 24, 1934]

AS TO SUBSIDIES

What has been proved against Postmaster General Brown is that he used the law to give the air-mail companies something for nothing. He did that. Whenever any government does that it's what we call a subsidy.

The Journal doesn't like subsidies. It doesn't like them when you call them bonuses to soldiers. It doesn't like them when you call them C.W.A. grants to cities. It doesn't like them when they are rent paid to farmers by the Government for not using farm land. It doesn't like them when they are dumped here, there, and yonder. But we have come to depend upon things we ordinarily don't like. We have to.

Now, Postmaster General Brown was depressioneering back yonder in 1930 with a group of crippled airlines, the same as the new deal is depressioneering with cities and farmers and home owners and mural artists and the rest of us. Hoover was passing it out of the Treasury with a short-handled shovel. Roosevelt is passing it out with a long-handled scoop. The principle is exactly the same. Maybe the technic has improved. Certainly the rate has been stepped up and the spread increased. Then thousands of people were getting their part of millions of dollars. Now millions of people are getting their share of billions of dollars. The new deal can afford to admit the facts.

STRAIGHT THINKING

Why not think straight about this air-mail business? Associated Press says that the companies whose contracts were annulled on the theory that they had participated in fraud are to be allowed to bid on new contracts.

Either they were defrauders of the Government or they were not. Any argument about that? If they were defrauders, they ought not to carry the mail. Any rebuttal to that? If they were not defrauders, they shouldn't have been denounced as grafters and thieves. Does anybody think they should?

Take a walk all the way around these propositions and see what you find. The chances are you will come to the conclusion—if these companies are allowed to bid again—that Colonel Lindbergh was not the gentleman who acted in too big a hurry.

BELOW THE BELT

There is something in the claim of former Postmaster General Brown that the Democrats are hitting at him below the belt. First they complain that he tried to violate the McNary-Watres air subsidy law and now they switch the accusation so as to charge him with having lobbied to get a subsidy law through so he could give away money to the air companies in compliance with it.

But that is answered in kind by the Republicans who now charge the President with murder because he sent the Army aviators unprepared into the carrying of the mail with the loss of a distressing number of lives. The Army has made a poor record, though surely not a cowardly one. And the record shows that civilian air-mail flyers were doing something in the way of service and skill for their money. But there is no fair and reasonable way in which to arrive at the conclusion that the President has sent Army men to their death.

It is a pity that this matter could not have been threshed out fairly after a full investigation. That is what Colonel Lindbergh asked for in the first place. It would have been better if it had been so handled.

[Editorial from the Chicago Journal of Commerce, Monday, Feb. 26, 1934]

LET THE FACTS SHOW

The air-mail deliberations are now reaching the state of a tragic farce, farcical in that they have taken on an unwanted political-party flavor and tragic in that in the first week of carrying the mails in Army planes six Army pilots lost their lives and there were several injuries. Yet thus far no afterthought has come to plague Postmaster General Farley, nor, apparently, the President, at whose order the wholesale annulment of private air-mail contracts was made. After a bitter partisan harangue in the House Saturday, authorization was voted for 1 year of Army air-mail service. The vote stood at 248 to 81.

Up to this time, however, none of the great quantity of evidence of fraud and collusion in closing these contracts has been forthcoming from Mr. Farley. One is left to trust him and the committee implicitly.

If there were fraud and collusion the evidence should be brought brazenly before the Senate on the floor when that body begins its consideration of authorization of Army flying. It is a patent fact that the Army pilots who have been risking their lives in strictly combat planes are at a terrific disadvantage in the present weather and later, when March winds blow. It is of the greatest importance that, if the evidence of "fraud and collusion" is only a political creation or a bogey for the persecution of the Postmaster General of Hoover times, the lives of American Air Service men be not sacrificed in the sickly and cruel sham battle.

Not only is this of importance from the viewpoint of the lives of innocent combat flyers, but it is necessary at this time—especially that the Army Air Corps be not made a tragic show of in trying to use combat officers and combat planes for purposes they are not fitted to render. Let the Senate demand the facts.

[Article from the United States Daily, Feb. 26, 1934]

NATIONAL OPINION ON CANCELLATION OF AIR CONTRACTS

Many uncertainties that exist in the public disclosures concerning the canceled air-mail contracts are conspicuous in the press comments on the position that was occupied by former Postmaster General Walter F. Brown.

A substantial number of newspapers, representing all shades of political affiliation, showed a fairly even distribution into three classes. First are those who condemn the air-mail awards on the ground that there was collusion among the air companies, with approval of the former Postmaster General. Others believe that the Postmaster General was acting in accordance with the desire of Congress to build up a strong, reliable air service. A third class takes the position that the controversy is between two administrations. These hold that because political action is involved, the public should await full explanation of all the moves in the controversy.

AN EVEN DIVISION

In definite figures the printed opinion divides rather evenly. Those editors who hold out for the correctness of Postmaster General Brown's actions comprised 34 percent; against were 30 percent. Those awaiting more conclusive evidence made up 36 percent.

Two thirds of the supporters of Mr. Farley are Democratic, with 10 percent Republican, and 23 percent independent in politics. Similar division is shown in the opposition.

Critics of the former administration argue that the records show that the former Postmaster General invited representatives of the principal air lines to a conference which, with his aproval, agreed on a division of routes and contracts. It is charged further that this method was adopted to avoid "competitive bidding", which would be contrary to their "community of interests."

The statement by Mr. Brown in the course of the investigation, while waiving immunity, raises the question of the legality of the meetings of which it is charged that mail routes were divided up, but the opposition contends that there is "no explanation as to why contracts were awarded to high bidders."

"If the President has been convinced that the air-mail contracts under Mr. Brown were tainted with fraud", says the Chicago Tribune (Republican), "the abrupt cancelation may be salutary. Fraud is the probability or possibility in the most carefully guarded

Government contracts in normal times, and the contingency grows in probability as the amounts of money increase and as haste is made an essential.

QUESTION OF LEGALITY

"The public cannot be well informed as to the charges which are held to taint the air-mail contracts. A congressional committee proceeds by well-established methods to give the widest play to such inferences and intimations as it wishes to spring from its inquiry. A clouded if not a false picture is produced by this and general opinion is led to desired conclusions. Fair judgment often is misled and congressional inquiries become suspect of special rather than public interest.

"It must be assumed, however, that President Roosevelt has sufficient information to convince him that here again is an instance of Government money flowing out not for public benefit but for private profit."

"The only reasonable assumption", in the opinion of the Toledo (Ohio) Blade (Republican), "is that more complete and damaging facts are in the hands of the President and Postmaster General."

In defense of Mr. Brown, writers deny that attendance at the meeting he called for discussion of the air-mail situation was evidence of irregularities. The Youngstown (Ohio) Vindicator (Democratic) argues for the defense with the statements: "Mr. Farley says that attendance at that meeting constituted collusion, even though the experienced legal advisers of the Government at the time saw nothing wrong in it.

"It is unfortunate that in this case the Government acted as accuser, prosecutor, judge, and jury. In these days when the old ideas of freedom and individual rights and parliamentary government are breaking down, one expects this sort of procedure of foreign countries, but it is not pleasant to see it gain a foothold in the United States."

POLICY QUESTIONED

Recalling the development and unification of railroads in the United States, part of the press questions the wisdom of destroying the private aviation service, with the incidental banishment for 5 years, and the Boston (Mass.) Transcript (Republican) asks:

"Is such retribution worth while? Is there not some other form of punishment which could discipline the companies and at the same time save the taxpayers' money by bringing to pass still more equitable payments for the air mail? Certainly any long continuation of the temporary plan to have the Army fly the mail will be both difficult and extremely costly."

On the ethical side of the question, it is argued that events of the 4 years since the contracts were made have shown that a selected group of companies was able and competent to carry out the spirit of the subsidy, which was to establish, with Government aid, a system of airways.

Many advise that judgment be suspended and that the aviation business be permitted to "put its house in order." The Hartford (Conn.) Daily Times (Democratic) argues: "It seems almost incredible that a very large number of reputable men could have sat in conference with a Postmaster General of the United States, making permanent record of their doings, and aware that concealment must be impossible, to conspire against the laws of the land, exploit the public funds, and steal unjust advantage. With such intent they would be not only criminals but fools."

[Editorial from the Ohio State Journal, Tuesday, Feb. 27, 1934]

FLYING BLIND

Those who listened to Will Rogers' broadcast Sunday night must have sensed the utter distress and bewilderment of the men as he discussed the aviation situation.

Now, Rogers is a shrewd, penetrating, critical observer with a keen ability for getting below the surface of things. Yet there he was, after long talks with the best-informed men on both sides of the controversy, groping in the dark and admitting that he could make neither head nor tail of the matter.

Is it any wonder then that the man in the street is baffled? He reads of fledgling pilots, with 10 hours of night flying to their credit, going out with brave smiles to meet death in blizzards, and finds only obscure circumlocutions answering why this is necessary.

One of the principles of law is that the plaintiff must hand the weight of evidence against the defendant. Thus far the Senate investigation of the air mail has fallen short of producing anything convincing.

There has been a plethora of innuendo and questioning of motives, but a paucity of tangible proof.

In all the hullabaloo about costs of commercial air mail—in dollars, not lives—sight has been lost of the tremendous development in aviation since the air mail began. There has been a consistent increase in efficiency, expansion of service, and constant progress in reducing flying time between points through the use of improved equipment.

Figures are convincing. In 1929 the air mail flew 10,212,511 miles at a cost to the Government of $1.09 per mile. In 1933, for the 34,909,811 miles the air mail was flown, the Government paid only 54 cents a mile.

More impressive still is that it was estimated the cost would be reduced for the fiscal year 1934 to 38 cents a mile for 36,500,000 miles.

It is worthy to note that the air transport lines spend a large portion of their revenues in developing improved aircraft aids to flying. The object is safety.

As Will Rogers remarked, folks will continue to fly regardless of what happens. Having known that means of travel they need it. But they are entitled to the greatest safety possible.

It will take a more convincing answer than has yet been produced to remove the popular impression that the sudden reversal in air-mail policy was a mistake.

[Copy of Telegram to President Roosevelt from the Philadelphia Board of Trade]

FEBRUARY 27, 1934.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D.C.:

It is acknowledged in all circles that the companies which have been operating air-mail passenger and express lines have developed a service second to none in the world. Through press reports we learn that the administration is considering new legislation which will again allow commercial companies to carry the air mail. We believe this is the proper procedure and we request that in drawing up this legislation due consideration be given to companies which have expended millions of dollars in development of service and which have obligated themselves to expenditures of many more millions of dollars for development purposes upon the strength of contract promises by the Government of the United States.

THE PHILADELPHIA BOARD OF TRADE,
PHILIP GODLEY, President.

FARLEY ADMITS IGNORANCE, HASTE IN AIR-MAIL ACTION

By James T. Williams, Jr.

As a witness before the Senate's special committee on investigation of air-mail and ocean-mail contracts, Postmaster General Farley gave sensational testimony last Saturday afternoon which appears to have been almost wholly overlooked by many, if not most, of the Sunday newspapers of the country.

Many Senators in Congress did not hear of this testimony until they were told by several members of the committee within the last day or two that it had been given. Even now some Senators are still ignorant of this testimony for the following reasons:

The up-to-date report of the proceedings of this special committee, of which Senator HUGO LAFAYETTE BLACK, of Alabama, is chairman, are not yet available in printed form either to the Senate or the House of Representatives, much less to the press and the people of the United States.

Although the so-called "Black committee", which began investigating ocean-mail contracts last September, did not reach air-mail contracts until after Christmas, the printed copies of the hearing available at this writing cover only the testimony given up to and including January 18 of this year.

MANY ADMISSIONS

This means that neither the Senate nor the House can base any legislation regarding domestic air-mail contracts on the testimony given on that subject before the so-called "Black committee", because none of the testimony since January 18 is yet in print. And the mimeographed copies of the testimony are distributed only to the members of the Senate's special committee.

It is from one of these mimeographed copies that the admissions of Mr. Farley of Saturday last, listed below, are taken.

Mr. Farley admitted that up to the 30th of January last he had ratified and confirmed domestic air-mail contracts as entirely legal.

Mr. Farley admitted that he did not change his judgment regarding the legality of these contracts until sometime between January 30 and February 6.

Mr. Farley admitted that he did not write the letter which he signed on February 14 last, notifying Senator BLACK, as chairman of the special Senate committee, of his intention to cancel all domestic air-mail contracts upon the ground that they were illegal.

Mr. Farley admitted that this letter which he signed was prepared by the Solicitor of the Department, Mr. Crowley, "with Mr. Ristine and with the Attorney General of the United States."

Mr. Farley admitted that the following section of the Postal Laws and Regulations had never been specifically called to his attention:

"In all cases of regular contract the contract may, in the discretion of the Postmaster General, be continued in force beyond its express terms for a period not exceeding 6 months, until a new contract with the same or other contractors shall be made by the Postmaster General."

PRINT TESTIMONY

Had this procedure been followed, the six heroes of the Army Air Corps who were sent to an unnecessary death last week would still be flying the colors; the airline pilots would still be flying the mails; no American citizen would have been convicted as guilty without a hearing; American air transport would not now be shattered by a crippling blow; and the Army Air Corps would not now be paralyzed as a vital arm of the national defense.

The sensational admissions by Mr. Farley as a witness before the so-called "Black committee" last Saturday afternoon would seem to have merited more attention around the Sunday morning breakfast table of the American people than they got, due to the fact that so few of those admissions have yet seen the light of the print.

In view of this fact the Senate may go to the rescue of the American people in their eagerness for the truth, and order the insertion hereafter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of each day's proceedings of all testimony taken at the hearings before the special committee of which Senator HUGO LAFAYETTE BLACK is the chairman and chief pilot.

RICKENBACKER PROTESTS AIR-MAIL FAVORITISM

LOS ANGELES, March 31.—The following telegram from Edward V. Rickenbacker has been received by William Randolph Hearst. In it the World War ace discusses the administration's air-mail policy.

NEW YORK, March 31, 1934.

W. R. HEARST,
Los Angeles, Calif.:

The call for temporary bids by private companies to carry the air mail represents the eighth distinct and conflicting policy adopted by the Post Office Department within the short period of 6 weeks in relation to the vast and vital aviation industry.

First came the startling cancelation of every existing air-mail contract.

Then the ill-considered use of the Army to fly the mail.

Then the frantic retreat from that ghastly blunder.

Then the resumption by the Army of a curtailed service.

Then, after it had been doing it for some time, the passage queerly enough of a law authorizing the Army to fly the mail.

Then the introduction of a biased bill to restore the air mail on a permanent basis to private companies.

And, after that measure was demolished by the withering criticism of every expert called by the Senate committee, the introduction of a different bill, but equally unfair, to accomplish the same purpose.

And, now, the invitation to certain favored private companies to bid for temporary contracts.

What a crazy quilt of policy, with each new patch more ludicrous than the last.

What a laughable comedy of public error and maladministration all this confusion and incompetence would be were it not such a tragic crippling of the Air Mail Service, and the aviation service and wanton destruction of one of the greatest achievements of American genius.

If this sorry mess is an indication of what may be expected from state socialistic management of public service enterprises, there can be no better illustration of the superior advantage of the American system of individualism.

EDWARD V. RICKENBACKER.

[From the New York Herald Tribune, Mar. 30, 1934]

COMMISSAR FARLEY'S UNJUST DECREE

Piling injustice on insult, Dictator Farley has decreed that no company which has had experience in carrying the air mails may bid for new contracts unless that company rids itself of a few individuals whose only proved crime to date is that they obeyed the summons of the previous Postmaster General to come to Washington to discuss mail contracts. If this be a high misdemeanor for which the corporation of which they are members should be punished, then in a few years all those who obeyed the summons of the fiery General Johnson to come to Washington may be liable to reprisals at the hands of his successor.

This utterly arbitrary action is in line with Mr. Farley's earlier blunders about the air mail. What are the facts?

That up to date no single bit of evidence has been adduced proving the loose charges of corruption and collusion.

That in spite of this the contracts have been canceled and the reputations of high-minded individuals and of efficient public-service corporations have been publicly and officially besmirched without a hearing.

That hundreds of competent employees of these corporations have been threatened with the loss of their jobs or drastic reductions of their incomes.

That the air-using public of the country has been seriously inconvenienced as the result of curtailed air services.

That the arbitrary and thoughtless insistence on forcing an unprepared Army Aviation Corps to perform services for which they were neither trained nor equipped resulted in the death of splendid young Army flyers and the destruction of Army planes.

As if this shameful record were not enough, Mr. Farley now seeks to club the aviation companies into acts that he rightly suspects even a subservient Congress will be unwilling to force upon free citizens. With his original charges still unproved, he is trying to reach the individuals on whom he is determined to vent his personal animosity by forcing their corporations to repudiate them. He is seeking by decree to impose the unjust discrimination against the holders of the old contracts which revolted even Democratic supporters of the McKellar-Black bill. This is commissar government with a vengeance—self-willed imposition of rank injustice such as warrants the growing distrust of the Roosevelt administration. What began as an ill-considered and isolated act of bad-tempered autocracy is being transformed into a precedent for government by prejudice and violence.

If Mr. Roosevelt continues to tolerate his Farley the national good nature which has been prone to exonerate him from personal responsibility will give way to the realization that Mr. Farley acts in Mr. Roosevelt's name, and that even though the President may divest himself of blame for an isolated Farley blunder he cannot wash his hands of a permanent Farley policy of oppression.

[Editorial in the Herald Tribune, Mar. 24, 1934]

END TO CHAOS

The President, it is reported from Washington, is contemplating turning the air mail back to the private companies, even without waiting for the pending permanent legislation. To do so would be to confess the failure of the whole cancelation move; that failure, however, is already apparent to everyone, even the President's most ardent supporters. To admit it now would be to restore a somewhat waning confidence in the President's own promise that his method is a genuinely experimental one, permitting the withdrawal of those experiments which prove by their results to have been mistaken.

The whole air-mail business has been handled with a stupidity strangely out of character for an administration previously distinguished above all else for its adroitness. The result is that the rush order remaking of the aviation industry to any satisfactory end has become next to impossible. The Nation does not even know what the President really intended to accomplish when the contracts were canceled; even less does it have any clear idea of the kind of aviation system that he is now trying to create. The only competent aviation organizations in the country have been filled with a sense of bitter grievance, while those sections of the public which do not condemn the cancelation as rank injustice are utterly confused by the whole affair.

A major reconstruction of an important and complicated industry simply cannot be achieved quickly against passionate resistance in the industry and in face of a public opinion either hostile or uncertain. The result of such an attempt is bound to be a long period of dislocation, with perhaps many more accidents, ending in a bad compromise. The contracts should be restored pending legal proof of any collusion warranting cancelation. With that done, the administration can then marshal whatever evidence it has, from the congressional inquiries or other sources, explain what it believes to be wrong, and present in a way that the Nation can understand it a considered plan for any reorganization that it thinks legal and necessary.

[Editorial from the Carondelet (Mo.) News, Mar. 23, 1934]

THE AIR-MAIL MESS

We believe that we are expressing a widespread feeling of indignation in saying that it was a serious blunder on the part of the Federal Government to take the physical work of air-mail carrying away from the trained, experienced men who have built up this magnificent system, and put it into the hands of young Army officers who have had no experience in that sort of flying. It was worse than a blunder to entrust the mails, which must be carried on schedule, through whatever danger, to the inadequate equipment of the Army. Even the metropolitan press is wondering, in print, which stunt the administration regrets the most—Wallace's pig-killing spree or Farley's air-mail mess.

Army planes are built for war; they are not designed for the high-speed flying required in the Air Mail Service; their pilots are not sheltered from the weather; they are not equipped for "blind" flying and night work. And in the first few days after the Army took over the mail service six lieutenants met their death in trying to carry out orders which never should have been given to them in the first place.

They did what they were ordered to do. That is the rule of the Army. We have not heard of a single Army officer, ordered to fly with the mails, who balked or complained that he was being ordered to take risks such as no man should be called upon to take except in time of war. These young West Point and Kelly Field graduates are the stuff of which heroes are made. But they have not been trained and educated at the expense of the taxpayers to become mail carriers. They have been trained as fighting men to protect their country in case of war.

Why should these brave gallant young officers be sacrificed in the name of politics without first having been trained for the task demanded? For it is difficult to see any motive but a political one in the sudden, arbitrary cancelation of all air-mail contracts but one, merely because somebody in Washington believed, without proof having been offered, that some contracts had been illegally awarded. Suppose they had been; assume that there was guilt and corruption of the gravest character; what excuse is that for "grounding" the veterans of the service and the planes which alone are equipped for the work and sending these gallant boys of the Army to their deaths?

The responsibility must rest among Mr. Roosevelt's advisers in the Army Air Corps who convinced him that its aviators could temporarily come to the Government's aid in his effort to clean up this branch of the Postal Service. They are responsible not only for the deaths which have followed in the wake of their error, but they have seriously embarrassed our President.

Fortunately, Mr. Roosevelt is big enough and courageous enough to acknowledge error, even in Presidential policies. The country will think all the more of him for having done as he did.

[Editorial from Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, Mar. 9, 1934]

BACK TO PRIVATE LINES

President Roosevelt's letter to the Chairmen of House and Senate Post Office Committees urging return of air mail to commercial lines was undoubtedly intended to speed up action. It has been evident for some time that the legislation required would be passed eventually; Chairman MEAD of the House committee declared some days ago that a bill was being drawn. The President is apparently anxious that the matter should not be permitted to drag on.

Postmaster General Farley's hasty action in ordering the cancelations met with a far different reaction from that he probably anticipated. While public sentiment would have supported fully any measures that might have been taken to penalize companies definitely shown to have secured contracts by fraudulent means, the administration had no adequate answer to the criticism that it had acted without affording the accused a chance to testify in their own defense. It was a blanket order which failed to discriminate between those companies which may have been guilty of everything charged and those which could have proved "clean hands." The old tradition in this country that nobody should be condemned without a hearing is still very strong.

In addition to that fundamental issue, however, the Post Office Department immediately encountered major difficulties in handling the air mail. The Army was given only a week to prepare for the job. This was not enough to permit the flyers to familiarize themselves with their routes or even to install proper equipment in the planes. Lacking a sufficient number of ships of the proper type for the work, others had to be pressed into service, despite the warnings of Army officers that they were not adapted to it. Service was drastically cut because of lack of sufficient equipment, and following a series of tragic accidents the first week strict orders were given not to attempt to maintain service in bad weather.

Having acted overhastily, however, the best thing that can be done now is to move as quickly as possible to correct the situation. This is what President Roosevelt now asks Congress to do. He recognizes the value of commercial aviation to the country, but wants any abuses that may have existed eliminated. There will be general approval of that policy. The only criticism has been that the same objective could have been accomplished just as surely and speedily without denying anyone a fair hearing and without disorganization of the service and undue sacrifices on the part of the Army flyers.

AIR-MAIL RESOLUTION PASSED BY THE ASSEMBLY OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK ON MARCH 5, 1934

FEBRUARY 23, 1934.

Whereas the air-mail system of the United States is the greatest in the world; and

Whereas the commercial air lines of this country are fully equipped in every department to fly the mail in all kinds of weather; and

Whereas the United States Army Air Corps is physically unable to carry out the air-mail assignments, due to the fact that their planes are deficient in number, in capacity, and in blind-flying equipment; that they have inadequate ground-station facilities, and that the pilots have not had the necessary special training; and

Whereas due to these deficiencies, several men of the Air Corps have already been killed, and several planes demolished, constituting a needless loss of life and valuable Government equipment: Therefore be it

Resolved (if the senate concur), That the President of the United States, the Postmaster General, and Congress of the United States are hereby most earnestly and respectfully memorialized to take immediate steps to restore the air-mail contracts to the aforesaid commercial companies, at least until such time as they have been proved guilty of improper action; and, be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Postmaster General, the clerk of the United States Senate, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, the Chief of the Army Air Corps, and the Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, Department of Commerce.

[Editorial from the Winslow Mail, Mar. 2, 1934, Winslow, Ariz.]

THE MOST IMPORTANT QUESTION

Nearly every newspaper in the country has editorialized on the action of Postmaster Farley in canceling the air-mail contracts and sending youthful Army flyers to their deaths. All of the editorials which came to our attention spoke with disfavor upon what was generally termed too-hasty action of the President and his Cabinet head. The consensus of opinion was that the alienable rights of Americans to be proven guilty before they are punished were violated.

In none of the editorials did we see brought out the real crux of the situation—the question that will decide whether or not mail contracts were handed out illegally or through collusion.

At the start of the era that saw private concerns taking over mail contracts from the Army there was a tendency to hand out these subsidies to concerns that were in political favor and which did not even have adequate equipment or experience. Congress saw what was happening and passed a bill making it mandatory that only those aviation concerns that had flown a 250-mile route for 6 months were eligible to bid.

When Postmaster General Brown called together the concerns in 1930 in a widely advertised meeting, he sent invitations only to those who could qualify under this act. Whether collusion or political favor entered into the subsequent negotiations only a court can determine, but since those represented at the meeting were the only ones eligible to receive contracts it would seem that the Postmaster General was within his legal rights to discuss air-mail extensions with them. However, we reiterate, this is a matter that only courts can determine, and the wholesale cancelation appears to have been unjust to the companies which had reason to believe that they had obtained their contracts legally, and had spent many millions of dollars developing the most efficient air-mail service in the world.

[Editorial from the Iola Daily Register]

AS AN ARMY FLIER SEES IT

The more information comes to light the more incredible it seems that the Army Air Corps officials should have given the President assurance that the Army could handle the air mail. Here are some paragraphs from a personal letter written under date of March 13, from Cleveland, by one of the Army fliers to a friend in Iola:

"This mail racket is going to be pretty tough for us until we get some decent blind-flying instruments and some training in using them.

"All but one of our runs in and out of here (Cleveland) are at night, and at this time of year that's a problem.

"We had been doing quite a lot of night flying at Selfridge Field—almost unlimited personal cross-countries with permission to come back at night—but very little of the night part of it was done in bad weather.

"We have found out that weather that's tough but perfectly safe in daylight is pure blind flying at night, especially after midnight when most of the lights go out in the smaller towns and there is absolutely nothing to give you a clue as to where the ground might, or might not, be.

"At this time of year we are having lots of vicious snow squalls, that materialize out of nothing, with a good weather report, and last for only an hour or less. Often there is lots of ice in them. That is what got Dud (a mutual friend killed in a recent crash), the two recent commercial airline ships, and almost all the rest of our fatal crashes.

"We have learned that almost all the commercial lines' blind-flying instruments are motor operated and so won't freeze up. Our gyros, horizons, bank and turn and climb indicators are still operated by the old Venturi system, that are regular ice machines, with the result that they go out often—and at the worst times.

"These commercial lines really fly terrible weather now. They have gotten their instruments, pilot training, and two-way, two-frequency radio down to a point where they can fly in practically anything provided there isn't too much ice in it. I give them lots of credit."

That letter makes it clear that it was little less than criminal for these Army flyers to be ordered to carry the mails under the conditions existing when the order was given. Read that first paragraph again:

"This mail racket is going to be pretty tough for us until we get some decent blind-flying instruments and some training in using them."

That is to say, these men were ordered to make night flights when their ships were not properly equipped for such service and when the men had not been trained in the use of proper instruments even if they had had them. * * *

In a later paragraph it is shown that even such instruments as the Army ships have are old, out of date, liable to become useless just when they are needed most, while the instruments used by the commercial lines are efficient in all kinds of weather.

The name of the writer of the foregoing letter, of course, will not be disclosed. He is a lieutenant in the Air Corps, writing to a personal friend who had served with him in the Army. He makes no complaint, it will be noticed. He merely describes what he and the other Air Corps men are up against in trying to obey their orders. But what an indictment his letter is of those who gave the orders!

[Editorial from the Chicago Tribune]

MAYBE THIS MAKES SENSE

Two transportation systems are being dealt with in proposed or pending legislation at Washington. Mr. Roper, the Secretary of Commerce, has some recommendations for the encouragement of the American merchant marine. Mr. Farley, the Postmaster General, is concerned with the reconstruction of the air transport, particularly as related to the post office and the carrying of mails. Mr. Roper favors a subsidy to the shipping interest which will cover differences here and abroad in the building of ships and differences in operating costs in competition with foreign companies, along with an optional subsidy to promote the development of foreign trade.

Mr. Farley's contention, supported by the Democratic politicians in the Senate, is that the commercial air-mail contracts were so outrageous as to indicate fraud and collusion on their face. The contracts have been canceled, the air mail brought to a standstill, and reconstruction along lean, stern lines proposed.

In spite of all the expense and all the scandal in the Government fostering of the merchant marine, that transport has an almost perfect record of failure. Some of the mails under the subsidy system have been carried on ridiculous terms and at ridiculous loss. The merchant marine seldoms shows any life and seldom offers any encouragement that it will produce the compensations sought as justification of the Government expenditures. In spite of this it remains an object of Government solicitude and is seldom rebuffed in Washington.

On the contrary, the American commercial air transport was rapidly putting itself in the lead of world aviation when the Government gave it a stunning set-back by arbitrary cancelation of its mail contracts. Although the mistake is now freely admitted under the pressure of facts, the attitude of the Government toward the successful American transport enterprise remains cold and hostile, and toward pitiful shipping efforts warm and sympathetic.

Is it the explanation that Government dearly loves a failure and instinctively hates a success?

THE AIR-LINES CASE INDICATES THE NEW DEAL NEEDS A FENCING OFF

From Chicago, world center of aviation, little comment was forthcoming on the sudden blighting blow to the commercial air lines in the summary action of Postmaster General Farley when he annulled the air-mail contracts and called out the Army to do the job. If the new deal expects to go so far as to make mail men out of the officers of its defense system, telegraph boys out of its bureaucrats, hello girls from the office forces of the seething Government office buildings and otherwise put the Government into control of all forms of national service, it is time to dig some trenches. Business men need to scratch a mark and say that Government can go no further.

The cancelation of the air-mail contracts was an injustice. It is impossible for the Army to perform the same service and immediately the schedule became effective, service became bad. Speed was slower; fewer routes covered. The truth is the Army does not possess the planes and personnel to do the job.

Unfortunately the Chicago airlines officials did not tell the story they could have told. One company, which carries 42 percent of the mail at 32 percent of the revenue, could have offered boldly to carry the mail at the same price as the Army, and could have made an additional profit on the deal.

If the facts about star routes and contracts of various types maneuvered by insiders at Washington covering the regular land carriage of the mail were revealed, the so-called "subsidy" of the air lines would become trivial by comparison. Post-office inspectors and district superintendents have their lips sealed concerning these deals.

The cover-up system in Washington is as much responsible for the present moves of the Government as any other factor. The mere fact that air-line operators got together and discussed extensions did not constitute dishonesty of motive. The stability of air-line operation, achieved in so brief a time, is a remarkable tribute to the men operating the aviation companies and they know the directions in which they wish to expand. An examination of the air map of the United States does not indicate that any one company is illogically extending its routes but rather confirms the opinion that routing has been well planned.

The new deal will drop sympathizers at a rapidly accelerating rate if it continues to step out of character in the manner of the air lines' treatment. Business will have enough of it soon. Chicago and the Middle West have been damaged and can rise to make the point of limitations. (From the official publication of the Chicago Chamber of Commerce, March 1934.)

POLITICS AND THE AIR MAIL

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

It appears that some radio artists and newspaper columnists are playing the part of propagandists and political sycophants. When their activity is directed to a matter of such vital national consequence as carrying the air mail it is fitting that the man on the street be heard.

Every concept of Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence precludes condemnation without fair trial. And yet from high places in the Government is flaunted before the Nation just such condemnation of a great industry.

The bitter, unwarranted attack on Colonel Lindbergh and unworthy imputation show far more of the spirit of the real Bourbon regime than of sportsmanship and fair play.

Examination of the record of events for the first week of Government operation reveals the following facts:

Mail schedules disrupted.

The finest air-transport system in the world hurtled by the Government toward disintegration—nonpolitical public sentiment outraged—all this with a mental blindness and obtuseness that fails to distinguish the intimate relation between property rights and human rights.

Senatorial investigation has brought no criticism against 31 of 34 canceled contracts.

Five Army pilots sacrificed.

After one has penetrated the political miasma enveloping the issue, and considered it in its legal, economic, and moral aspects, he finds no reason to justify the peremptory cancelation of the air-mail contracts. But, on the other hand, he finds much that savors of political opportunism.

Shall this matter be adjudicated by a court of unbiased public opinion or by the persons whose opinions are colored?

GREAT NEWS FOR TAILSKID, IS THIS ABOUT A NEW AIRLINE

DEAR TAILSKID: T'aint very frequent that I get a chance to write you some good news, so here goes for some more.

Of course, you heard about the Post Office turning the air-mail business of the country back to the civilized air lines. They said they wanted to keep some of our Army Air Corps for possible future reference, so they decided to give the mail routes back to the civilians, just like somebody wanted to give Manhattan Island back to the Indians. The Indians didn't want Manhattan back, but that don't mean the civilians don't want air mail.

Well, we have been given an air-mail line. We were not only the lowest responsible bidder, the Post Office said, but we were the only bidder, so why worry about responsibility? Anyhow, the old line's got an air-mail contract and we don't care who knows it, and there won't never be any sartorial investigation of it, either.

At 9 o'clock next week the first ship is to leave the Kansas City Airport. This is to be an east-west line, with one terminal at Kansas City and the other at Sugar Creek, Mo. Now Sugar Creek is 10 miles hence. There ain't going to be any intermediate stops, although a committee waited on us—for a long while—from Budd Park, but we found we can't land there because there's an arc light in the town square.

IN WITH TEX LA GRUNT

Anyhow, Tex La Grunt and I have bought a couple of clipped-wing Standards, equipped with robust pilots, and four-way radios—up and down and back and forth. One of our ships is going to be christened "Collusion" and the other "Fraud." So old Partial Transcontinental & Disturbed Air, Unlighted, is all set to carry the mails hither and yon.

Those "robust" pilots are great things. All you do is set a couple of knobs and then set your alarm clock and then go to sleep. If the alarm clock don't ring when you run out of gasoline, you get your name in the newspapers, but it won't make any difference to you. Anyhow, the robust pilots have got some kind of "scopes" inside that help the human pilot at the job of holding the standards in the air. You set the knobs where you want the ship to fly and then you pray that the thing works.

Phil Salzman, who's got more blood relations than any other guy at the Kansas City Airport, and who is a hair-line inspector for the Department of Commerce, has given P. T. & D. A., Unlighted, full and official approval. His only stipulation is that we keep our ships on the ground, so maybe we'll have to taxi to and from Sugar Creek. Oh, well, we got a lot of fine county roads now, anyhow! The certificate of approval he gave us says: "You can start this line if you want to, but remember that all cells ain't padded, and it's a long line that has no crack-up."

AND THE SAME TO YOU

"O. K., Phillip", says we. "And the same to you!"

Yeah, and to all his blood relations, too! Ever hear how he got those relations, Tailskid? He had six transfusions once at a hospital here and now he goes into hibernation every Christmas and every time one of the transfusioners has a birthday. He sends 'em New Year greetings by putting a notice in the personals and he says he hopes to live long enough to use the Forty Years Ago column, 'cause it won't cost so much.

So we've got the full disapproval of the department of interference, and now we're busy putting unicers on our ships. If you don't know what an unicer is, it's something a whole lot like the deicers the airlines used to use B.C. (before cancelation). The difference is the unicers are better. The deicers tried to get rid of ice by shimmying, but the unicers do get rid of ice by hammering on the wings.

An ice company here worked it out for us, and the invention consists of a series of small hammers, each suspended at its center along the front edges of the wing. I bet Jack Frye wishes he had thought of something like this. Anyhow, in normal flight, the air pressure holds handles down and the hammer heads up off the wings. But when ice piles up on the wings, it also piles up on the hammer heads. Finally the weight of ice on the hammers becomes so great, the hammer falls. The fall of the hammer breaks the ice. Simple, ain't it? Perfectly!

THE THEORY OF THE THING

Now, as the hammer hits the wing and breaks the ice, the ice also is broken off the hammer. Air pressure thereupon forces the handle down again and the hammer flies up, ready for the next innocent little hunk of ice. Now, whatever the ice company has spent in developing this unicer, it is going to get back for this reason:

As our clipped-wing Standards prowl along with compartments full of mail and wings full of ice, the company's ice wagons are going to run along under the ships, catching the ice as it falls. The ice company then peddles the ice and P. T. & D. A., unlighted, peddles the mail. Clever, eh? Now the company is working on different-sized hammers so they'll knock off 10-cent pieces of ice, 25-cent pieces, and so on.

As for our mail compartments, we've hollowed out the struts. So old P. T. & D. A., unlighted, is all set to go, and neither rain, nor hail, nor snow, nor sleet, nor anything else shall keep these swift Standards from the completion of their appointed runs—or something. Anyhow, it reminds me of that old pome:

"Shoot, if you must, this old gray head, but use air mail—it floats", she said.

Yours till we turn on the robust pilot.

WHO'LL BE MADE GOAT? CAPITAL ASKS AS BLACK FIASCO EXONERATES BROWN

By Carl D. Ruth

Now that the special Senate committee's examination of former Postmaster General Walter F. Brown on air-mail contracts has proved a gigantic "bust", speculation is keen as to who the "goat" is going to be.

Before Brown took the witness stand, Senator HUGO L. BLACK, the energetic and ambitious Alabama chairman, had been doing a pretty good job of making things look black for Brown. By carefully chosen ex parte testimony, all from witnesses consulted privately in advance, he had built up an elaborate case calculated to prove that Brown had been guilty of conspiracy, collusion, fraud, and other high crimes and misdemeanors in connection with the awarding of air-mail contracts.

Daily he fed to eager reporters behind the scenes delectable tidbits of rumor and innuendo which whetted their appetites for scandal. "Another Teapot Dome" was darkly hinted. "But we haven't scratched the surface yet. Just wait, just wait!"

WELTER OF INSINUATION

The great event to be waited for, BLACK led the gullible to believe, was the appearance of President Hoover's Postmaster General on the witness stand. But in spite of Brown's repeated announcements that he was anxious and ready to testify concerning every detail of the contracts, BLACK displayed no particular eagerness to have the great event take place.

Instead, by sly insinuations, the chairman created the impression that Brown did not really want to testify, in fact, that he was trying to avoid that because he would be required to waive immunity from prosecution on account of anything he might say.

When Brown promptly scotched all that by a telegram to Ohio's Senator, SIMEON D. FESS, insisting on a chance to be heard and declaring that he would gladly concede the right of BLACK to use his testimony against him in any court in the land, there was nothing for BLACK to do but agree to Brown's appearance the following Monday.

FLOP MAKES HISTORY

Then, with a showdown forced, BLACK executed the biggest flop in modern congressional history. Face to face with Brown at the inquisition table, he failed to make good any of his insinuated charges. Brown spoiled it all. With perfect poise, inperturbable self-control, and inexhaustible patience, he answered every question and explained fully and frankly his reason for every act.

From his own records, his own amazing memory, and even from the documents which BLACK submitted to him, he completely shattered the elaborate structure of suspicion and insinuation which BLACK had so carefully constructed.

The conferences at the Post Office Department which BLACK had tried to make appear "conclusive", secret, and sinister, all arranged for the purpose of dividing up the "spoils" with those selected in advance as contractors, he showed conclusively were nothing of the sort. Instead of being secret, they had been announced in advance through departmental press releases, together with the names of those attending.

HEARING DRAGS ON

Their purpose, as stated before, during and after the conferences, was to arrive at some common understanding under the Watres air-mail law as to the equities, rights, and responsibilities of the companies operating the commercial air routes which the Post Office Department had been authorized to place under contract.

The hearing dragged along for more than a week while BLACK turned it into a "fishing expedition" in hope of turning up some clew or ramification which would justify his flambuoyant advance notices and save his probe from becoming the joke of the Capital.

When the examination of Brown finally was ended and it was realized that BLACK had failed to make his case, the full significance of that failure began to dawn upon administration leaders.

EVIDENCE IS FAILURE

They realized that so far as the country was concerned no evidence had been deduced to support BLACK's charges. But, more important still, the President had been left in the exceedingly embarrassing position of appearing to have acted without sufficient cause or justification in his drastic order canceling all air-mail contracts.

The President, it seems, had relied upon the advice of BLACK, as chairman of the investigating committee, and Senator KENNETH MCKELLAR, of Tennessee, Chairman of the Senate Post Office Committee, both of whom assured him that there were sufficient legal grounds for such action. The contracts had been obtained by collusion, if not fraud, they said, and there was not the slightest doubt that the whole rotten business would be revealed in connection with Brown's testimony.

Attorney General Homer B. Cummings gave a hasty curbstone opinion assenting, and the President signed his name to the order. The contracts were canceled, and the Army took over the carrying of the air mail, with results that shocked and aroused the country.

PROTESTS POUR IN

Expressions of amazement and disapproval poured into Washington from every section. Members of Congress expressed their protests in both the House and Senate.

It was then that speculation as to the "goat" began. Would it be Black? Or would it be Farley? Or would it be Major General Foulois, Chief of the Army Air Corps, who had said the Army flyers were sufficiently experienced and equipped to carry the mails safely?

No one seems to know the answer, although there is general agreement that someone will be made to suffer.

ROGERS ANSWERS PELLEY'S CHARGE

Leighton W. Rogers, executive vice president of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce of America, Inc., takes issue with a statement by John J. Pelley, president of the New Haven Railroad, that under the system which has been in force the taxpayers have been required "to contribute an average of $100 for each passenger that travels by air, to pay for the mail subsidy, lighted airways, radiobeacons, radio service, and airports."

Mr. Rogers said: "That statement is not supported by the facts. There is no reason why the money spent on general aviation should be termed a subsidy for airline-passenger traffic. Airline operations represent only a very small fraction of the total flying activities, both military and commercial, which have been fostered by appropriations of public funds.

"To account for $64 of the $100, which the statement purports to show as coming from the taxpayers for every air-line passenger, there are listed four of the Federal Government expenditures for the fiscal year 1932.

"The first figure quoted is $19,938,120, which the Post Office Department paid the air lines for carrying mail during that fiscal period. That amount does not represent a net outlay as implied, because the Department received from the sale of air-mail postage a sum estimated to be in excess of $7,000,000.

"In return for the difference of about $12,000,000, the people of the United States received for their money the following:

"1. The service of 32,202,710 miles of flying with mail in the United States by the fastest means of transport yet devised.

"2. The quickest possible delivery of 8,845,967 pounds of air mail during that fiscal year, the equivalent of about 260,000,000 letters, which were important enough to demand the fastest speed possible.

"3. The air-mail contracts helped to defray part of the cost of development on the air lines, so that during the fiscal year 1932 they were able to fly not only mail but also passengers and express, from coast to coast in 24 hours and 42 minutes, less than one third of the time required by train. Those contracts also encouraged the lines to continue development work, so that this year coast-to-coast time will be about 18 hours.

"4. The air-mail expenditures also permitted the airlines to spend money developing aircraft and aids to safe flying, such as 2-way plane and ground-radio telephone, the directive radio beam, radio airport localizers, and the radio-landing beam.

"5. The air-mail expenditures permitted the airlines to fly millions of miles in all kinds of weather, thus testing new equipment, so that higher speeds of from 150 to 200 miles an hour now distinguished four new types of air liners.

"6. The air-mail expenditures permitted the airlines to develop a transportation service which would become absolutely essential to national defense.

MAIL PAY NOT A SUBSIDY

"In view of these facts, application of the term 'subsidy' and charging it to air-passenger traffic alone can hardly be recognized as the result of sound reasoning. Obviously, the air-mail item is not a subsidy to air-passenger traffic.

"The other three items of Federal expenditures in Mr. Pelley's statement, as published, include:

"Department of Commerce

"Airplane-inspection service	$1,369,660
"Airways and radio service	8,992,600

"Weather Bureau

"Weather service for airplanes	1,709,340

"Combining those figures, adding the result to the gross air-mail expenditures, and dividing the sum by the 504,575 passengers flown on the airlines gives the average of $64 per passenger subsidy, as quoted in the statement.

"Those three important functions of the Government should not be set down as a subsidy for air-passenger traffic when they were created for all flying. There are only about 475 airplanes in operation on our airlines within the borders of the United States, forming only a small percentage of the 9,344 civilian airplanes officially licensed and otherwise authorized to fly in the United States. The Federal Government aeronautics activities, inspection, radio, weather service, and the Federal airways system have been created for everybody.

"Instead of being a subsidy for air-line passenger traffic, as asserted in Mr. Pelley's critical statement, the expenditures, as listed, render to the people of the United States the following services:

SYSTEM CREATED BY CONGRESS

"1. The Federal airways system was created by Congress to provide for all flying a service similar to that provided by the Light-house Service, harbor development, coast patrol, and the Interstate Commerce Commission, which deals with railroads.

"2. It now permits our Army and Navy air forces to be mobilized quickly.

"3. Quite unlike the railroad rights-of-way, it is free to all, including private, military, and commercial flyers.

"4. The airways are the only means of providing facilities for cross-country flight training and development of all flying equipment.

"5. The airplane inspection service under the law examines and licenses all flying equipment which is flown beyond State borders. This service, of course, is also performed for the airlines in the same manner that Federal inspectors examine locomotives and other railroad equipment as a measure of protection to the traveling public.

"6. Likewise the radio and Weather Bureau services are maintained for not only commercial but also military aviation. None at all familiar with the purposes and operations of the Federal aeronautics branches would charge their expenditures to the relatively few passenger planes at present flying on the airlines.

"Of course, air transportation has been developing so rapidly and the service it renders is becoming so popular that the number of airliners in day and night service has increased steadily and should increase rapidly from now on, provided that the companies which have pioneered in this development are not put out of business by unwise legislation.

AIRPORT DEVELOPMENT DISCUSSED

"Airports and their development are included in Mr. Pelley's statement as contributing $36 to the so-called '$100 passenger subsidy', the investment in airports, interest on bonds, and loss of taxes on publicly owned airports, combined with 'operating deficits' being added together and the result divided by the number of passengers carried.

"First of all, as with the Federal Airways System, the critic has taken the money invested in original capital equipment and permanent development of airports and considers it as if it were money spent on temporary benefits during the 1 year of record. That is like charging each railroad passenger carried in 1932 with the original cost of railroad depots, roundhouses, and repair shops.

"Secondly, the airports, being publicly owned, are open to all and the air lines are tenants of the airport management. They pay their way, unless, like the railroads, they have received concessions in return for the services rendered the Government, State, or municipality, or which promise to be rendered in future. None would question the desirability of helping the railroads in their magnificent task of supplying surface transportation.

"Mr. Pelley, being a railroad man, is familiar with the fact that Federal land grants made to railroads in the early years of their development, beginning in 1850 and extending, in the case of State grants to railroads, to 1918, totaled 123,711,975 acres, or 11.08 percent of the available land area in continental United States. In 1872 the directors of the Northern Pacific Railroad, to mention only one, estimates its 58,000,000 acres to be worth $10 an acre, or $580,000,000.

BELIEVES EXPENSES JUSTIFIED

"We believe that everything done to promote the growth of railroad transportation was justified because of enhanced service to the public.

"At the same time the people are entitled to the best transportation that can be developed; and air transport, even with its present limitations, is providing upward of 3-miles-a-minute service, the airlines having station stops in 178 communities, which are trading areas for 60 percent of the population and which contain 90 percent of the industrial facilities of the Nation.

"Third, in Mr. Pelley's critical discussion of airport deficits, one or two examples are taken to support the contention that all airports have an income sufficient only to cover 'about 10 percent of the out-of-pocket cost of operations'. Even assuming this to be true, it is hardly fair to condemn a relatively new enterprise because it showed a deficit in 1932, of all years.

"Fourth. The airports are used by all. They are the stations of the airways. If the airports were not available and an emergency should warrant sending a military air force into any part of the country to ward off an attack, that air force would be helpless.

"Fifth. The relatively few planes operated by the airlines use the available public airports because the municipalities have urged the operators to come there, just as the railroads were invited to come into and through the towns.

NO COMPETITION WITH WIRES

"The further criticism in Mr. Pelley's statement is that 'the airplane lines are not only carrying passengers and express in competition with the railroads, but the Air Mail Service is in competition with the telegraph and telephone companies, which are private facilities.' That is an extremely complimentary statement, although not quite justified, because air transport as yet makes little more than 3-miles-a-minute speed with the latest equipment available, and the telegraph companies, like many railroad companies, are cooperating whole-heartedly with air transportation.

"Air-transport operators do not consider themselves competitors of the telegraph or telephone; nor do they believe the railroads are competitors of air transportation, because the airlines offer such high speed that they provide a service distinctly their own.

"The criticism that during the fiscal year of 1932, which ended, incidentally, on June 30 of that year, the airline between New York and Boston carried only an average of 40 pounds of mail a day is not justified. It must be borne in mind that this was a service created at the direct request of the business people of New England, who wanted air transportation.

SURVEY SHOWS VALUE

"To be able to form an accurate opinion of the service during that early pioneering period of operations one would have to know what kind of mail formed that average 40-pound load each day. If periodic surveys are of any value, then we can say with assurance that this air mail was urgent mail, which the senders wanted delivered with the utmost rapidity, to save time, money, or trouble. When the air mail reduces delivery to a few hours, or if across the continent, to a day and a night, the time saved means money earned for the increasing number of banks and business houses now mailing by air. The amount of money thus earned by the public is many times greater than the relatively small sum spent on the Air Mail Service.

"Air transport has demonstrated repeatedly that it can take its rightful place in the Nation's communication system only when it has become a complement to the slower surface agencies. In that respect, I quote paragraph 31 on page 118 of the Security Owners Association report, A Study of Transportation by Airway as Related to Competition with Rail Carriers in Continental United States, November 1, 1932.

"It is in the interests of the Nation, both economically and from the standpoint of national defense, that a strong air transport be developed. The rail carriers have much to gain by undertaking to stimulate this service in conjunction with their own."

FAIR INVESTIGATIONS

By Richard Washburn Child

WASHINGTON, March 6.—Investigation!

Scandal or inquisition?

These are subjects, at the moment, compelling in the minds of Washington observers.

People and press of the country are unanimous in support of the exposure of real scandal—whether it be cold meat from a former administration, or hot dishes, such as the eternal whispering gallery of Washington prophecies, on their way up from Hell's Kitchen.

Everyone of decency in the United States wants its Government clean. Especially in a period when the taxpayer's money faucet is wide open is there reason for the closest inspection to see that this river of money may reach the harbor of public welfare and the dry fields of unemployment, its waters free of pollution.

But unfair rumor and unjust implication and hints and bullying by investigators, whether these be congressional committees or grand jurors or so-called "secret agents" of various departments, are almost as loathsome as corruption itself.

Not all congressional committees are unfair in spirit, but Washington is beginning to believe that the temptation to be unfair, where witnesses are summoned and when they can be put on a skewer and roasted, is great indeed.

It takes a peculiarly fair chairman of committee, or Senator, or Congressman, not to find his own political capital is served by turning a hearing into an inquisition.

The investigator who really serves the public is the one who does not hint and gibe so that the public receives an impression of guilt hung on the necks of decent and innocent men, but the one who can produce the evidence to convict, as Senator Walsh of Montana used to do.

There are men, of course, whose convictions cannot be obtained of touching the jam pot, but those fingers are covered with jam in the eyes of almost everyone.

There may be men who are guilty and can be found guilty.

But injustice of the rankest kind may be heaped by those who swing for their little day in the limelight, the power of politics and of bureaucracy, upon innocent men who have served the public good.

Every time that is done, whether by a congressional hearing or by investigators, of whom we now have a bumper crop, or by some political figure who can release a slimy hint of authority to the press, there is intolerable tyranny.

This tyranny is not only intolerable because it is in itself almost always inspired by selfish aims and sadistic egotistical outrage.

It is also intolerable because it ruins the effectiveness of those who, in a better atmosphere, can put ferrets on the trail of real corruption and wring its neck.

It is also intolerable because it is sometimes used for the very purpose of a smoke screen to hide the places where corpses are really buried.

And every reporter in Washington knows it.

CHAPERON FLIES TO NEW YORK IN 3 HOURS 10 MINUTES IN NEWEST AIR YACHT

By the Chaperon

Last night at 6 o'clock I was in Chicago and 3 hours and 10 minutes later I was in Newark, N.J., having been a passenger in the huge Douglas air liner with which the Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., in the person of Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, broke the existing speed record for transport planes between Chicago and New York by 7 minutes.

I had varied the customary routine of a society reporter by attending the Wynekoop trial to hear Prosecutor Dougherty make his closing plea to the jury, and at 5:30 I left, somewhat reluctantly, for the municipal airport to catch the plane which was to take a load of newspaper men and women to New York in an effort to break the existing record. And at 9:30, just 4 hours later, I was telling Dougherty's sister about the trial in New York.

It was a breath-taking flight. For the first thrill we clicked off the first 140 miles in 28 minutes. Fifty-eight minutes after our take-off from the Municipal Airport in Chicago we were passing over Toledo—220 miles.

An hour and twenty-five minutes after leaving Chicago we were over Cleveland. Then the Alleghenies, looking from 13,500 feet like the Irish hills of Michigan lighted by a million stars in a sapphire sky, to which we seemed closer than to earth, and then, almost before we knew it, the lights of New York. A hundred and ninety minutes from Chicago to New York, a distance of 724 miles as the crow flies!

As the crow flies, did I say?

No crow ever flew as fast as that huge silver plane flew last night.

TRIP A THRILL

The only planes that ever covered that distance in shorter time than we made were the streamlined, stripped-for-speed, "flying gasoline tanks", with which Jimmy Doolittle and Frank Hawks set transcontinental records. No transport plane, built to accommodate pay passengers, carrying two pilots, a steward, and 10 passengers ever flew it, and it was a thrill to be among those present when a new world's record was hung up.

And that brings me to the point of my story and the point of the flight. This huge Douglas plane—to call it an air yacht would be to better describe its comfort and elegance—cost $360,000 to build. It was ordered from the Douglas factory by the Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., which held at that time a contract with the Post Office Department to carry air mail between New York and California.

It was the plan of Richard W. Robbins, president of the air line, and of the officers of North American Aviation Corporation (of which T.W.A. is a subsidiary) to place 41 of these magnificent air liners in service between New York and California.

Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, the "ace of aces", whose war-time record marks him a loyal Army man, now vice president of North American Aviation, took charge of the plans for this fleet that was to shorten flying time between the coasts to 15 hours on a regular schedule of passenger and mail planes.

He personally supervised the building of this first huge metal plane; the installation of its two 700-horsepower Wright Cyclone motors that were to clip off the extra hours now consumed in transcontinental flying.

He watched with pride the many safety factors incorporated in its construction; the added comforts that would characterize the "new deal" in luxury flying—such as its cabin ceilings, so high a six-footer like himself can stand up in it with his hat on; steam heat in the cabin, regulated by a thermostat; individual funnels placed above each seat so that a passenger desiring a breath of fresh air has only to reach up and twist the tiny gadget to feel a cool breeze blowing on him (and only on him); increased visibility from its windows; a coat rack in the back of the cabin on which the passengers' coats hang on hangers, eliminating the annoyance of mussed and wrinkled wraps at a journey's end.

MANY IMPROVEMENTS

I mention these first because they are the improvements which impress the passenger. As a forward step in the industry in which Douglas has always been a leader the mechanical improvements are more impressive.

A week before the first of the 41 planes ordered and already under construction was delivered, President Roosevelt's sudden and entirely unexpected cancelation of their air-mail contract fell with stunning force upon their heads.

Without the revenue from their air-mail contract they could not afford to carry passengers, even in their present equipment—at the rates now in force. Certainly they couldn't afford to place these costly new planes in service.

Now, Captain Rickenbacker is a shrewd man, and he knows the value of the dramatic, even in business; and besides, being the ace of aces, he likes the "Beau Geste." So he decides to christen the first of the great silver fleet by carrying T.W.A.'s last load of United States mail from California to New York—and set a new transcontinental record at the same time.

He succeeded, as you all remember, last week when he flew the Douglas, in which he set yesterday's record, from Los Angeles to New York in 13 hours 2 minutes and 20 seconds through some of the toughest weather that ever put gray hair in an air-mail pilot's head.

He wanted the public to know that T.W.A. had been planning to give them the fastest, safest plane service possible to give, and that they would be prevented from doing so if President Roosevelt persisted in his cancelation of their air-mail contract.

And he wanted President Roosevelt to be impressed with the sincerity of a company which would spend huge sums of money and such ingenuity of mind to accomplish such a forward step in aviation.

NEW MARK SET AFTER PLANE BATTLES STORM

Coming into the home stretch like Man o' War, at the rate of 228 miles an hour, the T.W.A. two-motored plane, in charge of Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, established a new record today for the flight of an air-transport plane from Chicago to New York.

The flight, which took off at the municipal field in Chicago, ended at the Newark airport 3 hours and 10 minutes later. The previous record was 3 hours and 17 minutes.

The eastern voyage was in direct contrast with that which left New York yesterday morning. Buffeted by terrific head winds, the plane fought its way bravely across Ohio, making a sort of cross-word puzzle map.

It did not seem important at the time. For crises seldom are recognized as they happen, and a casual event of today may well be a vital part of tomorrow's history. Yet it is undoubtedly true that the flight yesterday from New York to Chicago and back again of Eddie Rickenbacker, America's famous war ace, in his new semistratosphere plane definitely turned the page on a new chapter in aviation history.

A plane equipped with supercharged engines, guided 90 percent of the time by a robot pilot, and traveling at an altitude never before attained by a passenger ship, was flown with perfect safety through a windstorm of greater ferocity than ever was encountered before by any airship.

During 4 hours of strenuous flying on the westward trip from Pittsburgh to Chicago, with the wind tearing into the ship at a velocity estimated by D. W. Tomlinson, the pilot, at between 125 and 150 miles an hour, the robot pilot held steadily to the prescribed course, and there was hardly a tremor noticed by the passengers except when altitude was purposely being gained or lost. There was not even a gasp from the evenly running motors and the ship kept an even keel.

PACKED WITH THRILLS

Despite the safety, however, it was a ride packed with thrills for the newspaper men who were carried as guests of Captain Rickenbacker. Hardly had the ship left the Wayne County airport at Pittsburgh when it ran head on into a driving snowstorm. Captain Rickenbacker ordered more altitude, and the plane began a steady climb. It climbed for a full hour before the top of the storm clouds was finally reached.

By that time the huge Douglas ship was riding along at between 20,000 and 22,000 feet—almost 4 miles above the earth—and even then it was only 500 feet above the top of the clouds.

Later—almost 3 hours later—when the worst of the storm had been cut through and there was no further trace of danger, the newspaper men learned that during the first hour, with the twin motors wide open, a distance less than 30 miles had been covered.

When it is realized that the ship has an ordinary cruising speed of from 200 to 240 miles an hour under normal weather conditions, it can be imagined just how hard the wind must have been blowing.

And cold? The ship thermometer outside on its blunt nose registered 20 degrees below zero. That was as far as it would register. It must have been at least 30 or 40 degrees below. In the steam-heated cabin, however, all was snug and warm. The temperature never went below 72 degrees, and the only sign of the cold outside was the frost which formed on the windows fully one eighth of an inch thick.

There was plenty of indication of height, however. It was not necessary to use the oxygen tanks, but breathing became a labor. Light a cigarette and the flame of the match was ruby-colored and half its normal spurt. Trying to keep the cigarette lighted was too much work. Puff and no smoke came out. It went out.

After 2 hours of this, however, the rare air became sort of a habit. You did not notice it if you did not move. And when the plane continued its steady progress, with nothing alarming happening, the scenery came in for its proper share of admiration.

No transport passengers had seen anything like this before, and the fact that a peephole had to be scraped in the thick frost added to the kick. Mammoth billows of swiftly moving clouds, looking like giant Alpine crags, and here and there a giant canyon 2 miles deep through which a fleeting glimpse of the earth was possible.

The "sightseeing", though, also made it possible to see the ice formed on the edge of the wings. Everyone pretended not to be nervous but everyone was. Cups of coffee served by the steward were overturned, although the ship was perfectly steady. And hands shook a bit as magazine pages were turned by the more nonchalant ones. The sky, meanwhile, with all the storm in progress beneath, was a brilliant aquamarine, and the sun, reflected from the metal of the broad wing of the ship, dazzled the eyes even though looking at it through a small hole.

Probably the greatest sight of all was around 2 o'clock when the plane descended to 17,000 feet. Immediately behind could be seen the clouds just passed over, rising, it seemed, in a vertical pile like a giant cliff 3 miles high. That marked the end of the storm, although the wind velocity was still around 80 miles an hour. But ground could be seen through the clouds of dust below.

"Now that the danger, if any, is all passed", Captain Rickenbacker was asked, "what did you really think of that flight over the clouds?"

"I didn't like it so well myself for a while", he admitted. He maintained, however, that at no time was the ship in real danger. The robot pilot had maintained an even keel and an even course, which would have been impossible with the control in human hands.

BRITISH WRITER SUPPORTS AMERICAN AIR-MAIL SYSTEM

Frequently foreign opinion of our domestic troubles is more interesting—and sometimes more enlightening—than the editorial comments of American writers.

In the latest issue of the Aeroplane, leading British aviation publication, Editor C. G. Grey appended to a résumé of recent United States air-mail events the following comment:

"We, in this country, await with interest the answers of the air-mail contractors to those charges. The craze for competitive bidding, from which all Government departments seem to suffer, may lead, and has led, to all kinds of evils.

"The Air Mail Service of the United States has been the envy of the world. No other country can show as high a standard of speed, regularity, and safety combined, or such perfect ground organization.

"Our Imperial Airways can compete with American on safety and regularity, and financially is much nearer flying by itself, but does not pretend to compete on speed or ground equipment.

HITS COMPETITION

"If the American mail contracts had been given to the lowest bidders, there would have been no such sums to be spent on organization, experimental ships, or sheer speed.

"And throat-cutting competition would have meant cheaper planes, poor equipment on the ground, and many lost mails and dead passengers.

"The British Post Office buys from our steamship lines far more space than is ever used; and if it did not, we should not have the finest sea-going ships.

MERIT, NOT PRICE

"Government contracts must be awarded on merit and not on price if a country is to get the best value for its money.

"And the people who got the American air-mail contracts were better fitted to have them than anybody else, by reason of their experience of the design, construction, and operation of their planes and engines."

AIR-MAIL MUDDLE

By David Lawrence

The air-mail situation is far from clarified, even though the President has asked Congress to give the job back to the commercial carriers.

No information is available as to what mail is being delivered by air and what is going by trains. Delays are numerous and complaints of irregular service are continuing, notwithstanding the improvement in weather conditions.

Meanwhile the private air companies are laying off employees right and left. Some of the pilots are being hired by the Army, but many of the other kinds of workers are joining the ranks of the unemployed.

The cry that all this punishment is justified because the aviation companies made a lot of money is still heard among the thick-and-thin supporters of administration policy, but a check-up of stock holdings shows that the Wall Street crowd sold out its securities early in the game and it is the small investor who is suffering today.

NO PROOF OF SABOTAGE

Charges of sabotage in handling Army planes have not been proved, and the airplane companies have caused investigations to be made to determine the source of such rumors, which may have been started as a smoke screen behind the tragic deaths of Army flyers.

While there have been suggestions as to new air-mail legislation, the truth is, the power to restore normal service rests in the Post Office Department. Emergency contracts can be granted pending a determination of air-mail policy. The Postmaster General has the right to fix the rates to be paid for carrying air mail.

The possibility that the new laws would specify ways and means of reopening bids, based upon financial reorganizations of the airplane companies which previously had contracts, is being voiced in congressional circles. It would mean delay in getting air-mail service unless temporary arrangements are made, because any financial reorganization of air-mail companies would take months and possibly a year or more. In the interim, with few exceptions, the only companies that are responsible and can meet schedules are those now in business. Hence the return of the service to private hands on the basis of 60-day contracts, which could be extended from time to time and cancelable whenever the provisions of the new law could be made operative, is the only thing that can be done at the moment to save the thousands of employees who are losing their jobs.

BLOW TO COMMERCIAL FLYING

It has been estimated that about $100,000,000 has been invested in airports in different parts of the country. Many of the airport companies have indicated that the mail situation is affecting them adversely. Indeed, commercial aviation has received a body blow from which it will not soon recover. The prospect of getting extra capital, which is needed from time to time in any growing industry, also may have been diminished by the erratic policy followed by the Government in first stimulating the development of commercial aviation and then taking its principal support away and transferring the job to the Army.

Not all the aviation companies have made money. Many of the officers and corporations who originally built routes and acquired contracts are no longer the same as in the beginning. Also there has been no proof adduced that all the companies were guilty of collusion and fraud. Nevertheless, all companies are being treated alike—the innocent and the guilty.

The important thing from the public standpoint is the efficiency of the service and the saving of human life. Many air-mail schedules have been canceled to prevent accidents to the Army flyers. It will take a long time for the Army to be able to operate air-mail schedules efficiently. The training in night flying is something which it took the private pilots a long time to acquire, and it has not been a part of the Army routine.

RICKENBACKER SEES PROFIT IN TRANSPORT OF AIR MAIL IF POLITICS IS ELIMINATED

By George Daws

Air transportation, given a fair opportunity and not burdened with political control, would return a profit on operations within a maximum of 3 years, Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker declared today.

"I know what I'm talking about", he insisted. "It is not guesswork, optimism, or bluff. All we ask is the same chance the railroads were given. That and freedom from political control."

He paused, smiled, then added: "Politicians and airplanes do not mix well."

Aviation once meant flaming death, splitting bullets, and daily gambles with life to America's ace of aces. Now it is a problem of cold figures, charts, and reports. The strong, sun-browned hands that aimed the guns which downed 25 German planes moved swiftly through a stack of reports on his desk. He lifted a paper, studied it, then spoke slowly.

SAYS COST HAS BEEN CUT

"The cost to the Government of carrying the air mail has gone down", he said. "The revenue has increased. The gap between income and expenditure has thus been sharply reduced. It is inevitable that aviation, given a fair chance, will soon return a profit."

Rickenbacker, vice president of North American Aviation Corporation, the General Motors subsidiary that owns control of three great air lines, carefully chose his words as he commented upon previous Government operation of transportation systems.

"The Government, you know, has not done so well in the transportation field", he said. "After the war it was mighty glad to relinquish control of the railroads. The Shipping Board now is trying to get out of the steamship business. I don't know why I should expect any better luck with the transportation of air mail."

INDUSTRY NEEDS REVENUE

An air-transport system, he pointed out, must have revenue from every possible source the same as railroads or shipping.

"A rail company would have a difficult struggle if it had to exist solely on the revenue from passengers or freight or mail", he said. "Why, then, expect the younger and relatively weaker air-transport system to exist without the aid of the mail payments?

"We must not make-believe; we must face the realities. If the Government permanently assigns the mail job to the Army, our air transportation system will be wrecked. A few lines might struggle along for a brief time, with infrequent schedules and almost prohibitive rates. Hundreds of millions of dollars invested in air-line securities would be swept away. Hundreds of men, who have risked their lives to pioneer a new industry, would lose their jobs."

SHOWS DECREASE IN PAYMENTS

Rickenbacker produced a table showing the decrease in annual payment by the Post Office Department for every mile flown with mail in the United States. The table, by fiscal years, follows:

1929	$1.09
1930	.98
1931	.79
1932	.62
1933	.54
1934	.38

During the same period, he said, the annual mileage increased from 10,212,511 to almost 36,000,000.

With the assistance of technical experts, Rickenbacker has prepared a proposal, "how the transportation of air mail can be made to return a profit to the Government and the air-transport industry." It is a long, detailed study, bristling with columns of figures and estimates.

OPPOSED TO "STIGMA"

It recommends, first, the elimination of "the stigma of 'subsidy'" in referring to air-mail appropriations, charging that "it is unjustly assumed that the air-mail operators are being subsidized, whereas it is the general public which is being subsidized in view of the fact that without passenger and express revenue, the so-called 'air-mail subsidy' would not equal the cost of the transportation of the present volume of air mail over the vast mileage and the number of schedules and at present speeds."

Rickenbacker recommends reduction of air-mail rates to stimulate use of the service. The letter rate, he believes, should be 5 cents an ounce, a postcard 2 cents and a lettergram—a single sheet that folds into an envelope—3 cents.

Also, he recommends "a method of payment that will penalize those not carrying profitable loads and reward the others."

The schedule of minimum rates he recommends would begin with 40 cents an airplane-mile this year and gradually be reduced until the rate would be only 25 cents at the end of 5 years.

SEES PROFIT TO POST OFFICE

"I estimate conservatively that the Post Office Department would be making an annual profit of more than $2,000,000 at the end of the third year and a profit of almost $5,500,000 in the fifth year", he said.

"Operators of the long, heavy lines can make a profit for the Government almost immediately. The lines that extend into sparsely settled areas, where the mail loads are light, must be aided for a few years.

"The Government should tackle this air-mail problem in a sensible businesslike way with a disregard of politics. Operators of the busy lines should be paid a low rate per pound-mile. They are willing to work for that low rate today, too."

Rickenbacker finds one bright ray of sunshine in the present Army operation of the mail.

"It may result in having a lot of obsolete, dangerous equipment washed out", he said. "The Army is loaded up with junk planes. The way things were going, it had no chance to get rid of the obsolete equipment. If the boys wreck some planes, then Congress may give them the money to buy some badly needed new ones."

KNOWS ARMY CONDITIONS

Rickenbacker, on the morning after the death of three Army pilots a few weeks ago, termed the Army operation of the mail "legalized murder." The phrase since has been widely quoted.

"Perhaps I should not have said that", he commented today. "But I was angry at the time. Remember I am a former Army flyer, and I have a sincere regard and affection for the military men. I know what they're up against. That, perhaps, is why I spoke bluntly and why I have such an earnest hope that this controversy will be ended before more men are killed.

"I repeat now what I said before: I believe that any individual or company guilty of collusion in obtaining air-mail contracts should be punished, and severely punished, but I still am waiting to see the proof."

[Editorial from the Chicago Tribune, Mar. 9, 1934]

BACK TO CIVILIAN AIR MAIL

The tragic experiment which suddenly dumped the air mail into the lap of the Army has come to an abrupt end. It has cost five officers' lives and some serious injuries, to say nothing of expense to the Public Treasury.

Nothing charged against the preceding administration, even if the charges are verified, which they have not yet been in any respectable sense, is more discreditable than the exhibition of unscrupulous politics given by this proceeding, including the favoritism shown to two lines which were immune from administration discipline and naively illustrated in free rides to influential individuals among the powers that be.

The proceeding, for all its pretense of moral indignation and devotion to public service, was obviously intended to be a dramatic political coup. It has fallen flat. The public has seen through it and has resented it. The only public benefit that can be hoped from it is an improvement in Army aviation equipment and methods because of the glaring deficiencies in both exposed in this tragic proceeding.

ARMY FLYERS TIRE OF MAIL JOB

By Sherman B. Altick

Army flyers who have been shoving the air mail along the Nation's skyways are "fed up" with the job. They are eager for the commercial transport lines to take over the task that has been bitter and costly for the military.

These khaki-clad pilots, who have been pushing the air mail from city to city in planes ill fitted for the job, all tell the same story. The equipment they are using, in the main, was not developed for air-mail flying; the pilots were not trained for the special type of weather flying that goes with mail transports, and the instrument and radio equipment in the military planes is antiquated and impractical.

Most of them are highly critical of the administration's action in handing them, practically, overnight, a job that the commercial lines have been specializing in for years. They do not blame the higher-ups in the flying service.

ARMY MEN EXPRESS VIEWS

"Everyone knows that the 'brass hats' in the War Department not associated with the flying arm of the military are responsible for the President's action in handing us the job with 10 days' notice", said an oldtimer as he chatted with others in the military Air Service at Chicago.

"It's a shame to send some of these kids out in crates like that in the weather we've been flying", chimed up another officer as he pointed his finger in the direction of half a dozen antiquated observation planes that could be used for a long time in training military aviators, but which are of little practical use today as air-mail carriers.

"We're all fatalists in the Air Corps. We entered the air branch of the service with the idea of sacrificing our lives", a youngster spoke up, but he quickly was taken back by an older officer, who said:

"Quite so; but I, for one, do not want to give mine for a couple of mail bags."

Almost to man they were loud in their condemnation of the radio equipment they were forced to use, and nearly every one of them believes that if no other good comes out of the abrogation of the contracts, the Army Air Corps will get good radio equipment and the military pilots will get training in blind flying.

RADIO SETS LIMITED IN RANGE

"Do you know that the transmitting sets we have in the planes today have a range of about 15 miles and are practically worthless for cross-country flight?" said a lieutenant, who cited failures he had with the equipment during some recent flights.

"Boy, we certainly are ready to chuck up the whole job and go back to our military training", he continued. "Some of the kids (recent graduates from the air training schools) were anxious to take their fling at the mail job in order to get some time in the air, but they're fed up on the thing now.

"It's been pretty costly in lives, but we should be getting some good equipment out of the experiment. The commercial lines, because they are run by business men instead of politicians, have spent all the money they could make in new instruments and the betterment of flying equipment. All we've gotten has been a lot of slashes in budgets. The flying corps is a sort of stepchild in the War Department anyway; and whenever the pruning knife starts working, you can bet your last dollar that military aviation gets the worst end of the deal."

Meanwhile, the big airlines that have spent fortunes setting up airports, building communication systems, and developing passenger and express business, are reluctant to enter the competitive bidding with lines that have expended nothing and therefore could put in a low figure.

ADMINISTRATION PLAN ATTACKED

Airline officials in all parts of the country have attacked the administration's plan for reestablishing the commercial air mail, and in discussing the action most of the Army mail flyers seemingly are in agreement with the commercial operators.

"The airlines took it on the chin just when they were getting some place with passenger and express business", a veteran in the Army flying service said. "Nearly all of the promoters got out when the market started downward after the 1929 bubble, and the operators today are showing a business hand.

"Take a look at the new equipment. For instance, there's the new Douglas, which was developed for Transcontinental & Western Air, and the new Boeing that United is using. They tell me that the Douglas is the last word in transport. Do you think a promoter would spend $5,000 for an automatic pilot? And if you think the Army could get any appropriations out of Congress for equipment like that, you're just balmy.

"A lot of people do not understand this whole mess and, believe me, it is a mess. I don't think the Army will be relieved from air-mail duty in the very near future unless public sentiment over recent deaths forces Congress to act. Unless the public is aroused to the pitch where legislation must be enacted before the last of April, then the Army will be flying the mail late next fall, and, believe me, the air lines will certainly be in a wrecked condition by that time."

[From the Kansas City Star, Mar. 12, 1934]

THE ARMY AND THE AIR MAIL

The Air Corps of the United States Army has failed at the task set for it of flying the air mail. Even worse, it has failed in the face of assurance to the President by the Secretary of War that the Air Corps was capable of doing the job.

Air mail service today in the United States exists in name only, and, as it now is constituted, it is not worthy of the name. Why? In effect, it is because oil and water do not mix. It is a simple case of being trained for a highly specialized work as against not being trained for that work.

The fact that Army pilots have been killed and injured in their efforts to get the mails through; that thousands of dollars in aircraft have been wasted; that a hitherto unheard-of number of air-mail schedule cancelations have occurred since February 19—is not the fault of the pilot-officers. It goes back to the Army authority which, following the cancelations of all domestic air-mail contracts, assured President Roosevelt that the Army Air Corps could carry the mail. The Army officers failed utterly to recognize there is a vital difference between military and commercial flying.

So today we find the sad picture of a group of fine young fellows, unskilled at the task to which they have been assigned and with flying equipment not built for the assignment, attempting to carry on with the efficiency which has become the proud record, collectively, of the flyers of American air transport systems. The picture is sad, if for no other reason than that the Army pilots, most of them young and ambitious second lieutenants with courage to waste, have started out with the idea that they must rival the record of the others.

Never has it been shown more strikingly than right now that the best insurance any air-line operator could have lies in the experience of his pilots and their familiarity with the routes they fly. They get so they know every landmark. It is that experience which the flyers of our Army Air Corps lack today as they go about the job of flying over unknown territory through weather which the transport flyers of the country have been taught to cope with by months of patient exacting training. Yet it was not without sacrifice of human life that the air-line pilots learned their many lessons, and even now those same civilian pilots understand that to tempt weather is to tempt fate.

It is true that the civilian flyers would have equal difficulty in many of the air maneuvers in which the Army pilots are trained. The two are widely different sorts of airplane piloting. But today it is a case only of the Army men trying unsuccessfully to carry on according to the standard of their brother flyyers of the air lines.

That Army, Navy, and Marine Corps pilots will receive training similar to that afforded the transport flyers seems assured through the suggestion of President Roosevelt that service pilots be taken on as copilots by the air-mail lines of the future.

Indeed, why should not the aviators of our Army, Navy, and Marine Corps be trained in instrument (blind) flying, as well as the pilots of transport lines? Certainly, equipped with such knowledge and with service craft fitted with the necessary instruments, the Air Corps, whose pilots were capable of flying under extremely adverse weather conditions, would have a decided advantage over the Air Corps whose pilots were compelled to remain on the ground.

But today, because our Army Air Corps does not have the benefit of that special flight training and because the Air Corps, despite official announcements to the contrary, is not capable of flying the mails, precious lives have been lost in a brave but useless effort to do a job of which the United States Army Air Corps could not be capable for months to come.

[Editorial from the World Telegram, New York City, Thursday, Apr. 12, 1934]

It is a tradition that the chief political leader of a party shall become Postmaster General when that party goes into power. For example, Walter Brown, Republican; Jim Farley, Democrat.

Into the hands of those two men falls the task of handling such a highly technical problem as air mail.

Now, skill in one line doesn't by any means make a man skillful in another. The best surgeon in the world couldn't run the Twentieth Century Limited.

Backing away from the whole mess and getting a perspective, we believe the situation in which commercial aviation finds itself today is due to the fact that skilled politicians were put in charge of the operation and development of something in which they were not skilled.

The policies of the Republican, Walter Brown, were challenged and upset by the Democrat, Jim Farley. Apart from all the issues involved, the charges and countercharges, one conclusion is obvious: Neither was equipped by training or experience to make final decisions about so complicated a matter as aviation and air mail.

Looking, therefore, to the future of what is certain to be—when the whole tangle is straightened out—a great and growing industry, a sensible course seems clear.

Take this highly technical task out of its political environment and turn it over to men whose business it shall be to run it as the Interstate Commerce Commission runs the railroads.

That course is provided in several measures that have already been proposed. It should be included in any final measure by which the future of commercial aviation shall be guided.

[Editorial from New York Herald Tribune, Tuesday, Mar. 13, 1934]

THE SCANDAL OF FARLEY

The political blunders of Postmaster General Farley are primarily the concern of his political chief, President Roosevelt. Insofar as they affect the integrity and efficiency of government—National, State, and city—they touch the life, property, and happiness of everyone. They cannot be passed by as a matter of partisan concern.

The list is now a considerable one. It was Mr. Farley who last October, by promises of Federal office, sought to defeat fusion in New York City. The President officially detached himself from the endeavor by a statement announcing his indifference to local political disputes. Yet it was Federal patronage and nothing else—appointments by the President himself—which made possible the strength of the McKee candidacy. Thanks to the able campaign of Mr. LaGuardia, the Farley maneuver failed. But it was no thanks either to the Postmaster General or to the President that Tammany did not once again defeat reform and remain in charge of the metropolis, which Tammany corruption had bankrupted.

The appalling air-mail blunder ranks second on the list in point of time. Its end is not yet. A brave and loyal arm of national defense was asked to fly the mail with inferior equipment and inadequate training. Every expert in the country, from Colonel Lindbergh down, understood the risks involved. Mr. Farley could have known for the asking. Yet, because politics called for a sweeping gesture, a great American industry was wrecked, a vital service of business communication was halted, and 10 Army flyers were ordered to their death.

A relatively minor blunder in respect to conspicuous individuals, but extraordinarily vital in respect to business efficiency, is Mr. Farley's latest cut of the Postal Delivery Service. Here is a loyal, intelligent, and underpaid branch of public service. Politics has never controlled its rank and file. Its salaries, never large, have been cut along with the salaries of other public employees. Now it is Mr. Farley's ingenious idea to procure further small post-office economies by cutting the number of deliveries. Only one Saturday delivery is to be made in the future, and the personnel of the Department is to be cut accordingly.

Already the protests of business men are pouring in. Orders and deliveries are alike delayed. Confusion mounts. At a moment when all hands are straining every energy to revive American business, this vital organ of communication is cut to pieces by cheese-paring economies. The tragedy of the reduction in personnel is the inhuman consequence of this Farley policy. But what shall be said of this new handicap to recovery which the Roosevelt administration thus tosses into the wheels of industry? Only that it is wholly consonant with the general muddle of the new deal, which strikes down confidence as fast as it builds it up.

A third item in the Farley scandal is of even more vital import to New Yorkers. That is the slippery fashion in which the Roosevelt administration has failed to support fusion at Albany. There is no need of recounting the history of the weeks of evasion and pretense. The bald fact is that Mr. Farley, political aide-de-camp and spokesman for Franklin D. Roosevelt, has failed the city of New York in its most critical hour. With all the huge power of Federal patronage at his command, Mr. Farley has permitted the cheap politics of the Flynn stripe to prevail at Albany. An honest and courageous mayor of New York City finds himself in a crucial issue of economy opposed by the political right hand of President Roosevelt. An administration which stands ready to starve non-political post-office employees, to the grievous handicapping of all business, refuses to lift a finger to permit the reduction of pay rolls so padded by a corrupt organization as to threaten the credit of the greatest city in the Nation.

It is not a pleasant spectacle for any American to contemplate. This politician become Postmaster General would hamstring reform of the appallingly corrupt Tammany administration in New York City. He would wreck a great industry and a fine Air Mail Service and risk brave lives in order to score a political victory. He cares more for his cheap political associates than for the possibility of retrieving the city of New York from bankruptcy, waste, and graft.

Here is a grave national scandal. Before it the services of Mr. Farley as an aid to the nomination and election of President Roosevelt are irrelevant and immaterial. Whether the cause is a blundering incompetence or a blindness to the higher standards of public service is of small importance. Mr. Farley stands an obstacle to efficient and honest government, alike in Washington and in the State of New York. His holding of the three offices of Postmaster General, chairman of the Democratic National Committee and chairman of the Democratic State committee has long been a public scandal. His political craftsmanship remains a matter for his fellow Democrats to estimate. We can see no possible excuse for his retention in a public office serving the whole Nation.

[From "Shot in the Back" column on editorial page of the New York Herald Tribune of Mar. 13, 1934]

To the NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE:

How easily it could have been avoided.

If the administration had only allowed the air mail to carry on while quietly investigating ugly rumors, punishing the guilty and protecting the innocent.

Instead, what has happened? Cancelation of all air-mail contracts (with the exception of a favored one), placing a stigma upon the names of those who were honest and faithful, denying them a chance to prove themselves above reproach, while completely disrupting American aviation, which was fast outstripping its contemporaries in other countries.

Furthermore, 10 petals of the flower of our Army have been ruthlessly destroyed by answering, without a question, the call to duty.

Never has the United States Army failed to answer the call to duty.

Never has the United States Army shown the white feather.

Never, until the new deal administration, has the United States Army been virtually shot in the back, as a result of political expediency, only to be answered by the outrageous misconstruction of the time-honored slogan: "Pro bono publico." If this be treason, make the most of it.

GEORGE WILLARD BONTE.

NEW YORK, March 10, 1934.

[From "Shot in the Back" column on editorial page of the New York Herald Tribune of Tuesday, Mar. 13, 1934]

To the NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE:

How long is the patience of the American people going to tolerate the bungling tactics in Washington in the handling of our Air Mail Service? What has transpired in the last 3 weeks ought to cause those who are responsible to blush with shame. Stop and think it over, Americans. Ten brave young men of the finest Army Air Corps in the world sacrificed on that damnable altar of politics and to the lust for headlines to besmirch some one in order to make political capital. And when criticized for this chaotic state of affairs they charge those who care to criticize with playing politics while they play with the lives of men.

I maintain that the officers and men of our Army Air Corps are second to none in the world, either in bravery or skill. I have seen them in actual warfare, and know what they can do even under the most hazardous conditions. However, the training required for the Army air forces is so entirely different from that required for the Air Mail Service that it is unreasonable to expect the Army flyer to be prepared to have thrust upon him demands in flying in which he has not had the necessary training, such as night flying over long stretches and in all kinds of atmospheric conditions. Furthermore, ships of the Army air forces are not adapted for the Air Mail Service.

The courage of these young men can never be questioned. They would take off with their ship even though they knew it would be their last flight and would do it without a murmur. "Orders must be obeyed." Apparently, common sense is to be used only as the last resort. It is high time that we had some common sense injected into the air-mail muddle.

J. S. THOMPSON.

MEDINA, N.Y., March 10, 1934.

STATEMENT OF RICHARD W. ROBBINS, PRESIDENT TRANSCONTINENTAL & WESTERN AIR, INC.

Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., today filed in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York its appeal to the United States District Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, from the order of Judge KNOX denying jurisdiction of the suit brought by Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., against James A. Farley and John J. Kiely to enjoin interference from its air-mail route certificate.

Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., deferred filing the appeal in the hope that the air-mail situation would be cleared up and readjusted with due regard to the rights of all the parties. The McKellar-Black bill, however, demolishes any such expectation. It is a hastily devised and ill-conceived measure and fails miserably to deal with this immense problem in an intelligent manner. It is vindictive and punitive rather than constructive. It is a product of minds bent on wrecking an industry that had attained an enviable success and was performing a notable service for the American people. It is the climax of a most discreditable display of recklessness and irresponsibility which has marked the fierce and unwarranted assault on the aviation industry and which carried in its train not only the disruption of the air mail and commercial air transportation but the callous sacrifice of human life.

If a group of men had purposely set out to wreck an industry through drastic legislation they would find it most difficult to compete with the framers of the McKellar-Black air mail bill. One clause alone condemns the entire measure and brands it with the badge of injustice. This amazing provision declares that no company "shall be eligible to bid or hold an air-mail contract if it or its predecessor is asserting or has any claims against the United States because of a prior annulment of any contract by the Postmaster General."

Since when has it become a qualification of a bidder for a Government contract that he forego his right to enter a court of justice?

Since when has it become the policy of a civilized government to penalize its citizens because they dare to assert what they honestly believe to be their rights?

Since when has it become an element of dishonor to submit to a court the differences which emerge from commercial relations?

Apparently it is the policy of the Government of the United States to prevent contracts from being submitted to courts for interpretation, a policy which suspiciously suggests a lack of confidence in its ability successfully to defend its position.

Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., believes implicitly that it has been wrongfully deprived of its rights and property by the cancelation of its contract. It asserts and is ready to prove that the Postmaster General had neither the statutory authority nor the constitutional power nor any justification whatever to issue this order of annulment. We are ready to meet our accusers in a court of justice and to combat and to demonstrate the unmitigated falsehood of any charge of collusion, combination, or corruption in the procuring or performance of our contract to carry the mail. We stand ready to subject the minutest details of our relations with the Government to the most rigorous scrutiny of the most discerning court. We welcome a judicial investigation of an impartial tribunal.

Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., had hoped that a more sober consideration might bring about a policy to the support of which all elements might rally. We have now become convinced, however, that our only recourse lies in pursuing our suit to prevent by means of an injunction the Postmaster General from unlawfully interfering with our established rights. Having failed to receive fair treatment elsewhere we are now determined to vindicate our conduct in court. We shall pursue this course relentlessly until we have shattered every charge made against us.

KANSAS CITY, MO., March 13, 1934.

[Editorial from the Wilmington (N.C.) Star, Feb. 13, 1934]

THE CASE FOR E. A. T.

Insofar as North Carolina is concerned, the most immediate effect of the air-mail contracts cancelation may be as it reacts on the Eastern Air Transport, the only line serving the eastern end of the State, and affording lowlanders their nearest access to air travel when and if they are inclined to fly.

As we have observed, there has been no mention made of the slightest irregularity on the part of officials of this company in the gaining of contracts, nor have they been summoned, either singularly or severally before the Senate inquiry.

Presumably, the Government has looked into all contracts, but it does not necessarily follow that each individual company has been stigmatized. Most probably, the Government found evidences of irregularities in many cases and decided to wipe the slate clean and begin anew.

Even so, we are in agreement with the other newspapers, notably the Greensboro Daily News, in holding that the E.A.T. should at least be permitted to demand a bill of particulars and if its record is clear to be allowed to continue its air-mail service over the Washington-Florida route.

Particularly pertinent is this part of the News' reference:

"The attitude of E.A.T. officials, in the wake of Washington's cancelation, has been commendable and offers another point in this company's favor. It is magnanimous, aside from the pragmatic aspects of such a policy, to forward assurances of cooperation, the offer of its personnel and facilities to prevent disruption of service and aid Army fliers if and when they consummate the presidential orders. The matter comes back to clarification. Are all 12 of the companies whose contracts have been canceled guilty of obnoxious practices? Are there degrees of obnoxiousness? Have any clean hands? Answers to these questions are essential to retributive prescriptions."

Certainly, the straightening of the record to this extent would be entirely fair and equitable.

[Editorial from the Charlotte (N.C.) Observer, Feb. 13, 1934]

THE EASTERN AIR TRANSPORT

Movement has been started in Charlotte to secure exemption for the Eastern Air Transport, Inc., which serves this city, from the contract cancelation order for the good reason that this company is not involved in the scandal which moved the President to action. The fact that the Eastern Corporation is not included in the routes to be immediately taken over by the War Department leads to hope that some measure of relief, temporary, if not permanent, may be arranged for that company. At any rate, there is prospect that the Department may feel inclined to look into the matter and, if the skirts of this corporation should be cleared, it should receive the reward that comes from honest constructural record and efficient service.

GOVERNMENT BY HEADLINE

Secretary Dern's appointment of the Lindbergh-Wright-Chamberlin board to investigate the Army's handling of the air mail may be a clever political move. It appears to aline several of the highest names in aviation with the Government in an effort to salvage whatever there may be of value from a most tragic experience. However, if the move is to be effective, even politically, it must be much more than a gesture.

There has been altogether too much politics, too much trying to play on popular feelings, about this whole controversy. Possibly the President's dramatic action in canceling all the air-mail contracts was necessary to clear the ground and arouse support for the Government in dealing with powerful companies. Present indications are that better arrangements—fairer to the Government and more conducive to the development of aviation—will result.

Yet the move also had a political aura. It was just the kind of thing to evoke unthinking cheers: "Hurray! Here's a fellow in the White House who can tell those Wall Street schemers where to get off." The President may not have intended to profit by such a reaction. He may have had no part in the effort to use the accompanying Senate investigation as an opportunity to expose the sins of a Republican administration. But the action was so spectacular as to leave the impression that it was in part a political gesture.

If so, it proved a boomerang. For without approving the attempt of some Republicans to make political capital out of cries of "legalized murder", most Americans have decided that the President was a bit hasty. They are not likely to feel that the present move really clears up the situation. Everyone will be interested to learn what is the trouble with the Army flying—for even wars are not fought in good weather—and to see recommendations for better training and equipment. But there should be no attempt now to turn the blame on the Army.

There should be a settlement of the original question. The air-mail contracts were canceled on charges of collusion. The charges have never been proved, unless in headlines. No one has been tried, except by the Senate—and for contempt of that body. No new investigation—however useful it may prove in improving Army flying—will meet the Government's obligation to substantiate the charges on which the original action was based. Until that is done the taint of political gesturing will cling to a tragic experience.

Something of the same thing can be said of the remarkably timed and unexplained suits for income-tax evasion against Andrew Mellon, "Jimmy" Walker, and Thomas Lamont. Unless these actions are promptly and successfully prosecuted, they will be put down as just another gesture. And there will be a public reaction which the Government may not relish.

It is true that the American memory is notably short and that the American people are addicted to trial by newspaper. But, fundamentally they like fair play. And they do not like being fooled. The Government enjoys a great advantage—especially in times like the present—in obtaining good publicity. For that reason it needs to be the more careful not to abuse its opportunity. Unscrupulous or even partisan efforts to mold opinion, to establish government by headline, will sooner or later rebound unpleasantly.

[Editorial from the New York Herald Tribune, Wednesday, Feb. 14, 1934]

THE SHRINKING VIOLETS OF THE WHITE HOUSE

One headline among the many reporting the air-mail edicts will especially delight the whole Nation. That is the one which reads: "White House Rebukes Lindy for Seeking Publicity."

What, from any angle viewed, could be lovelier than that? For Colonel Lindbergh has not, like the politicians, made his fame as a publicity hound. Rather has he been conspicuous for his efforts to avoid the front page. He is more likely to be in the air than on the air. Mr. Early, of the White House secretariat, administered a truly side-shaking rebuke when he characterized the colonel's message as sent for publicity purposes.

For another aspect, who could possibly be better entitled to insist upon the dignities of reticence than a shrinking violet of the present administration staff? Do its members go upon the air? Never! What, never? Well, hardly ever. Or can one, by diligent searching, occasionally glean a human-interest tale, of this or that, respecting the White House residents, their sisters, their cousins, and their aunts? Well, yes.

But Mr. Early did slip badly in one respect. In ignoring Colonel Lindbergh's criticism and sternly rebuking him for his bad manners in making public a message after it had been dispatched to the White House but before it was made public there, he forgot one important precedent. That occurred on November 14, 1932. President Hoover had invited Governor Roosevelt to confer with him, it will be recalled. The Governor spent the day at Albany composing his telegram in reply. At nightfall he gave it to the press, having just put it on the wire to the President, who was at the moment in Kansas. When Mr. Hoover later received the message, he expressed no vexation at the publication of the telegram. He merely welcomed the substance of the reply.

But that was, of course, before the new deal changed everything, from manners to the Constitution.

COMMENT ON THE AIR-MAIL EDICT

To the NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE:

May I express to you my gratification upon reading in today's Herald Tribune your editorial, dignified but incisive, entitled the "Raw Deal"? It is worthy of standing among the great editorials of the Tribune, which I began to read in Lincoln's first campaign for the Presidency. If I remember correctly, in New England it was called in those days "Greeley's Bible."

Near the close of the last Presidential campaign, when Roosevelt was needing every possible ballot, four times he, on the radio, assured the country that he would not disturb the American dollar, yet within 2 months after he took the oath of office he was seeking control of it from Congress.

Today he is the greatest speculator in the money market of the world, unquestionably, and with other people's money. He is an astute politician, but not a statesman.

To the NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE:

May I take this opportunity to congratulate Col. Charles Lindbergh for his courageous, fair criticism of the arbitrary, unjust action of the administration; also your good selves for your editorial comment.

The recent frequent arrogant actions of the administration call for the gravest alarm on the part of voters opposed to socialism. Under the cloak of a new deal we are being forced without any mandate whatsoever into a socialistic bureaucracy. It is time the Senate and Congress rubbed some sand on their spine and protected us from a reckless administration guided by theoretic, impracticable professors. Why does every Democratic administration always try to reform the world?

To the NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE:

Our Army air lieutenants are not, and never should be, commercially air trained. Must this country suffer, lying down, the dictates of James Farley, or will the public fight for our glorious air mail, built up by the bold efforts of the air companies to a perfection that makes it the first and greatest in the world? Is this great record to be destroyed by Jim Farley?

COMMENT OF THE AIR-MAIL EDICT

To the NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE:

I know nothing about the merits of the fundamental issues involved in the discussion of the air-mail contracts. But I do know that there is no man who can successfully question the disinterested motives and service of Colonel Lindbergh toward the prestige of the United States in aviation.

I had the rare privilege of standing at the flying field of LeBourget, near Paris, the night that "Lindy" arrived on schedule, with tens of thousands of frantic people crashing through the fences of the field. I saw him brought by Ambassador Herrick to the American Embassy and proudly put to sleep in what Myron Herrick called "Uncle Sam's bed for his boy." I saw him the following morning walking down the stairs of the Embassy in Parmelee Herrick's clothes and modestly describe to the press correspondents of all the countries the details of his amazing achievement.

Hundreds of contracts to make money out of his flight were offered to Colonel Lindbergh at that time, and even I myself brought to Colonel Lindbergh the president of the then leading motion-picture company of the United States who offered him a contract for $1,000,000 for one motion picture, the money to be deposited in the bank forthwith, but Colonel Lindbergh, after serious consideration of all proposals, told Ambassador Herrick that he would sign no contract of any kind for any sum with anybody, because he had made his flight in the interest of aviation and not for profit.

After all the valiant service that this amazing young American along with his lovely wife has given to brave flights the world over, laying out with scientific precision air courses everywhere, it is little short of a tragedy that any statement should be made by anyone in high authority questioning Colonel Lindbergh's motives in his leadership for aviation.

COMMENT ON THE AIR-MAIL EDICT

To the NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE:

I want to congratulate you upon the sane but vigorous editorial which appeared in the Herald Tribune this morning. I am in no way interested in aviation stocks, never having bought a share of any of the companies in my life, but I heartily disapprove of the high-handed and unfair way in which the matter has been handled by the President and his advisers. I have, over the course of the last few years had occasion to use the Air Mail Service many times, and I have always marveled at its efficiency. I am afraid that a little experience under the proposed plan of handling air mail will show a considerable decrease in the efficiency of that department. But this is beside the point.

What I do heartily disagree with, as an American citizen and a taxpayer, is the present procedure of conviction before trial in the matter of the air-mail contracts. I think the administration's handling of the Lindbergh telegram was unnecessarily harsh. It would seem that temporarily, at least, some of the high officials in Washington are slightly drunk with power and abusing it.

I hope you will continue, when occasion arises, to show the courage and good common sense exemplified in the editorial in this morning's issue of your paper. As a constant reader of your paper, I thank you for it.

CITIZEN.
